

THE
NEW TESTAMENT
OF
OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST, WITH A
COMMENTARY,

CONSISTING OF SHORT LECTURES FOR THE DAILY USE OF FAMILIES.

BY THE
REV. CHARLES GIRDLESTONE, M.A.
VICAR OF

SEDGLEY, STAFFORDSHIRE.

J. G. & F. RIVINGTON, LONDON;
J. H. PARKER, OXFORD; H. C. LANGBRIDGE, BIRMINGHAM;
AND ALL OTHER BOOKSELLERS.

1836.

L O N D O N :
GILBERT AND RIVINGTON, PRINTERS
ST. JOHN'S SQUARE.

TO HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY
THE QUEEN
THIS EDITION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT OF OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR
JESUS CHRIST
WITH A COMMENTARY
IN WHICH IT HAS BEEN ENDEAVOURED
TO ENFORCE THE GENUINE DUTIES OF THE GOSPEL
BY THE FAITHFUL EXPOSITION OF ITS DOCTRINES
ON A PLAN ADAPTED TO THE DAILY USE OF FAMILIES IS BY HER MAJESTY'S GRACIOUS PERMISSION
MOST RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED AS TO ONE WHO ADORNS HER EXALTED STATION WITH CORRESPONDING EMINENCE
IN THE VIRTUES OF DOMESTIC LIFE
BY HER MAJESTY'S
MOST HUMBLE AND TRULY OBLIGED SERVANT
CHARLES GIRDLESTONE

P R E F A C E.

THIS work is designed to furnish a Commentary on the Scriptures of the New Testament, at once explanatory, practical, and devotional. The arrangement is especially adapted for that reading of the Bible in families which is growing daily into more common use. The style and matter have been made as near, as the author was able, to such plain and profitable exposition, as any competent master of a family might be conceived likely to draw up, or deliver, of his own. And as most families comprise parent and child, master and servant, regard has been paid to the capacities and wants of each class of hearers or readers. These conditions have necessarily excluded all length of argument, all extent of disquisition, all statement and refutation of objections, all painful discussion of controverted opinions. But within these limits there seems to remain ample room for setting forth the main drift of the inspired text, and for enforcing the more important doctrines, and duties, which it may be plainly shewn to contain. And for such use as is here chiefly intended, it may be thought, with some reason, that a commentary is the better, in proportion as it presents less show of learning, requires less labour of attention, and contains less matter of doubtful speculation. Whilst the commentator, exempt from the necessity of proving, and refuting, and disputing, may venture, in humble imitation of a Divine example, to teach “as one having authority.”

According to this design the work has been arranged in distinct consecutive lectures. To these are prefixed the words of Scripture, divided into paragraphs, and so printed in the same page with the lecture, that the reader may have under his eye both text and commentary at once. Whilst the length of the two taken together is proportioned to such leisure, and attention, as may commonly be expected in an assembled family. Thus each reading is a kind of short sermon, with a long text. To the text is prefixed a heading, specifying the contents of each section; and there is another to the lecture, which expresses the chief practical application, or sometimes, where there are several, the last. The lectures consist partly of explanation, and partly of practical improvement ; and there is added, occasionally, at the end, a short ejaculation, when the subject seems most properly to suggest the spirit of prayer. The explanation is in the form of paraphrase or remark, according as either might best serve to make clear the meaning of the passage. And the practical reflections, though sometimes kept separate for the end, are in general interwoven throughout the body of the commentary. For there is nothing which the author has so greatly had at heart, and no principle which he has designed so stedfastly to observe, in the progress of the work, as to derive, either directly or indirectly, from each single passage of the word of God, some useful lesson of a more heavenly mind, or of a more holy life.

On this principle it seems desirable, in passages which refer properly to occasions now no more, after noting their primary application, to accommodate the expressions, as profitably as we may, to any similar circumstances in which we are placed ourselves. And in this sense, and with this view, there has been adopted in this commentary what has been called often, though improperly, a figurative interpretation. But in no case has it been intended to represent as figurative any expression in the text, which does not obviously there purport so to be ; the very hardest sayings of divine revelation, if spoken without figure, being evidently as much entitled as the easiest to our devout and literal obedience. In passages, which, owing to the imperfection of language, appear to be ambiguous in the original, that sense, which has been adopted as the best, is commented on as if it were the only one. And the same method has been followed in those verses, of rare occurrence, which admit of a more accurate translation, than that which we find in our excellent version. The parallel passages, which form, when duly used, the best of commentaries, are largely quoted in the body of the lectures. Those of the Psalms are taken purposely from the version used in our prayer books, as being the one which would most readily suggest itself to the memory. No reference is made by figure to the verses of the text which are quoted in the exposition ; these being at the time under the reader's eye, or fresh on the hearer's ear. The words however of the Scripture are not unfrequently repeated, with a view to shew the connexion of the whole passage that is explained. And this method will be found also to be an excellent safeguard against a practice most fruitful of religious error, the explaining of detached texts in senses inconsistent with their context.

In point of doctrine, the author would wish explicitly to state, how far his work is adapted for the use of Christians, of what are commonly called all denominations. He has endeavoured to write, as he desires to live, in the sound faith of that church, in which he has been entrusted with the office of a minister. And he cannot therefore pretend to be indifferent, either to the great essentials of Christian truth, or to those trifling points of variance, most grievously dividing our Christian community, which in proportion as they are trifling, fix so much the more fearfully, on the one party or the other, the unquestionable sin of schism. At the same time he has carefully abstained from all such vain or virulent theological disputings as are justly considered to be the bane of our common Gospel. He conceives that the matters on which most Christians are agreed, are many more, and far more worthy of daily meditation, than those on which they are unhappily estranged from each other. And he trusts, that there will be found, in these pages, no more frequent reference to the distinctive tenets of his own church, than will commend itself for its faithfulness, if not for its truth, to "every man's conscience."

In that part of this undertaking which concerns the four Gospels, particular attention has been paid to the harmony of the sacred history. Not that any discussion has been introduced, on a subject of such deep and laborious research; but that no fact is treated of as having taken place in any other order, than that in which, after due comparison, it has been thought most likely to have happened. A similar correspondence has been attempted in the construction of the Lectures. Next to making them each appropriate to the text they comment on, it has been a main object to impart to them an agreement and connexion with each other. Those passages which occur once only, and in one Gospel, are explained at once so much the more at length. And where the facts or the discourses, the doctrines or the duties, are repeated, there is usually some variation in the circumstances, which affords also a variety in the exposition. Where the narratives are found to be identical, different parts of it are brought forward for exposition, on the different occasions; or on one, the general tenour of the passage is considered, on another it is explained in detail.

And yet no very anxious pains have professedly been taken, that under similar passages of Scripture no similar notions should recur in the comment. For first it must be remembered, that the work is prepared with a view to that family reading of the Scriptures, wherein only one, or at the most two Lectures, would be read in each single day. And there would thus often be an interval of weeks and months between the occurrence of the like reflections; which to a reader, perusing the whole continuously, might seem else to be too frequently repeated. And further, the repetition of the same matter in the Gospels, is a proof that there are some things in our religion, of which, for their difficulty or importance, we need more often in proportion to be put in remembrance. And it must needs be regretted, by the devout reader, that we have not more and more Gospels to inform us of the works and words of Jesus ; more, and more frequently repeated, admonitions of the truths we are most bound to believe and practise. And if the commentator, in like manner, should occasionally repeat the maxims of practical improvement, it is not because repetition is difficult to avoid, but because he is himself unwilling to avoid it. He has ample choice of variety, in the multitude of profitable thoughts, which the sacred writings are calculated to suggest. But in his concern for those whom he designs to edify, he is desirous to renew those words of exhortation, which according to times and circumstances seem best suited to awaken the slothful, to revive the careless, to strengthen the weak, or to confirm the strong.

That such may be, in any degree, the fruit of this undertaking, is the prayer with which the writer desires humbly to conclude this portion of his work : that God may of his mercy, bless all efforts made by man to set forth and enforce his holy word ; that they who teach may speak or write with reverence and love ; and that they who read, or hear, may receive into their hearts that good seed which springeth up unto everlasting life. Amen.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THIS EDITION.

THIS edition of a work which has been previously published in another shape, has been undertaken for the purpose of exonerating the late Churchwardens of the Parish of Sedgley; whose situation is as follows:

The late Churchwardens of the parish of Sedgley incurred a large expense, by order of several Vestry Meetings, in fencing and furnishing two new Churches. A Church Rate of two shillings and sixpence in the pound was granted in the year 1832, for the final payment of the whole charge. Doubts having been raised about the legality of the rate, and a Caveat lodged against it, the Churchwardens have been unable to collect more than about one half of the amount. And there being now no means of obtaining any legal rate for expenses long since incurred, they remain personally liable to the amount of about a Thousand Pounds. The Vicar of the Parish, having been Chairman of the several Vestry Meetings in which the expenses were ordered, being persuaded that they were no more than necessary for fencing and furnishing the two Churches, and finding no other means of saving the Wardens from a heavy loss, which he feels that he in some measure induced them to incur, has attempted to supply the deficiency, by devoting to that object the profits of this publication.

SUBSCRIBERS.

HER MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

C. Adams, Esq.
T. D. Acland, Esq.
E. Addenbroke, Esq.
J. Ainsworthy, Esq.
Rev. H. Aldham
Rev. T. Arden.
Mrs. P. Arkwright.
Rev. Dr. Arnold.
Mr. J. Ash.
Hon. W. Ashley.
Rev. T. D. Atkinson.

Lord Braybroke.
T. Badger, Esq.
I. Badger, Esq.
J. Badley, Esq.
Mr. I. Baker.
Mrs. Barclay.
Rev. T. Barnes.
C. H. Barry, Esq.
S. Bateman, Esq.
Rev. J. A. Baxter.
W. Bennett, Esq.
Mrs. Benson.
Archdeacon Berens (2 copies.)
B. Best Esq.
Rev. T. Best
Rev. J. Bevan.
J. Beynon, Esq.
J. L. Bickley, Esq.
B. Bickley, Esq.
C. Birch, Esq.
Mr. Birchall.
Mr. J. Bissell.
J. J. Blackburne, Jun. Esq.
Rev. W. Blennerhasset.
Rev. T. Boddington.
B. Boddington, Esq.
M. Bott, Esq.
Rev. H. Boucher (2 copies.)
W. Boucher, Esq.
J. Bourne, Esq.
Mr. J. Bradfield.
Mrs. Briscoe.
Miss Briscoe.
Rev. T. Brockman.

Miss Brooke.
H. Brown, Esq.
Mrs. Hawkins Browne.
A. Bull, Esq.
R. Burton, Esq. (2 copies.)
Mrs. Bussell.

Rt. Rev. the Bp. of Chester.
Honourable R. H. Clive, M.P.
Mrs. C.
The Dean of Carlisle.
Rev. W. H. Cartwright.
Mrs. E. Causer.
Rev. H. Causton.
Miss E. Champion (2 copies.)
Rev. J. M. Chapman.
Mrs. Chapman.
Mrs. S. Cholmeley.
Mr. S. Clinton.
Rev. J. D. Clarke.
Rev. S. W. Cornish.
Miss Chatfield.
Mr. T. Conibe, Jun.
Mr. B. Cope.
Mr. E. Corser.
Mr. H. Corser.
Mrs. Corser.
E. Creswell, Esq.
T. Croft, Esq. (3 copies.)
J. Culwick, Esq.

The Earl of Dartmouth.
Rt. Rev. Bishop Doane, of New Jersey,
U. S. (3 copies.)
T. Davies Esq.
Rev. E. Davies.
F. Downing, Esq.
T. Du Boulay, Esq.
Mrs. Du Buisson.
Miss A. M. Dudley.
Mrs. Durell.
F. Dwarria, Esq.
Mrs. Dwarria.
Mr. J. Eades.
Mr. J. Eades, Jun.

Mr. T. Eades.
Rev. J. Edwards.
W. Egerton, Esq.
Mrs. Egerton.
Rev. T. Egerton.
Rev. J. C. Egginton.
Mr. J. Ellis.
E. Elwell, Esq.
J. Elwell, Esq.
T. Fawell, Esq.
W. Fellowes, Esq.
Messrs. Fereday, (10 copies.)
Dudley Fereday, Esq.
Mr. E. Fereday.
Mr. T. Fereday, Jun.
G. Firmstone, Esq.
Miss S. M. Fitton.
Miss Fitzroy.
J. W. Fletcher, Esq.
Rev. W. Fletcher.
Mr. A. Fletcher, Jun.
W. Fowler, Esq.
Rev. P. Fraser.
Rev. T. Freeman.
Mrs. Freeman.
Miss C. Freeman.
Miss E. Freeman.
Rev. J. George.
Mr. W. Getly.
Mr. J. Gibbons.
R. Gilbert, Esq.
S. Girdlestone, Jun., Esq.
W. E. Gladstone, Esq. M.P.
Rev. W. Goddard.
J. Goodford, Esq.
R. Gough, Esq.
Mr. D. Grainger, Jun.
J. Grant, Esq.
Mr. Greenfield.
P. Greenall, Esq.
Rev. T. Green.
Rev. G. W. Green.
Rev. W. Gresley.
Mr. J. Griffin.

LIST OF SUBSCRIBERS.

Mr. E. Griffiths.
S. Griffiths, Esq.
Rev. H. Gwyther.

Lord Hatherton, (2 copies.)
Lady Hazelrigge.
Rev. A. B. Haden.
H. Haden, Esq.
Ven. Archdeacon Hamilton.
Rev. W. K. Hamilton.
Rev. R. Harris.
C. Hartford, Esq.
Miss Hartford.
Rev. J. N. Harward.
J. Hateley, Esq.
T. Hawkes, Esq., M.P.
R. Hemming, Esq.
W. Herrick, Esq.
Rev. C. Hesketh.
B. Hill, Esq.
Mr. D. Hill.
Mr. I. Hill, (2 copies.)
Miss Hinckes, (6 copies.)
Rev. E. Hodgson.
Ven. Archdn. Hodson, (2 copies.)
J. Hodson, Esq.
Rev. C. Holbech.
W. Holden, Esq.
F. Holypake, Esq.
Mrs. Homer.
Rev. A. Hopkins.
A. Hordern, Esq.
Mrs. Hordern.
H. Hordern, Esq.
Rev. J. Hornby, (2 copies.)
Mrs. J. Hornby.
Rev. T. Hartwell Horne.
J. Horton, Esq.
Rev. W. Hutchinson.
Rev. T. Hutchinson.
Mrs. Hurst.

Rt. Rev. Bishop Ives, of North Carolina.
Rev. W. Jelf.
Mr. Jellicoe.
Messrs. Jenks and Ellis.
Rev. C. Jesson.
H. Jesson, Esq.
Rev. Dr. Jeune.
Mr. J. Johnson.
G. Jones, Esq.
Mr. W. S. Jordan.

Mr. T. King.
Mr. J. King.
Mr. W. King.

The Right Rev. the Bishop of Llandaff,
(2 copies.)

The Hon. & Right Rev. the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, (5 copies.)

Lord Lyttelton.
Hon. & Rev. H. Legge.
Rev. the Chancellor of Llandaff.
Rev. C. Leigh

* Sir Joseph Locke.
Mrs. Latonche.
Miss Landor.
Mr. Langbridge, (3 copies.)
Rev. Oswald Leicester.
Mrs. Leicester.
Rev. W. Lewis.
Rev. G. Lingard.
Rev. J. Lingard.
Miss Lomax.
Miss Luard.
Mr. J. P. Lucas.

Sir J. Mordaunt, Bt.
Dr. Macbride.

Mrs. Macbride.
Donald Maclean, Esq.
Rev. J. R. Major.
Rev. W. Marsh.
Mr. W. Marsh.
Mr. J. Marsh.
Rev. R. M. Master.
W. Mathcws, Esq.
Rev. T. R. Medwin.
Mr. T. Meredith.
Colonel Miller.
Rev. C. Miller.
C. Molineux, Esq.
E. Monckton, Esq.
G. Monckton, Esq.
Miss Monckton.
Miss E. Monckton.
E. Moore, Esq.
Rev. H. Moore.
Mr. J. Moore.
Mrs. Moreton.
B. Morrell, Esq.
J. W. Morrell, Esq. (2 copies.)
Rev. R. P. Morrell.
Mrs. Morrell.
Miss Morrell.
Rev. R. Morris.
Mrs. Moseley.
J. Mott, Esq. (2 copies.)

P. Newdigate, Esq.
R. Nichol, Esq.
Mrs. Nutcombe.

Rev. J. B. Owen.

Mrs. Pack.
Mrs. Palmer.
W. Pargeter, Esq.
Mr. Parke.
Mr. Partridge.
Mr. J. H. Parker.
Rev. J. Peel.
T. Perry, Esq. (10 copies.)
L. H. Petit, Esq.
J. W. Philipps, Esq.
Mrs. Philipps.
Rev. J. Piercy.
J. Plummer, Esq.
R. S. Pountney, Esq.
Rev. T. Powell.
Mr. T. Powell.
Mr. J. Pratt.
Rev. C. Price.
W. Price, Esq.
H. L. Price, Esq.
Rev. R. Prichard.
Mr. G. Prior.
J. F. Proud, Esq.
Rev. C. M. Provand.
T. P. Pudsey, Esq.
D. Pugh, Esq. (2 copies.)
Rev. J. W. Pugh, (2 copies.)
Rev. W. Purdon.
W. B. Pusey, Esq.

The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Rochester.

E. Radford, Esq.
Mrs. Randolph.
Miss H. R.
Rev. P. Rashleigh.
Miss Rashleigh.
R. Reynolds, Esq.
Miss Reynolds.
Mrs. T. Ridgway.
Mr. Ritson.
Messrs. Rivington, (6 copies.)
W. Rivington, Esq.
J. Robinson, Esq.

Mrs. Robothan.
Mr. J. Robothan.
Mr. T. Robothan.
P. Rothwell, Esq.
Mrs. Rothwell.
Miss C. Rothwell.
J. Round, Esq. (3 copies.)
Rev. J. Round.
W. Round, Esq.
Rev. C. S. Royds.

The Duke of Sutherland, (2 copies.)

Lady Sykes, (2 copies.)
J. S. Salt, Esq. (2 copies.)
Rev. J. Salt.
T. Salt, Esq.
Mrs. Scott.
Miss Scott.
Mr. Shelton.
Rev. J. Shiel.
Rev. T. V. Short.
Mr. Paul Siddens, (3 copies.)
Mr. H. Siddens.
E. Simms, Esq.
Mr. J. Skidmore.
Mrs. Skidmore.
Mrs. Slade.
Mrs. Smart.
R. Smith, Esq.
Mr. S. Smith, Jun.
Rev. J. C. Stafford.
E. J. Stanley, Esq., M.P.
H. Sperling, Esq.
H. K. Symer, Esq.

A. C. Tait, Esq.
A. Tamlyn, Esq.
Mr. J. Tay, (10 copies.)
Mr. T. Tay, (2 copies.)
Rev. R. Taylor.
Rev. T. Taylor.
Messrs. Taylor, (2 copies.)
Rev. T. Theodosius.
G. B. Thorneycroft, Esq.
Mr. Tinsley.
Rev. G. Townsend.
Miss Tongue.
Rev. J. F. Turner.
J. W. Turton, Esq.
Rev. C. Twissleton, (2 copies.)

J. Underhill, Esq.

Lord and Lady Ward and Family, (7 copies.)

Lady Williams.
Sir J. Wrottesley, Bt. M.P. (2 copies.)
W. C. Walters, Esq.
Ven. Archdn. Watson, (2 copies.)
Rev. W. Webb.
Mr. T. Webb.
Mrs. Wells.
Rev. G. Wells.
Rev. C. Wharton.
Mr. White.
Mrs. White.
H. B. Whitehouse, Esq.
W. W. Whitmore, Esq., M.P.
T. H. Whittaker, Esq.
Mrs. Wilkes.
T. W. Williams, Esq.
Mrs. Williams.
Mr. J. Williams.
J. B. Wilson, Esq. (5 copies.)
Rev. G. W. Woodhouse.
M. Woodhouse, Esq.
Miss Wright.
Mr. Wrightson, (2 copies.)
Rev. C. Wrottesley.
Rev. R. Wrottesley.

CONTENTS.

S. MATTHEW ch. 1—12.

The title.

1. 1. The genealogy of Christ.
1. 18. The conception and birth of Christ.
2. 1. The wise men out of the east worship Christ.
2. 13. The flight into Egypt, the murder of the innocents.
3. 1. The preaching of John in the wilderness.
3. 13. John baptizeth Christ in Jordan.
4. 1. Christ is tempted of the Devil in the wilderness.
4. 12. Christ beginneth to preach, and to heal the sick.
5. 1. Christ beginneth his sermon on the Mount.
5. 13. Who are the salt of the earth.
5. 17. Christ fulfilleth the law of the sixth commandment.
5. 27. Christ further fulfilleth the seventh commandment.
5. 38. Christ endeth the interpretation of the law.
6. 1. Christ continueth his sermon on the Mount.
6. 7. Christ teacheth to pray.
6. 16. Of fasting; and where our treasure is to be laid up.
6. 24. Christ exhorteth not to be careful for worldly things.
7. 1. Christ forbiddeth to judge.
7. 7. Christ exhorteth to prayer.
7. 13. Christ exhorteth to enter in at the strait gate.
7. 24. Christ teacheth us not to be hearers only but doers of the word.
8. 1. Christ cleanseth the leper.
8. 5. Christ healeth the centurion's servant.
8. 14. Christ healeth Peter's wife's mother; and many others.
8. 18. Christ stilleth the tempest.
8. 28. Christ driveth out the devils. They go into the swine.
9. 1. Christ healeth one sick of the palsy.
9. 9. Christ calleth Matthew; justifieth his disciples in not fasting.
9. 18. Christ cureth the issue of blood; raiseth the ruler's daughter.
9. 27. Christ healeth two blind men, and one that was dumb.
9. 35. Christ hath compassion on the multitude.
10. 1. Christ sendeth out his twelve apostles.
10. 16. Christ comforteth his apostles under expected persecution.
10. 26. Christ continueth his instructions to the apostles.
10. 34. Conclusion of the instructions given to the apostles.
11. 1. John sendeth his disciples to Christ.
11. 7. Testimony of Christ concerning John.
11. 16. The waywardness of the Jews; and the sentence of Chorazin.
11. 25. Christ calleth to him all who labour and are heavy laden.
12. 1. That the Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath.

LECTURE 1—41.

1. How we should receive the gospel.
2. Christ made to be sin for us.
3. That we must be born again to newness of life.
4. That our worship must be spiritual.
5. Spiritual deliverance from fear and bondage.
6. Repentance is the due preparation for receiving the gospel.
7. The new birth of Christians by baptism.
8. The use of temptation, and the means of subduing it.
9. The nature of our Christian calling.
10. The beatitudes, or descriptions of persons blessed.
11. The effect of Christian example.
12. The gospel fulfils the law and the prophets.
13. How we must restrain the eye and the tongue.
14. That we must overcome evil with good.
15. Of almsgiving and prayer; and of God's seeing in secret.
16. The Lord's Prayer explained.
17. The duty and manner of fasting; the cure of covetousness.
18. That we should seek first the kingdom of God.
19. How we may not judge.
20. The nature and efficacy of prayer.
21. The vanity of profession without practice.
22. The Christian life must be built on the foundation of Christ.
23. Sin the leprosy of the soul.
24. The proof of the centurion's faith.
25. The evil spirit of sin must be cast out by Christ.
26. The cost of following Christ.
27. How all evil spirits are under the control of Christ.
28. Sin the palsy of the soul; how it is to be healed.
29. Forgiveness of sins on repentance and amendment of life.
30. That the Christian is not dead, but sleepeth.
31. Through faith our eyes are opened and our tongues loosed.
32. That we must bring in others to the knowledge of Christ.
33. The commission of the apostles instructive to ourselves.
34. Motives to patience in affliction, and to perseverance in well doing.
35. Further arguments against the fear of man.
36. How much we ought to suffer and do for Christ's reward.
37. The evidence of prophecy and of miracle.
38. How the kingdom of heaven is taken by violence.
39. The peril of knowing God's will without doing it.
40. That the yoke of Christ is rest to the weary soul.
41. The rule of the Christian Sabbath.

S. MATTHEW ch. 12—23.

12. 10. The withered hand healed on the sabbath day.
12. 22. Christ healeth one who was both blind and dumb.
12. 31. Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven.
12. 38. Christ rebuketh them who ask for a sign.
12. 46. The mother and brethren of Christ desire to speak with Him.
13. 1. The parable of the sower and the seed.
13. 10. Christ answereth why He used to speak in parables.
13. 18. Christ explains the parable of the sower.
13. 24. The parables of the tares, grain of mustard seed, and leaven.
13. 36. Christ explains the parable of the tares.
13. 44. The parables of the treasure, the pearl, and the net.
13. 55. Christ is condemned of his countrymen.
14. 1. John the Baptist beheaded by command of Herod.
14. 13. Christ feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes.
14. 22. Christ walketh on the sea to his disciples.
15. 1. The Pharisees reproved for their traditions.
15. 10. Christ teacheth what doth defile a man.
15. 21. Christ healeth the daughter of a woman of Canaan.
15. 29. Christ feedeth four thousand with seven loaves and a few fishes.
16. 1. The Pharisees ask of Christ a sign from heaven.
16. 13. The people's opinion and Peter's confession of Christ.
16. 21. Christ foresheweth his death.
17. 1. The transfiguration of Christ.
17. 10. Christ speaketh of John Baptist as Elias; healeth the lunatic.
17. 22. Christ payeth tribute by a miracle.
18. 1. Christ teacheth to be humble, and to avoid offences.
18. 10. Christ teacheth how to treat the meek, and those who trespass.
18. 21. The parable of the king who took account of his servants.
19. 1. Christ answereth on divorcement and on marriage.
19. 13. Christ receiveth little children, and teacheth the young man.
19. 23. Christ teacheth the perils of wealth.
20. 1. The parable of the labourers hired into the vineyard.
20. 17. Christ answereth the mother of Zebedee's children.
20. 29. Christ giveth two blind men their sight.
21. 1. Christ rideth into Jerusalem upon an ass.
21. 12. Christ visiteth the temple; and maketh the fig tree wither.
21. 23. Christ reproveth the Jews by the similitude of the two sons.
21. 33. The husbandmen, who slew such as were sent unto them.
22. 1. The marriage of the king's son.
22. 15. Christ teacheth both to pay Cæsar and to pay God.
22. 23. Christ confuteth the Sadducees arguing on the resurrection.
22. 34. Christ answereth the Pharisees, asketh them about the Messias.
23. 1. Christ admonisheth to follow the teaching of the scribes.

LECTURE 42—84.

42. The uses and limit of publicity in doing good.
43. That Christ doth not cast out devils by Beelzebub.
44. How we shall be justified or condemned by our words.
45. How we may be the worse for privileges, if we abuse them.
46. To be the brethren of Christ is the most true nobility.
47. The time and place and manner of hearing.
48. The blessing of knowing and believing in Christ.
49. The bounty of the heavenly sower.
50. The growth and wide influence of a holy life.
51. That God permits evil in order to greater good.
52. How much we must both sacrifice and do for Christ's sake.
53. The danger of familiarity with things sacred.
54. That the progress of sin is rapid.
55. How God filleth the hungry with good things.
56. That our safety through God's mercy depends upon our faith.
57. That no one duty may be pleaded for the neglect of any other.
58. That we should be clean before God in our hearts.
59. That we should pray with faith through Christ.
60. We should persevere in doing good.
61. That we need not more signs, but more inclination to believe.
62. By what rule we shall be bound or loosed hereafter.
63. The value of the soul.
64. That the glory of heaven is not far from every one of us.
65. That faith is most effectual to success in the Christian life.
66. The rule of Christian payment.
67. The pattern of Christian humility.
68. Church discipline and church unity.
69. That we should forgive as we have been forgiven.
70. How we must deny ourselves in all things for Christ's sake.
71. How we may fulfil the law of God.
72. Reasons for contentment and self denial.
73. How the last shall be first, and the first last.
74. The doctrine of the atonement.
75. That through faith we see, and through Christ have faith.
76. How we may best shew forth our own praise of Christ.
77. That we should pray in faith, nothing doubting.
78. How we may duly estimate our obedience or our sins.
79. How we should render unto God the fruits of holiness.
80. How this parable applies to them that are Christians.
81. That our duty to the government is a part of our duty to God.
82. Life and immortality brought to light through the gospel.
83. That no one commandment can do away with the rest.
84. The rule of Christian precedency.

S. MATTHEW ch. 23—28.

- 23. 13. Christ denounceth woe against hypocrites.
- 23. 23. Christ further denounceth woe.
- 23. 34. Christ prophesieth the desolation of Jerusalem.
- 24. 1. Christ prophesieth the destruction of the temple.
- 24. 15. Christ warneth his disciples when to flee from Jerusalem.
- 24. 29. Christ prophesieth of his coming to judge the world.
- 24. 42. The good man of the house and the servants.
- 25. 1 The parable of the ten virgins.
- 25. 14 The first part of the parable of the talents.
- 25. 24 The parable of the talents concluded.
- 25. 31 Christ declareth who shall be blessed of the Father.
- 25. 41. Christ declareth who shall be hereafter cursed.
- 26. 1. The rulers conspire against Christ. A woman anointeth Him.
- 26. 14. Christ eateth the passover with his disciples.
- 26. 26. Christ warneth Peter.
- 26. 36. Christ prayeth in agony at Gethsemane.
- 26. 47. Christ is betrayed by Judas the Jews.
- 26. 57. Christ is led away by Caiaphas, Peter following.
- 26. 69. Christ is thrice denied of Peter.
- 27. 1 Christ is delivered bound to Pilate. Judas hangeth himself.
- 27. 11 Christ standeth before the governor. Pilate washeth his hands.
- 27. 26 Christ is delivered to be crucified.
- 27. 35 Christ is crucified.
- 27. 45 Christ yieldeth up the ghost.
- 27. 55 Christ is buried : and the sepulchre sealed.
- 28. 1 Christ is risen, and appeareth to the women.
- 28. 11 Christ appeareth to the disciples, and sendeth them to baptize.

S. MARK ch. 1—5.

The title.

- 1. 1. John the Baptist, his office. He baptizeth Christ.
- 1. 14. Christ beginneth to preach, and to call his apostles.
- 1. 7. Christ healeth Simon's wife's mother ; prayeth in private.
- 1. 36. Christ preacheth in Galilee, cleanseth a leper.
- 2. 1. Christ healeth one sick of the palsy.
- 2. 18. Christ calleth Levi, eateth with publicans and sinners.
- 2. 23. Christ teacheth that the sabbath was made for man.
- 3. 1. Christ healeth the withered hand.
- 3. 13. Christ ordaineth his twelve apostles.
- 3. 22. Christ speaketh of blasphemy ; declareth who are his relatives.
- 4. 1. Christ speaketh the parable of the sower.
- 4. 10. Christ expoundeth the parable of the sower.
- 4. 21. The parables of the candle, the seed, and the mustard tree.
- 4. 35. Christ stilleth the raging of the sea.
- 5. 1. Christ casteth out the legion of devils.
- 5. 10. The evil spirits enter into the swine.
- 5. 21. Christ healeth the woman of the bloody issue.

LECTURE 85—111.

- 85. How Christians are in danger of the like hypocrisy.
- 86. That these woes belong to the like sins in Christians.
- 87. That we must receive with joy the tidings of salvation.
- 88. What encouragement we have to endure unto the end.
- 89. That we should flee from sin, to escape the wrath to come.
- 90. That the last judgment is sure, and will be soon and sudden.
- 91. That we should be ever on the watch for death and judgment.
- 92. How we may have oil in our lamps.
- 93. That our improvement must bear proportion to grace received.
- 94. That to be slothful is to be wicked.
- 95. That we should do all things as doing them unto Christ.
- 96. That we should love each other for Christ's sake and not for our own.
- 97. That we cannot spend too much in the honouring of Christ.
- 98. That in the worst of sins we should distrust ourselves.
- 99. That pride goeth before a fall.
- 100. How to behave and how to pray when in affliction.
- 101. That in our afflictions the Scriptures are fulfilled.
- 102. That we should follow close to Jesus at all risks.
- 103. That we should never be ashamed of Christ and his Gospel.
- 104. The parts of true repentance, ; its difficulty and necessity.
- 105. How the prayer of the swearer is fulfilled.
- 106. That it is good for us to be afflicted.
- 107. Faith in Christ crucified.
- 108. That we should hold the truth not in fear but in love.
- 109. That our bodies must see corruption.
- 110. How we may have joy in the presence of our Lord.
- 111. The essentials of Christian faith, and of Christian practice.

LECTURE 112—129.

- 112. Use of having four Gospels.
- 113. That God is for Christ's sake well pleased in his sons.
- 114. That we may not set up our own will against God's.
- 115. The duty and manner of private prayer.
- 116. How we ought to publish God's goodness to ourselves.
- 117. That we should desire rather spiritual than earthly blessings.
- 118. The limit of Christian festivity.
- 119. How we may best profit by the Christian sabbath.
- 120. How we are to disarm the enmity of the world.
- 121. How we ought to attend the ministry of the word.
- 122. That we should draw near to Christ by zeal in his service.
- 123. A Christian view of our natural advantages.
- 124. The responsibility of our Christian privileges.
- 125. The gentle growth and sovereign power of divine grace.
- 126. That the terrors of the Lord are revealed for our good.
- 127. That we live in a world of spirits.
- 128. How we should endeavour to promote the faith of others.
- 129. It is through Christ that faith maketh whole.

CONTENTS.

S. MARK ch. 5—15.

5. 35. Christ raiseth from the dead the daughter of Jairus.
6. 1. Christ is contemned of his countrymen.
6. 14. Herod puts John the Baptist to death.
6. 30. Christ feedeth five thousand with five loaves and two fishes.
6. 45. Christ walketh on the sea of Galilee.
7. 1. Christ reproveth the Pharisees for finding fault with the disciples.
7. 14. Christ teacheth what things defile the man.
7. 24. Christ complieth with the prayer of a Syrophenician woman.
7. 31. Christ healeth one that was deaf and dumb.
8. 1. Christ feedeth four thousand with seven loaves and a few fishes.
8. 10. Christ refuseth a sign to the Pharisees, denouncing their leaven.
8. 22. Christ giveth a blind man his sight.
8. 27. Christ acknowledgeth his title; exhorteth to self denial.
9. 1. Christ is transfigured on a high mountain.
9. 14. Christ casteth out a dumb spirit.
9. 30. Christ foresheweth his death; teacheth meekness and humility.
9. 38. Christ speaketh of offences and of hell fire.
10. 1. Christ answereth the Pharisees on divorcement.
10. 17. Christ answereth one inquiring of the way of life.
10. 28. Christ on the way to Jerusalem.
10. 35. Christ answereth James and John.
10. 46. Christ giveth sight to blind Bartimæus.
11. 1. Christ rideth in triumph into Jerusalem.
11. 12. Christ maketh the fig tree wither, cleanseth the temple.
11. 27. Christ asketh of the scribes one question.
12. 1. The parable of the vineyard and the husbandmen.
12. 13. Christ answereth on the lawfulness of tribute.
12. 18. Christ convinceth the Sadducees.
12. 28. Christ answereth one of the scribes.
12. 35. Christ refuteth the scribes, and commendeth the widow's mite.
13. 1. Christ prophesieth the destruction of the temple.
13. 14. Christ admonisheth the disciples how to act in their troubles.
13. 24. Christ telleth of his second coming, commandeth to watch.
14. 1. Christ is anointed by a woman, is betrayed by Judas.
14. 12. Christ eateth the passover, and ordaineth his supper.
14. 26. Christ prayeth in Gethsemane.
14. 43. Christ is taken; is forsaken by the disciples.
14. 53. Christ is condemned by the council of the Jews.
14. 66. Christ is thrice denied of Peter.
15. 1. Christ is brought bound, and accused unto Pilate.
15. 15. Christ is mocked, and also crucified with two thieves.
15. 29. Christ on the cross giveth up the ghost.
15. 39. Christ is buried by Joseph of Arimathea.

LECTURE 130—172.

130. How we may be raised from the death of sin.
131. The excuses and the strangeness of unbelief.
132. The vanity of this world's judgment.
133. That we never lose by hearing and obeying the Gospel.
134. That we must cherish a lively sense of our Saviour's presence.
135. That we must beware of sin without condemning the sinner.
136. That out of the heart are the issues of life.
137. How we should love, and how pray for each other.
138. How we may, through Christ, both hear and speak.
139. That we should love each other as God hath loved us.
140. How we ought to pray, and how to understand.
141. That things spiritual must be spiritually discerned.
142. The Gospel alternative of life or death eternal.
143. That we should live as in the presence of Christ.
144. That we must add to our faith prayer and self denial.
145. How we should avoid falling out by the way.
146. That we must serve God through grace or perish everlastingly.
147. That we may not sever what God has joined together.
148. How hardly the rich enter into the kingdom of heaven.
149. That there is no safety in ignorance of danger.
150. The rule of Christian precedency.
151. How we should draw near to Christ.
152. The humility, the foreknowledge, and the prudence of our Lord.
153. That we should pray with faith and with forgiveness.
154. How we should inquire after the truth.
155. That we should render unto God the fruit of righteousness.
156. How we must pay what is due both to Cæsar and to God.
157. How much we may here know of heaven.
158. The love of God and of our neighbour.
159. The conduct valued by the inward disposition.
160. Christian encouragement in times of trouble.
161. Further directions in circumstances of difficulty.
162. That we must watch for our Lord's coming.
163. That we must do, in Christ's service, what we can.
164. How God suffereth evil, and how we should enjoy his gifts of good.
165. That in our weakness we should be humble and watchful.
166. How we may follow Christ unto the end.
167. How we are in danger of dishonouring our Lord.
168. How the sin of Peter was suggested, persisted in, and repented of.
169. The risk of being numbered among the enemies of Christ.
170. That thieves and other like sinners may die with Christ.
171. How we may best have light in the darkness of the grave.
172. That from Christian love springs Christian courage.

S. MARK ch. 16.

16. 1. An angel declareth the resurrection of Christ.
16. 9. Christ appeareth to Mary Magdalene, and to the eleven.
16. 19. Christ is received up into heaven.

S. LUKE ch. 1—10.

1. 1. The preface of St. Luke to his whole Gospel.
1. 5. The appearance of an angel to Zacharias.
1. 18. Elizabeth conceiveth. Mary is visited by an angel.
1. 30. Christ is conceived of the Holy Ghost.
1. 46. The hymn of Mary. The circumcision of John.
1. 65. The hymn of Zacharias.
2. 1. Christ is born at Bethlehem.
2. 15. Christ is circumcised.
2. 25. Simeon and Anna prophesy of Christ.
2. 39. Christ dwelleth with Joseph and Mary.
3. 1. The preaching and baptism of John.
3. 10. John testifieth of Christ.
3. 23. The genealogy of Jesus Christ.
4. 1. Christ is tempted in the wilderness.
4. 14. Christ beginneth to preach in Galilee.
4. 22. Christ is thrust out of Nazareth.
4. 33. Christ casting out the devils suffereth them not to speak.
5. 1. Christ ordereth a miraculous draught of fishes.
5. 12. Christ healeth the leper, and one sick of the palsy.
5. 27. Christ calleth Levi, eateth with publicans.
6. 1. Christ justifieth his disciples, and healeth on the Sabbath.
6. 12. Christ chooseth his twelve apostles.
6. 20. Christ preacheth blessings and woes.
6. 27. Christ preacheth on giving, loving, and doing good.
6. 39. Christ finisheth his discourse with the parable of house building.
7. 1. Christ healeth the Centurion's servant.
7. 11. Christ raiseth the widow's son, answereth John's messengers.
7. 24. Christ speaketh to the people concerning John the Baptist.
7. 36. Christ justifieth a woman which had been a sinner.
8. 1. Christ teacheth the parable of the sower.
8. 16. Christ teacheth by parables; rebuketh the wind.
8. 26. Christ casteth out Legion.
8. 41. Christ healeth one woman, raiseth another from the dead.
9. 1. Christ sendeth out his twelve disciples.
9. 10. Christ feedeth five thousand men.
9. 18. Christ preacheth the cross, his own, and ours.
9. 28. Christ is transfigured. The apostles sleep.
9. 37. Christ healeth one that was frantic; sheweth his sufferings.
9. 49. Christ journeyeth towards Jerusalem.
10. 1. Christ sendeth out the seventy disciples.
10. 17. Christ rejoiceth, and teacheth to rejoice.
10. 25. The Samaritan neighbour.

LECTURE 173—175.

173. How we must attempt with faith, in order to success.
174. How we must help to make others believe.
175. That we should now in heart and mind ascend to heaven.

LECTURE 176—217.

176. How we should use with thankfulness the written word.
177. That it is possible to be blameless before God.
178. The example of the Virgin Mary.
179. Christ, a spotless sacrifice for sin.
180. Encouragement to sincere obedience.
181. God's mercy magnified in our necessities.
182. Motives to lowliness of heart.
183. How we should submit to what we cannot comprehend.
184. Devotion to things heavenly.
185. The importance of piety in youth.
186. That we must fear not only punishment but sin.
187. The obligations of Christian baptism.
188. That time is short in respect of eternity.
189. The perseverance and falsehood of our spiritual enemy.
190. The acceptable year of the Lord.
191. The extent and peril of our privileges.
192. The vanity of profession without practice.
193. That we must work in faith, and be humble in success.
194. That we should be filled with amazement at God's mercy.
195. How far Christians are allowed to feast.
196. The time and manner of keeping the Christian Sabbath.
197. The Christian ministry an ordinance of Christ.
198. The perils and advantages of poverty and wealth.
199. How we should be kind on Christian principle.
200. How we must build on the foundation of Jesus Christ.
201. That unworthiness is no reason for not applying to our Lord.
202. The duty and the risk of inquiry into divine things.
203. That we must not, for our own credit, argue perversely.
204. Forgiveness of sins should move us through love to obey.
205. That it is our own fault if we are not converted by the Gospel.
206. The spiritual consideration of natural objects.
207. The evil influence of Satan.
208. That lively faith is helpful to right knowledge.
209. The perplexity of the sinful hearer.
210. That we may do more good than we think for.
211. How we must not be ashamed of the cross of Christ.
212. How glorious are our hopes; and how feebly we entertain them.
213. The necessity of watchfulness against spiritual pride.
214. The nature of our journey heavenward.
215. The privilege of enjoying a Christian ministry.
216. The subjects of Christian rejoicing.
217. Who is our neighbour?

S. LUKE ch. 10—24.

10. 38. Christ teacheth Mary and Martha.
11. 1. Christ teacheth to pray.
11. 14. Christ casteth out a devil that was dumb.
11. 27. Christ denounceth an evil generation.
11. 37. Christ reproveth the Pharisees.
11. 45. Christ reproveth the lawyers.
11. 1. Christ teacheth to avoid hypocrisy.
12. 13. The foolish rich man.
12. 22. Christ teacheth how to view worldly wealth.
12. 32. Christ teacheth to watch and be ready.
12. 41. Christ teacheth to be always ready.
12. 49. Christ preacheth to the disciples and to the people.
13. 1. Christ preacheth repentance. The barren fig tree.
13. 10. Christ healeth on the sabbath; speaketh in parables.
13. 23. Christ exhorteth to strive; reproveth Herod.
14. 1. Christ healeth the dropsy; preacheth humility.
14. 12. Christ teacheth to feast the poor. The parable of the supper.
14. 25. Christ preacheth perseverance. The parable of the salt.
15. 1. The parables of the lost sheep, and the piece of silver.
15. 11. The parable of the two sons.
15. 22. The parable of the two sons concluded.
16. 1. The unjust steward.
16. 10. Christ reproveth the covetous Pharisees.
16. 19. The rich man and Lazarus.
17. 1. The master and servant.
17. 11. Christ healeth ten lepers.
17. 20. Christ teacheth of the kingdom of God.
18. 1. The unjust judge.
18. 9. The Pharisee and the Publican.
18. 18. Christ answereth the ruler touching the way of life.
18. 31. Christ foresheweth his death; healeth a blind man.
19. 1. Christ converteth Zaccheus.
19. 11. The parable of the nobleman and the pounds.
19. 28. Christ rideth into Jerusalem in triumph.
19. 41. Christ cometh to Jerusalem.
20. 1. Christ maintaineth his authority.
20. 9. The parable of the vineyard.
20. 20. Christ answereth the spies.
20. 27. Christ refuteth the Sadducees.
20. 39. Christ denounceth the scribes.
21. 1. Christ commendeth a poor widow.
21. 9. Christ foretelleth the visitation of Jerusalem.
21. 25. Christ foretelleth the last day.
22. 1. Christ is sold to the Jews.
22. 14. Christ ordaineth his holy Supper.
22. 24. Christ exhorteth to humility.
22. 35. Christ prayeth at the mount of Olives; is betrayed by Judas.
22. 49. Christ is denied by Peter.
22. 63. Christ is blasphemed; owneth to being the Son of God.
23. 1. Christ is accused before Pilate; is sent to Herod.
23. 13. Christ is delivered to the will of the Jews.
23. 27. Christ is crucified.
23. 35. Christ between two thieves on the cross; giveth up the ghost.
23. 48. Christ is buried.
24. 1. Christ's resurrection is declared by two angels.
24. 13. Christ appeareth to the disciples in the way to Emmaus.

LECTURE 218—273.

218. The one thing needful.
219. Encouragement in praying.
220. That we cannot become good on bad motives.
221. That we enjoy sufficient signs.
222. That we must obey in the heart.
223. That we must not condemn our neighbours.
224. The connection of fear and falsehood.
225. How to be rich toward God.
226. Why we must not take thought for this life.
227. Further arguments against a worldly mind.
228. The danger and sin of delay.
229. How by right judgment we might avoid divisions.
230. That the impenitent sinner will be utterly destroyed.
231. That the influence of the Gospel should be progressive.
232. That to die is the being perfected.
233. That we should esteem others better than ourselves.
234. The peril of abusing things lawful.
235. How a Christian must hate, and what.
236. That God willeth not the death of a sinner.
237. The progress of conversion.
238. How we should rejoice in the conversion of a sinner.
239. The right use of worldly goods.
240. That the judgment of God differs from man's.
241. The perils of wealth.
242. That we are unprofitable servants.
243. How few are thankful.
244. How to behave when the Son of man is revealed.
245. That men ought always to pray.
246. Humility in things spiritual.
247. How much for Christ we must do, and how much through Him we may.
248. The progress of spiritual sight.
249. Almsgiving and restitution.
250. That God's ways are not our ways.
251. How we must fulfil the will of Christ.
252. Justice and mercy.
253. The misery of unbelief.
254. That we must beware of rejecting Christ.
255. The end of worldly cunning.
256. Concerning heavenly happiness.
257. That we must beware of hypocrites.
258. That our actions are estimated by our means and motives.
259. That we must not give way to fear.
260. The certainty of the judgment.
261. The duty of being prepared.
262. How kindly we are invited to the Lord's Supper.
263. Consolation to the fallen.
264. Watchfulness and prayer.
265. How we should be good to the evil.
266. That we should follow readily our own convictions.
267. What companions we ought to prefer.
268. How we should bear the cross of Christ.
269. The fruit of forgiveness.
270. The way to die a Christian death.
271. Against selfishness.
272. That we must rise again in holiness of life.
273. The necessity of divine teaching.

LUKE ch. 24.

- 24. 28. Christ is known by the disciples, in breaking of bread.
- 24. 36. Christ appeareth to the eleven at Jerusalem.
- 24. 50. Christ is carried up into heaven.

S. JOHN ch. 1—12.

The title.

- 1. 1. That the Word was God.
- 1. 6. The offices of John the Baptist and of Christ.
- 1. 15. The testimony of John.
- 1. 29. Further testimony of John concerning Christ.
- 1. 43. Christ commendeth Nathanael.
- 2. 1. Christ turneth water into wine.
- 2. 13. Christ cleanseeth the temple, foresheweth his resurrection.
- 3. 1. Christ teacheth Nicodemus.
- 3. 10. Christ telleth Nicodemus of heavenly things.
- 3. 22. Further testimony of John to Christ.
- 4. 1. Christ teacheth a woman of Samaria.
- 4. 15. Christ revealeth Himself to the woman of Samaria.
- 4. 31. Christ encourageth his disciples.
- 4. 17. Christ healeth a child sick at Capernaum.
- 5. 1. Christ healeth one at the pool of Bethesda.
- 5. 10. Christ answereth the Jews.
- 5. 24. Christ testifieth of Himself.
- 5. 31. Christ declareth the testimony of others.
- 6. 1. Christ feedeth five thousand.
- 6. 15. Christ walketh on the sea; reproveth the people.
- 6. 30. Christ declareth Himself to be the bread of life.
- 6. 41. Christ answereth the Jews who murmured at Him.
- 6. 59. Christ answereth his disciples who were offended.
- 7. 1. Christ reproveth the unbelief of his brethren.
- 7. 14. Christ teacheth in the temple.
- 7. 25. Christ teacheth before the officers who are sent to take Him.
- 7. 37. Christ teacheth in the last day of the feast.
- 8. 1. Christ delivereth the woman taken in adultery.
- 8. 12. Christ justifieth his testimony.
- 8. 21. Christ speaketh of the Father.
- 8. 31. Christ denieth the Jews to be children of Abraham.
- 8. 42. Christ is accused of having an evil spirit.
- 8. 52. Christ declareth Himself to be before Abraham.
- 9. 1. Christ giveth sight to a man that was born blind.
- 9. 13. The man that was made to see is brought before the Pharisees.
- 9. 24. The Pharisees further examine the man that had been blind.
- 9. 35. Christ reproveth the Pharisees.
- 10. 1. Christ is the door of the sheep, and the shepherd of the sheep.
- 10. 11. Christ is the good shepherd.
- 10. 19. Christ at the feast of the dedication.
- 10. 31. Christ answereth the Jews who would have stoned Him.
- 11. 1. Christ heareth of Lazarus being sick.
- 11. 11. Christ goeth to Bethany, where Lazarus is dead.
- 11. 28. Christ weepeth.
- 11. 38. Christ raiseth Lazarus.
- 11. 47. Christ's death is prophesied by Caiaphas.
- 12. 1. Christ cometh to Bethany, suppeth with Lazarus.

LECTURE 274—276.

- 274. How we should draw in others to the Lord's Supper.
- 275. How far we may not believe for joy.
- 276. How we should worship Christ.

LECTURE 277—324.

- 277. That we must have a right faith in Christ.
- 278. How there is in Christ the light of men.
- 279. How we must become sons of God.
- 280. That we must not think too highly of ourselves.
- 281. One important use of Christian names.
- 282. How we should have in us no guile.
- 283. That God keeps the best till last.
- 284. That we are the temple of Christ.
- 285. The Christian new birth.
- 286. How we ought to come to the light.
- 287. How we should allow the precedence of others.
- 288. How those who have been at variance should help each other.
- 289. That we must worship God in spirit and in truth.
- 290. That we should be patient in well doing.
- 291. How we should persevere in praying.
- 292. The healing of our spiritual infirmity.
- 293. The divinity of Christ.
- 294. The twofold resurrection.
- 295. How we should search the Scriptures.
- 296. The great effect of small means.
- 297. That we must labour for eternal life.
- 298. How belief is the gift of God.
- 299. The excellency of our spiritual life.
- 300. To whom should we go, if not to Christ, for true religion.
- 301. That the friendship of the world is enmity against God.
- 302. How we must judge righteous judgment.
- 303. That life is short, and death a change for the better.
- 304. How we should cleave to truth though it be unpopular.
- 305. That we must henceforth sin no more.
- 306. The connexion of doctrine and practice.
- 307. The necessity and efficacy of faith.
- 308. That Christ can make free from sin.
- 309. What it is not to see death.
- 310. The human sufferings and divine nature of Christ.
- 311. How great a marvel is conversion unto Christ.
- 312. That we must be ready to speak for each other.
- 313. The right means of conviction.
- 314. To say we see aggravates our sin.
- 315. The fruits of coming unto God through Christ.
- 316. Unity in religion.
- 317. The unity of the Father and the Son.
- 318. That we must believe in Christ as God.
- 319. That God often makes to wait, those whom He loves.
- 320. Christ the resurrection and the life.
- 321. Christian tears.
- 322. Spiritual resurrection.
- 323. That Christ died for all men.
- 324. The best of almsgiving.

S. JOHN ch. 12—21.

- 12. 12. Christ rideth upon an ass into Jerusalem.
- 12. 23. Christ is troubled in soul.
- 12. 37. Christ is not believed on by the Jews.
- 13. 1. Christ washeth the feet of his disciples.
- 13. 6. Christ cometh to wash the feet of Peter.
- 13. 18. Christ giveth the sop to Judas.
- 13. 31. Christ commandeth to love one another.
- 14. 1. Christ comforteth his disciples.
- 14. 12. Christ promiseth the Comforter.
- 14. 22. Christ leaveth peace to his disciples.
- 15. 1. Christ the true vine.
- 15. 9. Christ calleth his disciples friends.
- 15. 18. Christ is hated without a cause.
- 16. 1. Christ promiseth to send the Comforter.
- 16. 12. Christ has yet many things to say to the disciples.
- 16. 23. Christ speaketh no more in proverbs.
- 17. 1. Christ prayeth to the Father.
- 17. 11. Christ prayeth in behalf of his apostles.
- 17. 20. Christ prayeth for all believers.
- 18. 1. Christ is betrayed and taken.
- 18. 15. Christ is denied of Peter.
- 18. 28. Christ is questioned by Pilate.
- 19. 1. Christ answereth Pilate.
- 19. 12. Christ is crucified.
- 19. 23. Christ giveth up the ghost.
- 19. 31. Christ is buried.
- 20. 1. Christ not in the sepulchre.
- 20. 10. Christ appeareth to Mary.
- 20. 19. Christ appeareth to the disciples, satisfieth Thomas.
- 21. 1. Christ appeareth to his disciples fishing.
- 21. 12. Christ giveth Peter charge of his lambs.
- 21. 20. Christ answereth Peter concerning John.

THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES ch. 1—8.

- 1. 1. The preface to the Acts of the Apostles.
- 1. 6. The apostles witness the ascension of Christ.
- 1. 15. Matthias is numbered with the eleven apostles.
- 2. 1. The apostles filled with the Holy Ghost speak with tongues.
- 2. 14. Peter speaketh of Christ to the Jews.
- 2. 29. Peter's address concluded. Hearers pricked in their hearts.
- 2. 41. Believers had all things in common.
- 3. 1. Peter healeth a man that was lame.
- 3. 12. St. Peter exhorteth the Jews to repentance.
- 4. 1. Peter and John are cast into prison.
- 4. 13. Peter and John threatened by the rulers.
- 4. 23. The prayer and conduct of the disciples.
- 5. 1. Ananias and Sapphira fall down dead.
- 5. 12. The apostles, being imprisoned, are delivered by an angel.
- 5. 22. The apostles answer before the council.
- 5. 33. The counsel of Gamaliel.
- 6. 1. Seven men appointed to the daily ministration.
- 6. 8. Stephen doeth great wonders, is accused of blasphemy.
- 7. 1. St. Stephen beginneth his defence.
- 7. 17. St. Stephen's defence continued.
- 7. 30. The defence of St. Stephen continued further.
- 7. 41. The defence of St. Stephen draws to a close.
- 7. 51. St. Stephen is stoned.
- 8. 1. Philip preacheth Christ in Samaria. Simon is baptized.

LECTURE 325—356.

- 325. That God loveth all men.
- 326. The uses of trial.
- 327. The guilt of unbelief.
- 328. The duty of being humble minded.
- 329. That we must be washed by the blood of Christ.
- 330. What it is to betray Christ.
- 331. How love in Christians might influence unbelievers.
- 332. Jesus the way of life.
- 333. The love of Christ made manifest.
- 334. The fruit of Christian love.
- 335. That by our good works God is glorified.
- 336. That we should love as friends.
- 337. Consolations under enmity.
- 338. The offices of the Holy Ghost.
- 339. Of the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ.
- 340. Cheerfulness in tribulation.
- 341. The necessity of true faith.
- 342. That we must be sanctified in the world.
- 343. How we should pray to be one.
- 344. Patience in adversity.
- 345. Worldly ease.
- 346. The preference of truth.
- 347. The abuse of authority.
- 348. Vain profession.
- 349. The Scripture must be fulfilled.
- 350. That death is nigh to us.
- 351. How we ought to know the Scriptures.
- 352. Christ the Saviour of all.
- 353. That we have sufficient evidence for belief.
- 354. The evils of disunion in religion.
- 355. The blessedness of martyrdom.
- 356. The truth and fulness of the Gospel.

LECTURE 357—380.

- 357. The necessity of divine assistance.
- 358. The advantages of united prayer.
- 359. The appointment of ministers, and respect due to their office.
- 360. The communication of faith and grace.
- 361. What God hath ordained concerning us.
- 362. What we who are baptized ought to do.
- 363. How we ought to use our worldly goods.
- 364. How we should reply to them that beg.
- 365. The blessing of being turned from iniquity.
- 366. That we can be saved only through Christ.
- 367. Christian confidence.
- 368. The fruits of the Spirit.
- 369. The sin of lying to the Holy Ghost.
- 370. God knoweth how to deliver us from sin.
- 371. That we must obey God rather than men.
- 372. The sinfulness of fighting against God.
- 373. How we ought to do good and to distribute.
- 374. The glory that shall be revealed.
- 375. Of our sinfulness, and the mercy of our Saviour.
- 376. Our unwillingness to be amended.
- 377. That Christ is not far off.
- 378. That we must be at enmity with the world.
- 379. How to forgive our enemies, and to worship Christ.
- 380. That we should rejoice, and give God the glory.

THE ACTS ch. 8—25.

- 8. 14. St. Peter reproveth Simon.
- 8. 26. Philip baptizeth the Ethiopian.
- 9. 1. Saul journeying to Damascus is stricken to the earth.
- 9. 10. Saul is baptized and preacheth at Damascus.
- 9. 23. Saul is laid wait for both by the Jews and by the Grecians.
- 9. 32. St. Peter healeth Æneas; raiseth Tabitha from the dead.
- 10. 1. Cornelius seeth a vision.
- 10. 9. St. Peter seeth a vision.
- 10. 24. Cornelius rehearseth the matter to St. Peter.
- 10. 34. St. Peter preacheth Christ to Cornelius.
- 11. 1. Peter justifieth his going in to the Gentiles.
- 11. 19. Barnabas is sent to Antioch.
- 12. 1. Herod killeth James, and taketh Peter also.
- 12. 12. Peter is in safety. Herod is eaten up of worms.
- 13. 1. Paul and Barnabas are sent forth by the Holy Ghost.
- 13. 14. Paul preacheth at Antioch in Pisidia.
- 13. 26. The preaching of Paul at Antioch concluded.
- 13. 42. Paul and Barnabas turn to the Gentiles.
- 14. 1. Paul and Barnabas fly from Iconium to Lystra.
- 14. 14. St. Paul is stoned at Lystra; returns to Antioch.
- 15. 1. The apostles and elders hold a council at Jerusalem.
- 15. 12. St. James giveth sentence in the council at Jerusalem.
- 15. 22. The apostles and elders send letters to the churches.
- 15. 32. Paul and Barnabas depart asunder.
- 16. 1. St. Paul circumeiseth Timothy; goeth to Philippi.
- 16. 14. St. Paul converteth Lydia; casteth out an evil spirit.
- 16. 25. Paul and Silas are delivered from the prison.
- 17. 1. St. Paul preacheth at Thessalonica and Berea.
- 17. 13. St. Paul is sent from Berea to Athens.
- 17. 22. St. Paul preacheth at Athens.
- 18. 1. St. Paul cometh to Corinth.
- 18. 12. St. Paul is brought before Gallio; goeth to Ephesus.
- 18. 22. St. Paul strengtheneth the disciples. Apollos preacheth.
- 19. 1. The Holy Ghost is given to the disciples at Ephesus.
- 19. 11. The exorcists are put to shame.
- 19. 28. The Ephesians are set against St. Paul by Demetrius.
- 19. 32. The tumult of the Ephesians allayed by the magistrate.
- 20. 1. St. Paul preacheth at Troas.
- 20. 13. St Paul sendeth to Ephesus for the elders of the church.
- 20. 25. St Paul concludeth his address to the elders at Miletus.
- 21. 1. St. Paul journeyeth towards Jerusalem.
- 21. 15. St. Paul cometh to Jerusalem.
- 21. 27. St. Paul is taken by the chief captain.
- 22. 1. St. Paul maketh his defence at Jerusalem.
- 22. 17. St. Paul is not suffered to finish his defence.
- 23. 1. St. Paul pleadeth his cause before the council.
- 23. 12. The conspiracy against St. Paul is reported to Lysias.
- 23. 22. Lysias sendeth St. Paul to Felix.
- 24. 1. St. Paul is accused by Tertullus.
- 24. 17. St. Paul before Felix.
- 25. 1. St. Paul is accused by the Jews before Festus.
- 25. 10. Festus telleth king Agrippa concerning Paul.
- 25. 22. Agrippa and Bernice attend to hear St. Paul.

LECTURE 381—433.

- 381. The assurance of pardon, an encouragement to repent.
- 382. That we should go on our way rejoicing.
- 383. How we may know what God would have us to do.
- 384. That when we are converted we ought to strengthen the brethren.
- 385. How we ought to profit by the day of prosperity.
- 386. That we must not despise the lowly.
- 387. How we ought to value the ministry of man.
- 388. Vain distinctions.
- 389. How we ought to esteem none common or unequal.
- 390. The importance of baptism.
- 391. Repentance unto life.
- 392. How to behave in times of general distress.
- 393. Deliverance from spiritual captivity.
- 394. Against the love of worldly distinction.
- 395. The sin of turning men away from the truth.
- 396. The Gospel addressed to the understanding.
- 397. The necessity of a right foundation.
- 398. That we must not envy one another.
- 399. Thanks for deliverance from idolatry.
- 400. Patience and joy in tribulation.
- 401. The test of Christian fellowship.
- 402. What points we ought to yield to our brethren.
- 403. How under affliction we might rejoice in consolation.
- 404. The duty of being reconciled.
- 405. The importance of a settled place for prayer.
- 406. What reflection we ought to make at the sight of prisoners.
- 407. What we must do to be saved.
- 408. That we should search the Scriptures.
- 409. The folly of always looking after news.
- 410. The judgment to come.
- 411. That we ought not to fear.
- 412. That we ought to care for all men.
- 413. That all Christians are in some sort ministers.
- 414. What we must believe of the Holy Ghost.
- 415. Good brought out of evil.
- 416. The sources of practical unbelief.
- 417. How we must appease the storm of passion.
- 418. The necessity of watchfulness in hearing.
- 419. The foundations of Christian doctrine.
- 420. That it is more blessed to give than to receive.
- 421. The use of bearing crosses patiently.
- 422. The duty of concession.
- 423. Peace in the midst of strife.
- 424. The folly of kicking against the pricks.
- 425. The effect of the Gospel on the laws of the land.
- 426. A good conscience the way to be of good cheer.
- 427. How we ought to warn the unconverted.
- 428. How we ought to suspend our judgment.
- 429. How to receive reproof.
- 430. Against abuse of opportunities.
- 431. That we may not lay complaint without proof.
- 432. Our appeal to the King of kings.
- 433. Hinderances to our profiting by hearing the word.

THE ACTS ch. 26—28.

- 26. 1. St. Paul answereth for himself before Agrippa.
- 26. 12. St. Paul relateth his conversion.
- 26. 22. St. Paul replyeth to Festus, exhorteth Agrippa.
- 27. 1. St. Paul setteth sail for Rome.
- 27. 12. The ship is overtaken by a storm.
- 27. 21. St. Paul exhorteth the ship's company.
- 27. 33. St. Paul and the rest come safe to land.
- 28. 1. St. Paul at Melita.
- 28. 11. St. Paul arriveth at Rome.
- 28. 23. St. Paul preacheth Jesus to the Jews at Rome.
- 28. 30. St. Paul for two whole years teacheth at Rome.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS ch. 1—16.

- 1. 1. St. Paul declareth to the Romans his call to be an apostle.
- 1. 8. St. Paul desireth to preach the Gospel at Rome.
- 1. 20. How the Gentiles were without excuse.
- 2. 1. The Jew also inexcusable.
- 2. 17. The privileges of the Jew contrasted with his practice.
- 3. 1. The advantage of having the oracles of God.
- 3. 19. God's method of justification in the Gospel.
- 4. 1. The Gospel doctrine foreshewn in Abraham and David.
- 4. 16. Abraham the father of them that believe.
- 5. 1. The blessedness of being justified through faith.
- 5. 12. The extent of redemption through Christ.
- 6. 1. That we may not sin for grace to abound.
- 6. 15. That we may not sin because we are under grace.
- 7. 1. Our deliverance from the Law; which howsoever is not sin.
- 7. 13. That it is not the Law which is made death to us.
- 8. 1. The believer safe from condemnation.
- 8. 14. The believer liable to sufferings.
- 8. 28. God designeth for us to be conformed to the image of his Son.
- 9. 1. St. Paul is grieved for the rejection of the Jews.
- 9. 10. The rejection of the Jews further accounted for.
- 9. 22. The reason of God's forbearance and of his mercy.
- 10. 1. The righteousness of the Law and of the Gospel compared.
- 10. 14. Both Jews and Gentiles have been by God amply called.
- 11. 1. That God has not cast away his people.
- 11. 11. The fall of the Jews made profitable to the Gentiles.
- 11. 25. The blindness of the Jews is only for a time.
- 12. 1. God's mercy must move us to serve Him.
- 12. 9. Love unfeigned.
- 13. 1. The duty of subjects to the higher powers.
- 13. 8. Love is the fulfilling of the law.
- 14. 1. Rules for right behaviour in things indifferent.
- 14. 14. Further rules for our behaviour in things indifferent.
- 15. 1. That we must receive one another, as Christ also received us.
- 15. 15. St. Paul writeth of his ministry and of his purposes.
- 15. 26. St. Paul requesteth the prayers of the brethren.
- 16. 1. The salutations of the apostle to his friends at Rome.
- 16. 17. How much we must labour for unity.

LECTURE 434—444.

- 434. How we should meet an unjust accusation.
- 435. How we might help to convert others.
- 436. That it is most reasonable to be pious.
- 437. Of our heavenward voyage.
- 438. What sacrifices we ought to make for heaven.
- 439. That God's promises bind us to his commands.
- 440. Against hoarding what is more than enough.
- 441. The attributes of God.
- 442. Good spoken against.
- 443. The source of unbelief.
- 444. The things which concern Jesus Christ.

LECTURE 445—481.

- 445. How we may apply to ourselves what is here written.
- 446. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all believers.
- 447. Against loving darkness rather than light.
- 448. That there is no respect of persons with God.
- 449. That outward practice must proceed from principle within.
- 450. The testimony of the Scriptures against sin.
- 451. Some chief uses of our being justified by faith through Christ.
- 452. The blessedness of being forgiven.
- 453. How we also ought to believe.
- 454. That we have peace and joy in believing.
- 455. That grace abounds more than sin.
- 456. That we should reckon ourselves dead to sin.
- 457. How zealously we ought to serve the Lord.
- 458. That holiness is necessary and attainable.
- 459. The conflict between the flesh and the spirit.
- 460. That we are now debtors to the Spirit.
- 461. How the Spirit helpeth our infirmities.
- 462. That nothing can separate the faithful from Christ's love.
- 463. Against selfishness in our desire for salvation.
- 464. That we must not answer against God.
- 465. It is by faith that we must follow after righteousness.
- 466. Salvation, through Christ, by faith, proclaimed to all.
- 467. How neglectful we have been in our calling of each other.
- 468. The folly of making our own terms with God.
- 469. That we should be not highminded, but fear.
- 470. That we may not judge God's ways by ours.
- 471. That we must think soberly of ourselves.
- 472. Evil overcome with good.
- 473. That we must be subject for conscience sake.
- 474. That it is high time to prepare for judgment.
- 475. That the weak must not judge the strong.
- 476. That the strong must not scandalize the weak.
- 477. How we ought to please our neighbour for his good.
- 478. How we ought to hope of ourselves, and give God the glory.
- 479. How we ought to pray for earthly blessings.
- 480. That we ought to love some more than others, and whom.
- 481. Glory to God through Jesus Christ.

ST. PAUL'S FIRST EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS 1—16.

1. 1. St. Paul saluteth the church at Corinth and all Christians.
1. 4. St. Paul giveth thanks for the Corinthians, exhorteth to unity.
1. 18. The apostle preacheth Christ crucified.
2. 1. The apostle further describeth his preaching.
3. 1. That our progress must be gradual.
3. 12. That we are the temple of the Holy Ghost.
4. 1. The just view of the office of a minister.
4. 8. The example of the apostles.
5. 1. Primitive discipline.
6. 1. Against going to law before unbelievers.
6. 12. Against the sins of uncleanness.
7. 1. Of marriage.
7. 17. Let each abide in his own calling.
7. 32. St. Paul would have us without carefulness.
8. 1. Of eating meat offered to idols, or in the idol's temple.
9. 1. St. Paul answereth them that examine him.
9. 15. The apostle hath not used his power.
10. 1. The case of the Jews an ensample to us.
10. 16. Against partaking of idol sacrifices.
11. 1. Women in the congregation must have the head covered.
11. 16. The Corinthians came together for the worse.
11. 23. St. Paul's account of the Lord's supper.
12. 1. The manifestation of the Spirit.
12. 15. We are the body of Christ, and members in particular.
13. 1. That no gifts without charity prosper.
14. 1. The gift of tongues and that of prophecy compared.
14. 11. The gift of tongues and that of prophecy further compared.
14. 26. That God is not the God of confusion, but of peace.
15. 1. The Gospel which St. Paul preached.
15. 12. The resurrection of the dead proved.
15. 29. The resurrection of the dead further proved.
15. 35. How the dead are to be raised up, and with what body.
15. 50. The change that must take place at our resurrection.
16. 1. Collection for the saints, and St. Paul's coming.
16. 13. Faithfulness and charity.

ST. PAUL'S SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS
ch. 1—8.

1. 1. St. Paul giveth thanks.
1. 12. St. Paul accounteth for his change of plan.
2. 1. The exercise of mercy in discipline.
2. 12. St. Paul always made to triumph in Christ.
3. 1. St. Paul appealeth to the Corinthians as his epistle.
3. 7. The Old Testament and the New compared.
4. 1. St. Paul justifieth his ministry.
4. 8. The trials and support of the apostle.
5. 1. How we groan whilst in the body.
5. 11. The minister of reconciliation.
6. 1. St. Paul's ministry and privations.
6. 11. Against fellowship with unbelievers.
7. 1. St. Paul comforted by the report of Titus.
7. 9. St. Paul's joy in the repentance of the Corinthians.
8. 1. St. Paul exhorteth to a contribution.

LECTURE 482—516.

482. The universal obligation of this Epistle.
483. Against divisions in things spiritual.
484. Wisdom of the world opposed to the preaching of the cross.
485. That we must be led by the Spirit.
486. The only foundation.
487. Rules for not defiling the temple of God.
488. That we have nothing which we have not received.
489. Candour and humility.
490. How we may discipline ourselves.
491. How we ought to avoid lawsuits.
492. The honour due unto the body.
493. Directions to the married.
494. The inward change.
495. The authority of parents in the marriage of their children.
496. The extent of our Christian liberty, and the limits of its use.
497. The provision for the ministry.
498. How we ought to run our Christian race.
499. What security we have of God.
500. That we must do all for the glory of God.
501. How far we ought to defer to custom.
502. Improvement arising from the sins of the churches.
503. That we must prepare, and also communicate.
504. Of the gifts of grace.
505. That there should be no schism in the body.
506. The excellency and durability of love.
507. We ought to prefer that which is most edifying.
508. The excellency of Christian preaching.
509. All things in the church must be done in order.
510. The death and resurrection of Christ.
511. Christ risen the first fruits of the dead.
512. The love of the world at variance with the hope of glory.
513. That we shall be raised up in the likeness of Christ.
514. The triumph over sin and death.
515. How to plan, and to express our planning for the future.
516. Dissensions and dissenters.

LECTURE 517—531.

517. Comfort in tribulation.
518. Of trust in the promises of God.
519. How we ought to forgive offenders.
520. God's glory not hindered by man's perversity.
521. How we ought to magnify the grace of God.
522. Our free access to the glory of the Gospel.
523. The faithful minister.
524. Our Christian warfare and reward.
525. The judgment seat of Christ.
526. The terms of peace.
527. How to approve ourselves in all things.
528. With whom we must agree, and with whom not.
529. Comfort in tribulation.
530. Repentance unto salvation not to be repented of.
531. Motives and rules for almsgiving.

2 CORINTHIANS ch. 8—13.

8. 13. St. Paul provideth for honest things in the sight of men.
9. 1. Touching the ministering to the saints.
9. 8. Further motives to almsgiving.
10. 1. Of the apostolical authority.
10. 13. St. Paul boasteth not beyond his measure.
11. 1. St. Paul is forced to commend himself.
11. 10. St. Paul is resolved to glory.
11. 23. The labours, and perils, and sufferings of St. Paul.
12. 1. St. Paul cometh to visions.
12. 11. St. Paul concludeth his defence of himself.
13. 1. St. Paul declareth that he will not spare.
13. 11. St. Paul sendeth his blessing to all.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS ch. 1—6.

1. 1. St. Paul reproveth the Galatians.
1. 13. St. Paul declareth his own apostleship.
2. 1. St. Paul went up again to Jerusalem.
2. 11. We are justified by the faith of Jesus Christ.
3. 1. The blessing of faithful Abraham.
3. 13. The Law is consistent with the promises of God.
4. 1. Our adoption to be sons.
4. 17. The two covenants compared.
5. 1. St. Paul exhorteth to stedfastness.
5. 16. That we must walk in the Spirit, not after the flesh.
6. 1. The concluding exhortations.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS ch. 1—6.

1. 1. St. Paul blesseth God for the election of his people.
1. 15. St. Paul prays for the Ephesians.
2. 1. How the dead in sins are quickened in Christ.
2. 11. How Christ reconciled both Jews and Gentiles to God.
3. 1. The eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus.
3. 14. St. Paul bows his knees unto God in our behalf.
4. 1. St. Paul exhorts to unity.
4. 17. That we must put off the old man, and put on the new.
5. 1. That we must walk in love, not in uncleanness.
5. 17. Against drunkenness. Duties of husbands and wives.
6. 1. Duties of children, parents, servants, and masters.
6. 10. Christian armour against spiritual enemies.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE PHILIPPIANS ch. 1—4.

1. 1. St. Paul writeth of his thankfulness and prayers in his bonds.
1. 19. St. Paul trusteth that he shall glorify Christ.
2. 1. St. Paul exhorteth to unity and humility.
2. 14. Of Timotheus, and Epaphroditus.
3. 1. St. Paul's ground of confidence.
3. 13. Exhortations to be like minded and heavenly minded.
4. 1. St. Paul exhorteth to stedfastness in all good things.
4. 10. St. Paul's contentment, thankfulness, salutations.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS ch. 1.

1. 1. St. Paul giveth thanks, and prayeth, for the Colossians.

LECTURE 532—543.

532. That we cannot have all things in common.
533. The right way and happy fruit of giving.
534. Almsgiving promotes thanksgiving.
535. The authority of Christian ministers.
536. That we should not commend ourselves.
537. What boasting is allowable.
538. We ought to suffer fools gladly.
539. That we must be content to be meanly esteemed.
540. Grace sufficient.
541. That we should have at heart the spiritual welfare of others.
542. How we ought to prove our own selves.
543. That we must live in peace with all.

LECTURE 544—554.

544. The true Gospel.
545. How anxious we ought to be for each other's souls.
546. On agreement, and deference to authority.
547. We die unto the Law that we may live unto God.
548. Why men prefer to think that they are justified by works.
549. Salvation by promise our Christian inheritance.
550. The value of the truth.
551. Zeal, good and evil.
552. Christian liberty.
553. The works of the flesh. The fruit of the Spirit.
554. That we must glory in the cross of Christ.

LECTURE 555—566.

555. The Holy Spirit the earnest of our inheritance.
556. The knowledge of Christ.
557. By grace we are saved through faith.
558. Agreement of Christians with each other.
559. How we should help to make God's goodness known.
560. Knowledge, faith, and love.
561. Sincerity in love.
562. That we must advance in holiness, as well as avoid sin.
563. Spiritual wakefulness and circumspection.
564. The spiritual marriage of Christ with his church.
565. That we must do all as unto the Lord.
566. The duty of praying for each other.

LECTURE 567—574.

567. That we must in any case rejoice if Christ be preached.
568. Spiritual courage.
569. God's help is our great encouragement.
570. What characters are most to be esteemed.
571. That we must count all things loss for Christ.
572. The excellency of our Christian inheritance.
573. Of the peace of God keeping our hearts and minds.
574. That we must give largely, and for God's glory.

LECTURE 575.

575. Who it is that gave himself for us.

COLOSSIANS ch. 1—4.

1. 16. St. Paul setteth forth his ministry.
2. 1. St. Paul had great conflict for his converts.
2. 13. Ordinances that were against us blotted out.
3. 1. How to be risen with Christ.
3. 14. Charity. Family relationship.
4. 1. Concluding salutations.

St. PAUL'S FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS
ch. 1—5.

1. 1. St. Paul prays and gives thanks for the Thessalonians.
2. 1. How St. Paul had preached the Gospel to the Thessalonians.
2. 13. St. Paul thanks God on behalf of the Thessalonians.
3. 1. St. Paul testifieth his regard for the Thessalonians.
4. 1. Exhortations to advancement in purity and love.
4. 13. St. Paul would not have us ignorant concerning the deceased.
5. 1. St. Paul exhorteth to watchfulness.
5. 14. That St. Paul's doctrine is practical.

St. PAUL'S SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS
ch. 1—3.

1. 1. St. Paul speaketh of the righteous judgment of God.
2. 1. Of the man of sin.
2. 13. St. Paul gives thanks and prays for the Thessalonians.
3. 1. St. Paul's own example, and his salutation.

St. PAUL'S FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY ch. 1—6.

1. 1. St. Paul bids Timothy abide in Ephesus, and why.
1. 12. St. Paul giveth thanks for his own conversion.
2. 1. Prayers for kings.
3. 1. St. Paul declareth how bishops ought to be qualified.
3. 8. The qualifications of deacons.
4. 1. St. Paul telleth Timothy what to teach and do.
5. 1. Of Christian widows.
5. 17. Of the maintenance and ordering of ministers.
6. 1. Religion must not be made a cloak of covetousness.
6. 11. St. Paul exhorteth Timothy to be obedient.

St. PAUL'S SECOND EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY ch. 1—4.

1. 1. St. Paul prayeth for Timothy, and exhorteth him.
1. 11. St. Paul is not ashamed.
2. 1. How much is required of a minister.
2. 16. Timothy is instructed what to shun and what to follow.
3. 1. That there must be perilous times in the last days.
4. 1. St. Paul sheweth how to restrain false teachers.
4. 9. St. Paul sendeth messages and greetings.

St. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO TITUS ch. 1—3.

1. 1. St. Paul saluteth Titus; sendeth instructions.
1. 10. Testimony against the Cretians.
2. 1. Certain things which become sound doctrine.
3. 1. St. Paul further sheweth Titus what to teach.

St. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO PHILEMON.

1. 1. St. Paul intercedeth with Philemon for Onesimus.

LECTURE 576—581.

576. What is behind of the afflictions of Christ.
577. That baptism is Christian circumcision.
578. How carefully we must hold the Head, even Christ.
579. That we cannot at once wear two characters.
580. The connexion of our relative duties.
581. Christian fellowship.

LECTURE 582—589.

582. Christian example. Waiting for Christ's coming.
583. How we may best propagate the Gospel in the world.
584. How we ought to wish to help in the conversion of the heathen.
585. That we must increase in love daily.
586. Why we must be quiet and mind our own business.
587. The resurrection of the dead at the coming of Christ.
588. Thankfulness for the help of ministers.
589. How we ought to be blameless in all things.

LECTURE 590—593.

590. Christ glorified in his saints and they in Him.
591. The deceivableness of unrighteousness.
592. The end and means of God's election.
593. How to behave towards them who walk disorderly.

LECTURE 594—603.

594. Against vain disputation on religious topics.
595. That we must thankfully conform to the will of God.
596. How women must behave.
597. What is required of them who rule the church of God.
598. The mystery of godliness.
599. Real godliness opposed to doctrines of devils.
600. Female usefulness.
601. Against partaking in other men's sins.
602. The love of money the root of all evil.
603. How urgently we are charged to keep God's commandments.

LECTURE 604—610.

604. How we ought to stir up in one another the gift of God.
605. Warning and encouragement.
606. God's faithfulness in rewards and punishments.
607. The tone and topics of edifying conversation.
608. Scripture the guide of life.
609. The Christian triumphant in death.
610. How we must use this world out of regard to the next.

LECTURE 611—614.

611. Of bishops and elders.
612. Unto the pure all things are pure.
613. The connexion of doctrine and practice.
614. That we must be careful to maintain good works.

LECTURE 615.

615. How we ought to plead with one another for good.

ST. PAUL'S EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS ch. 1—13.

1. 1. That God has spoken unto us by his Son.
2. 1. That we must give heed to what has been spoken by the Son.
2. 19. Why the Son took on Him the nature of man.
3. 1. That Christ is worthy of more glory than Moses.
4. 1. That there remaineth a rest for the people of God.
4. 12. God's word. His knowing all things. The sympathy of Christ.
5. 1. Christ appointed to be our High Priest for ever.
6. 1. That we must not fall away, but go on to perfection.
6. 11. God's promises confirmed by oath.
7. 1. Melchisedec the type of Christ.
7. 15. The superiority of Christ's priesthood further proved.
8. 1. That our High Priest officiates in heaven.
8. 6. Jesus the Mediator of a better covenant.
9. 1. The particulars of the tabernacle.
9. 11. Christ the mediator of the New Testament.
9. 23. How Christ offered Himself once for the sin of man.
10. 1. The Law could not by its sacrifices make the worshippers perfect.
10. 19. Motives to faith and holiness.
10. 32. The recompense awaiting perseverance.
11. 1. What faith is.
11. 8. The faith of Abraham.
11. 20. The faith of Isaac, Jacob, Moses, and others.
11. 32. Instances of faith manifest in the fathers.
12. 1. Motives to patient endurance.
12. 9. How we ought to support ourselves under chastisement.
12. 18. The glories of the two covenants compared.
13. 1. Exhortation to several Christian duties.
13. 10. Concluding exhortations.

ST. JAMES ch. 1—5.

1. 1. That we must rejoice in our trials.
1. 13. Warnings against false religion.
2. 1. That the rich may not despise the poor.
2. 14. That faith without works is dead.
3. 1. Of bridling the tongue.
3. 9. The inconsistency of the tongue.
4. 1. Against pride and contention.
4. 11. Against other sins of the tongue.
5. 1. The vanity and perils of wealth.
5. 12. How to use the tongue profitably.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF ST. PETER ch. 1—5.

1. 1. St. Peter's salutation.
1. 3. God to be blessed for his gracious gift.
1. 13. Motives to fear and to love.
2. 1. Christ the chief corner stone.
2. 13. Instruction in our duties to each other.
3. 1. Duties of wives and husbands.
3. 13. Of suffering for righteousness' sake.
4. 1. Exhortations to cease from sin.
4. 12. Comfort under apprehended persecution.
5. 1. Exhortations to the old and to the young.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF ST. PETER ch. 1.

1. 1. God's good gift, and our manifold duties.

LECTURE 616—643.

616. That the Son is above angels, and therefore God.
617. The peril of neglecting so great salvation.
618. Christ a merciful and faithful High Priest.
619. That we by unbelief and sin lose heaven.
620. That we must labour not to come short of our promised rest.
621. Motives to our perseverance in labour and in prayer.
622. That Christians have both a priest and a sacrifice.
623. Progressive improvement in knowledge and in love.
624. The security of hoping in God's promises.
625. Jesus our Priest and King.
626. Our advantage in having such a High Priest as Christ.
627. The Jewish tabernacle a type of heaven.
628. The better promises of the new covenant.
629. Our free access unto heaven.
630. The blood of Christ cleanseth from sin.
631. How Christ will appear unto them that look for Him.
632. Christ perfects for ever them that are sanctified.
633. Privileges, and duties, and warnings.
634. Believing to the saving of the soul.
635. The faith of the elders.
636. That we must desire a heavenly country.
637. How to examine our faith.
638. How much more we ought to believe than they.
639. God chastens us as sons.
640. That without holiness no man can see the Lord.
641. How much we have to answer for as Christians.
642. That we should be constant in our faith and love.
643. The ministers and the flock.

LECTURE 644—653.

644. The spiritual uses of poverty and of riches.
645. What true religion is.
646. How we shall be judged by the law of liberty.
647. The fruit of a lively faith.
648. The tongue subject to God's grace.
649. The tongue guided by the heart.
650. Humility before God.
651. The sinfulness of not doing what we know.
652. The advantages of patient submission.
653. The effect of mutual prayers.

LECTURE 654—663.

654. Our election.
655. How prophets and also angels have longed to know the Gospel.
656. How we are begotten anew by the word of God.
657. How we might reply to temptation.
658. That we ought to be thankful if we with patience suffer wrongfully.
659. God's favour to the righteous.
660. Noah and the flood a type of Christ and Christian baptism.
661. That we must soon render an account.
662. Judgment must begin at the house of God.
663. Of resisting the devil.

LECTURE 664.

664. The experiment of practising the Gospel.

2 PETER ch. 1—3.

1. 10. St. Peter puts his readers in remembrance.
2. 1. False teachers; their character and end.
2. 12. The false teachers further described.
3. 1. The scoffer confuted.
3. 8. The day of the Lord will come.

THE FIRST GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN ch. 1—5.

1. 1. St. John testifieth of his own experience.
2. 1. The old and the new commandment.
2. 12. St. John writes to all, that they love not the world.
2. 18. Of many antichrists, and of the unction of the Holy One.
3. 1. God's love manifest in his calling us his sons.
3. 13. That we must love in deed and in truth.
4. 1. Warning against false prophets. That God is love.
4. 12. God's love for us, and ours for Him.
5. 1. How many witnesses there are to the record God gave of his Son.
5. 12. That we know the truth.

THE SECOND GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

1. Exhortation to stedfastness in love and in doctrine.

THE THIRD GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JOHN.

1. St. John commendeth Gaius and Demetrius; blameth Diotrephes.

THE GENERAL EPISTLE OF ST. JUDE.

1. That we must contend for the faith against deceivers.
12. False teachers and their condemnation further described.

REVELATION ch. 1—11.

1. 1. The author, and the subject, of this book.
1. 4. St. John addresseth the seven churches in Asia.
1. 12. The vision of one like unto the Son of man.
2. 1. The epistle to the church of Ephesus.
2. 8. Epistles to the churches of Smyrna and of Pergamos.
2. 18. The epistle to the church in Thyatira.
3. 1. The epistle to the church in Sardis.
3. 7. The epistle to the church of Philadelphia.
3. 14. The epistle to the church of the Laodiceans.
4. 1. The vision of the throne.
5. 1. The vision of the Book and of the Lamb.
5. 8. The worship of the Lamb.
6. 1. The four first seals opened.
6. 9. The fifth and sixth seals opened.
7. 1. The sealing of the twelve tribes.
7. 9. The innumerable multitude of saints in heaven.
8. 1. The angel with a golden censer.
8. 7. The first four trumpets.
9. 1. The fifth angel sounds.
9. 13. The sixth angel sounds.
10. 1. Another mighty angel with a little book open.
11. 1. The two witnesses prophesy, and are slain.

LECTURE 665—669.

665. The evidence of testimony and of prophecy.
666. The wicked punished. The godly delivered.
667. That these warnings are for our profit.
668. The world devoted to destruction.
669. How we ought to look for Christ's coming.

LECTURE 670—679.

670. Sin forgiven, holiness enjoined.
671. That love comes of the true light now shining.
672. To love God is the way not to love the world.
673. How we must avoid an antichristian spirit.
674. The children of God distinguished from those of the devil.
675. The consciousness of abiding in God.
676. As God hath loved us so ought we to love one another.
677. The perfecting of love.
678. How sure we ought to feel of the truth as it is in Jesus.
679. Holy confidence.

LECTURE 680.

680. Christian friendship the communion of saints.

LECTURE 681.

681. That we should follow not the evil but the good.

LECTURE 682, 683.

682. The evils of disunion, false doctrine, and false teachers.
683. How we must live to the glory of Christ.

LECTURE 684—705.

684. The duty of studying this book.
685. That we must hear and obey the words of Christ.
686. Of having a lively notion of the presence of Christ.
687. The promise to them that overcome.
688. The great gain of overcoming in our trials.
689. How the burden of Christ is light.
690. The peril of profession without practice.
691. The description of our heavenly inheritance.
692. The sum of what the Spirit saith to the churches.
693. Worship in heaven.
694. The sorrows of the heavenly minded.
695. How devoutly we ought to worship Christ.
696. The uses of prophecy.
697. The sign of the Son of man seen in heaven.
698. The limit of God's mercies.
699. The happiness of them that shall be saved.
700. The acceptance of prayer.
701. God manifest in his works.
702. The plague of strange animals.
703. The destroying armament.
704. A new train of prophecies is revealed.
705. The prosperity of the wicked for a season.

REVELATION ch. 11—22.

- 11. 11. The witnesses revive. The seventh angel sounds.
- 12. 1. The vision of the woman and the dragon.
- 12. 7. The woman nourished in the wilderness.
- 13. 1. The vision of the beast with seven heads and ten horns.
- 13. 11. The vision of the beast with two horns.
- 14. 1. The vision of a Lamb standing on the mount Sion.
- 14. 12. The vision of the harvest, and the winepress.
- 15. 1. The seven angels with vials. The song of the redeemed.
- 16. 1. The first five vials poured out on the kingdom of the beast.
- 16. 12. The sixth and seventh vials are poured out.
- 17. 1. The woman sitting on the scarlet coloured beast.
- 17. 9. The angel explains the symbols.
- 18. 1. The fall of Babylon proclaimed.
- 18. 9. The lamentation over Babylon.
- 18. 29. The rejoicing over Babylon.
- 19. 1. Alleluia at the judgment of Babylon, and the marriage of the Lamb.
- 19. 11. The great slaughter inflicted by the word of God.
- 20. 1. Satan is bound, and saints reign with Christ a thousand years.
- 20. 7. Satan cast into the lake of fire. The last judgment.
- 21. 1. The new heaven and new earth.
- 21. 9. The holy city new Jerusalem.
- 21. 22. The new Jerusalem further described.
- 22. 1. The river and the tree of life. The witness of John.
- 22. 10. Promises and threatenings repeated.
- 22. 21. The blessing at the end.

LECTURE 706—730.

- 706. Against being corrupted by the favour of the world.
- 707. The sense of safety under God's protection.
- 708. That Satan is always warring against our souls.
- 709. The difference between real and apparent prosperity in the church.
- 710. The abominations of the popedom.
- 711. God's judgments against the worshippers of the beast.
- 712. The joy of the faithful, the misery of the wicked.
- 713. Assurance of mercy our support under the revelations of judgment given.
- 714. The impenitence of the sufferers. The rejoicing of the saints.
- 715. They that suffer, still will not repent.
- 716. The infatuation of the Romish church.
- 717. That secret unbelief is nigh to open infidelity.
- 718. God's people invited to come out from the corruption of Rome.
- 719. The end of serving mammon.
- 720. That we must give account of our stewardship.
- 721. That we must be made ready for closer union with Christ.
- 722. The infatuation of unbelievers.
- 723. The millennium; what it is, and what we may learn from it.
- 724. The interval between death and judgment.
- 725. The promises and terrors of the Lord.
- 726. The excellency of things heavenly.
- 727. The respect due to real greatness.
- 728. That we must watch against idolatry.
- 729. Prayer for the enjoyment of our Lord's promises.
- 730. Prayer for the grace of Christ.

THE NAMES AND ORDER OF ALL THE BOOKS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT,

WITH THE NUMBER OF THEIR CHAPTERS.

The GOSPEL according to S. MATTHEW	28
The GOSPEL according to S. MARK	16
The GOSPEL according to S. LUKE	24
The GOSPEL according to S. JOHN	21
The ACTS of the APOSTLES	28
The EPISTLE to the ROMANS	16
The FIRST EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS	16
The SECOND EPISTLE to the CORINTHIANS	13
The EPISTLE to the GALATIANS	6
The EPISTLE to the EPHESIANS	6
The EPISTLE to the PHILIPPIANS	4
The EPISTLE to the COLOSSIANS	4
The FIRST EPISTLE to the THESSALONIANS	5
The SECOND EPISTLE to the THESSALONIANS	3
The FIRST EPISTLE to TIMOTHY	6
The SECOND EPISTLE to TIMOTHY	4
The EPISTLE to TITUS	3
The EPISTLE to PHILEMON	1
The EPISTLE to the HEBREWS	13
The EPISTLE of S. JAMES	5
The FIRST EPISTLE of S. PETER	5
The SECOND EPISTLE of S. PETER	3
The FIRST EPISTLE of S. JOHN	5
The SECOND EPISTLE of S. JOHN	1
The THIRD EPISTLE of S. JOHN	1
The EPISTLE of S. JUDE	1
The REVELATION of S. JOHN the DIVINE	22

THE
NEW TESTAMENT
OF
OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO SAINT MATTHEW.

LECTURE 1.

That we should receive with thankfulness, and obey with love, the Gospel of Christ.

THE Gospel according to St. Matthew is the first in order of several distinct writings, which form what is called the New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. These works, taken altogether, contain the whole of what it has pleased God to have recorded, of his truth revealed to man, by his Son manifest in the flesh. And the word testament, meaning the same as a will, serves to signify both how great gifts are herein conveyed to us for an inheritance; and also how surely they are secured to us, by being sealed with what the apostle calls, "the death of the testator." Heb. 9. 16. God it is who made this will. God it is who thus disposed of that which was his own to give to whom He would. God it is, who, in the person of Jesus Christ, died for man. And by his most precious death man became entitled to eternal life. This Testament then is God's Testament. It is the written title of God's love to sinful man, and of man's undeserved inheritance in heaven with God. Let us value it, not merely as we would a document that proved our right to some unlooked for and large estate; but much more, as much, if possible, as heaven is better than earth, and the favour of God than the vain esteem of man.

And observe it is the New Testament. One there was before it, called the Old Testament, made on purpose to prepare the way for this. This is the New Testament; that which hath made the other old, that which maketh new all things else. For here we have a new covenant, and a new promise, a new commandment, and a new gift, the gift of the Holy Spirit of God, to make us a new heart, and to renew a right spirit within us. This is the new, it is the last, testament. It is the last revelation God has given, and it is the last he will give, for the instruction of mankind. It is the New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is the revelation of one who bought us with a price, and therefore is our Lord; who saved us from sin and death, and therefore is our Saviour; our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Let us receive it, as his faithful servants, with devout attention; with thankfulness and affection and zeal, as a people redeemed by his blood.

In this New Testament, which is often called altogether the Gospel, there are, besides other writings, four historical accounts of some chief particulars in the life and death of Christ. These are called by way of distinction, the four Gospels. For Gospel means good tidings from God to man. And the words and works, the life and death of Christ, are, beyond comparison, of all other tidings the best. On these are founded, and to these refer, the history of the Acts of the Apostles, their Epistles, and the Revelation of St. John, which is of the nature of an epistle to the seven churches in Asia. All rest on the one great fact, which it is the main business of the Gospels to relate, that "Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." 1 Tim. 1. 15. This is the light which the people that sat in darkness saw, and which is sprung up to them that sat in the region and shadow of death. See Matt. 4. 16. This is the kingdom of heaven which is proclaimed to be to all of us at hand. See Matt. 4. 17. This is "the dispensation of the grace of God," these "the unsearchable riches of Christ." Eph. 3. 2, 8. This is, in one word, the Gospel. Let us be joyful and thankful to possess it, to hear it, to read it, and to the utmost of our ability, to know and do it.

Of this Gospel there are four separate histories. St. Matthew the writer of the first was called, from being a publican, to be one of the twelve apostles. He had enjoyed therefore the advantage of being constantly in the company of our blessed Lord. What he had thus seen and heard he was guided by the Holy Spirit of God to set down without risk of error. Well may we praise God for having bestowed on one of the children of men this eminence of usefulness; for having guided the pen of a publican and sinner to edify the Christian world. For ourselves let us lay to heart the divine assurance, "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed." John 20. 29. Blessed are we who in the word of an apostle have the word of Christ, and in the word of Christ have the word of God. Blessed are we if having we believe, if believing we love, and with love obey.

God grant that we may receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save our souls! See James 1. 21. God grant that this Gospel may be unto us "the power of God unto salvation!" Rom. 1. 16.

The genealogy of Christ.

1 THE book of the ¹generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham.

2 ²Abraham begat Isaac; and ³Isaac begat Jacob; and ⁴Jacob begat Judas and his brethren;

3 And ⁵Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar; and ⁶Phares begat Esrom; and Esrom begat Aram;

4 And Aram begat Aminadab; and Aminadab begat Naasson; and Naasson begat Salmon;

5 And Salmon begat Booz of Raehab; and Booz begat Obed of Ruth; and Obed begat Jesse;

6 And ⁷Jesse begat David the king; and ⁸David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias;

7 And ⁹Solomon begat Roboam; and Roboam begat Abia; and Abia begat Asa;

8 And Asa begat Josaphat; and Josaphat begat Joram; and Joram begat Ozias;

9 And Ozias begat Joatham; and Joatham begat Achaz; and Achaz begat Ezekias;

10 ¹⁰And Ezekias begat Manasses; and Manasses begat Amon; and Amon begat Josias;

11 And ¹¹Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren, about the time they were carried away to Babylon:

12 And after they were brought to Babylon, ¹²Jechonias begat Salathiel; and Salathiel begat Zorobabel;

13 And Zorobabel begat Abiud; and Abiud begat Eliakim; and Eliakim begat Azor;

14 And Azor begat Sadoc; and Sadoc begat Achim; and Achim begat Eliud;

15 And Eliud begat Eleazar; and Eleazar begat Matthan; and Matthan begat Jacob;

16 And Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jesus, who is called Christ.

17 So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations; and from David until the carrying away into Babylon are fourteen generations; and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Christ are fourteen generations.

¹ Luke 3. 23. ² Gen. 21. 3. ³ Gen. 25. 20.

⁴ 1 Sam. 16. 1. & 17. 12. ⁵ 2 Sam. 12. 24.

|| Some read, Josias begat Jakim, and Jakim begat Jechonias.

⁶ Gen. 29. 35.

⁷ Gen. 38. 27.

⁸ 1 Chr. 2. 5. Ruth 4. 18.

⁹ 1 Chron. 3. 10.

¹⁰ 2 Kings 20. 21. 1 Chron. 3. 13.

¹¹ 1 Chron. 3. 16, 17.

§ 2. Christ made in the likeness of sinful flesh.

The Gospel of St. Matthew begins with an account of the genealogy of Christ, that is, with a list of the several successive persons through whom his descent was reckoned from Abraham down to Joseph. The extraction of Joseph, thus recorded, proves also the extraction of Mary the mother of Jesus; it being the custom of the Jews both to marry within the same family, and to reckon their genealogies by the males. Thus the first point established in the New Testament is, what has been called by an ancient father of the church, the manhood of God; the fact, most important in our redemption, that the eternal Word was in Jesus Christ "made flesh." John 1. 14. Let us not then be surprised if most times throughout the Gospel He is represented, and speaks of Himself, as the Son of man, rather than as the Son of God. Let us not hence derive any false impression as to his divine nature, and eternal existence. That He was truly God, one single assertion, and there are many to the purpose, is sufficient to prove. This once established, it was needful, for our encouragement in faith and hope, to remind us by frequent repetition that He was for us made truly man.

"The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." These two are thus particularly mentioned, because to them it had been promised that the Messiah should descend from their offspring: to Abraham, Gen. 22. 18, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed:" to David, Psalm 132. 11, "Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne;" that throne, of which it is elsewhere said, 2 Sam. 7. 13, "I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever." And further, both these persons, namely David and Abraham, were on some remarkable occasions made types of Christ, in their faithful obedience to the will of God.

It is to be noted, that, in this genealogy, the mothers are mentioned only in those instances, to which some real scandal was attached, or against which, at least, some objection might be likely to arise in the apprehension of the Jews. Thus "Judas begat Phares and Zara of Thamar;" a transaction most disgraceful to both parents; in which however the patriarch was forced to confess "She hath been more righteous than I." Gen. 38. 26. "And Salmon begat Booz of Raehab," whom St. James, 2. 25, calls "the harlot." "And Booz begat Obed of Ruth," that is, a "Moabitess," Ruth 4. 5, a stranger to Israel. And lastly, "David the king begat Solomon of her that had been the wife of Urias;" the very person with whom he had most grievously transgressed.

Here we see how our blessed Lord, in submitting to an earthly parentage, disdained not to have reckoned among his ancestors the chief of sinners. He came, the son of David, the son of Abraham, but the son also of the harlot, of the stranger, of the adulteress. Made He was "in the likeness of sinful flesh," Rom. 8. 3, and connected with a long line of parents subject to every human infirmity. And yet by the marvellous manner of his conception He was born without spot of sin; and yet by the indwelling of "all the fulness of the Godhead," Col. 2. 9, He was incapable of sinning. From his condescension, let us learn humility; from his mercy, love towards each other. Let us resolve, after this pattern of his love, to decline neither toil, nor pain, nor shame, in doing good unto mankind; even as He freely came down from heaven, and took on Him the seed of sinners like ourselves, that we might be made the children of grace, and inheritors of everlasting life.

The conception and birth of Christ.

18 Now the¹ birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.

19 Then Joseph her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

20 But while he thought on these things, behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost.

21 ² And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS: for he shall save his people from their sins.

22 Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying,

23 ³ Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and || they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.

24 Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife:

25 And knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son: and he called his name JESUS.

¹ Luke 1. 27.

² Luke 1. 31.

³ Is. 7. 14.

|| Or, his name shall be called.

§ 3. That we must be born again to newness of life.

Our Lord, we see from this passage, was “conceived by the Holy Ghost,” and “born of the Virgin Mary.” (Apostles’ Creed.) Thus was fulfilled a prophecy uttered by Isaiah seven hundred years before. Isa. 7. 14. Thus too are we prepared to regard Him as more than man, even as the only begotten Son of God. Had He been no more than a human prophet, the ordinary method would have sufficed for his nativity. But this miraculous conception confirms the assertion of the apostle, Heb. 1. 1, 2, that “God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son.”

And thus much is plainly signified by his very name, which according to the prophecy was to be Emmanuel, or, God with us; whereas the angel bade them call Him Jesus, “for he shall save his people from their sins.” Hence we learn that “a Saviour” and “God with us” mean nearly the same thing; and that the Son of Mary was both at once. For no one less than God was capable of making atonement for all the sins of us all. To be a Saviour therefore it was necessary to be God with us, to be Jesus He must needs be at the same time Emmanuel. And the angel and the prophet, though using different words, imply both of them the same thing, “to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself.” 2 Cor. 5. 19.

This then was his great object in so doing, “to save his people from their sins.” Now his people are all they who hear his word, who profess his faith, who bear his name. His people then are we; us would He save both from the punishment and from the power of sin. Let us then beware of regarding Christ, and his atonement, merely as a help to escape the consequences of transgression. Let us beware of supposing, that because we have God for our Saviour, we may therefore the more securely do wrong, therefore the more innocently neglect to do right. Far from it. He was called Jesus to signify that He should save his people from their sins; not merely from condemnation after offence, but from offending so as to be subject to condemnation. And sufficient as are his merits to atone for the sins of the whole world, yet those of us only must hope to profit effectually by his death, who by the influence of his grace are now renewed in our lives, so renewed, as to forsake sin and to become zealous of good works.

Let us then thus improve to our growth in holiness the nativity of our blessed Lord, that thus hereafter we may reap the fruit of it in happiness for ever. For “on this wise” was his birth, in order that we might enjoy a new birth; a birth, not like unto our own, in sin and sorrow, but like his, pure and without spot. He was made flesh, that we might walk in the Spirit. He dwelt among us on earth, that we might dwell with Him in heaven. And we here beheld his glory, that He there might reveal unto us a glory for ourselves. Let us lay to heart this great mystery of godliness, “God was manifest in the flesh.” 1 Tim. 3. 16. Let us note how plainly it is now to us revealed, and revealed for the very purpose that it may make us godly. We were lost, and He was born to save us. We were fallen, and He came to lift us up. We were weak, and He gives us strength; dead, and He raises us to life. This is our birth; this our new birth unto righteousness in Christ Jesus. This is the change wrought in us by his grace at baptism, and confirmed continually by his grace through life. We too come anew into the world, not indeed from glory into suffering and shame, but from shame and sorrow unto holiness and hope. Holiness in this life, and heaven in the next, these are the new faculties, this the new inheritance of our true Christian nativity. Ours they are through Christ’s birth; they are ours through his death. May He keep them ours by his guardian grace, and we, by the faithful service of our own devoted lives.

The wise men out of the east worship Christ.

1 Now when ¹ Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem,

2 Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.

3 When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

4 And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.

5 And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judæa: for thus it is written by the prophet,

6 ² And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall || rule my people Israel.

7 Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.

8 And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.

9 When they had heard the king, they departed; and lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.

10 When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.

11 And when they were come into the house they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they || presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.

12 And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

¹ Luke 2. 6.

² Mic. 5. 2. John 7. 42.

|| Or, feed.

|| Or, offered.

§ 4. That our worship must be spiritual.

These wise men from the east, or magians as they were called, were persons of distinction in their own country, both for sanctity and learning. They enjoyed by tradition some knowledge of the ancient prophecies relating to the Messiah. In consequence of these prophecies there was a general expectation throughout the heathen world that some great personage was at this time about to arise. We may consider therefore this visit of the magians, directed as it was by a star in the heavens, to signify the introduction of Christ to the Gentiles, to intimate that his birth concerned them no less than the chosen race of Israel. We see too in their conduct, as contrasted with that of Herod, a specimen of the obedience and of the disobedience fulfilled afterwards by each people respectively. He, who lived in the light of the law and the prophets, sought to know the place of Christ's abode, only in order to compass his destruction. Whilst the strangers of the east with devoted zeal pursued their way to the lowly manger, and offered reverently to the new born babe, gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.

Herod pretends a design to worship Christ that he may the better make sure of his wicked purpose. Here note how often flattery is employed not to conceal only, but to further, intended harm! Remark also how the information, which Herod and the chief priests furnished, served to assist the wise men in their search. So often is the malice of the wicked made by Providence to minister to the designs of the good! And whereas, in their simplicity they suspected no ill intention, and would have gone back to Herod as he bade them, they are directed by an angel to return another way. So true it is that they who put their trust in God need fear no manner of thing that is ill!

The gifts they offered were, no doubt, the most esteemed productions of their own country, designed to express their homage to Him before whom they fell down and worshipped. We who have the light of his example, and the benefit of his teaching, in the Gospels, must remember that the offering God best loves is a meek and quiet spirit, a faithful and obedient heart. Where these are wanting, vain is all other show of service. No formal worship, no offering of wealth, or of all that wealth can purchase, will be welcome, where the soul is dead, and the life unconformed to his will. Ours is a dispensation in which the widow's mite is preferred to the wisdom of the wise, to the gold, the frankincense, the myrrh of the east. Let us rejoice to think that we have within ourselves, through grace, each of us, the means, to offer what He will esteem, to whom belong all the treasures of earth, yea, all the glories of eternity.

Thus shall the star which troubled all Jerusalem fill us, as it did these Gentiles, with exceeding great joy. Thus shall the sovereignty of things earthly cease, and the dominion of Christ over our hearts be established in its stead. Herod may do his worst to maintain the throne of worldly state; in vain do the sensual, the covetous, and the proud, uphold, against the evidence of things unseen, the vanities of this present life. The true king of the Jews, the real sovereign of all the world, is Christ. Even He, who there lies in a manger, is King of kings, and Lord of lords. Him then let us adore, whether in the lowly condition of a child, or as sitting at the right hand of the Father, in the light that cannot be approached. As children of the faith of Abraham let us acknowledge his sovereign right to the best we have to offer. The star which guides us is his word. This let us follow diligently whithersoever it leads. Whether to the courts of princes, or to the cottage of the poor, whether to abundance or to want, to labour or to rest, to whatever duties or difficulties it points, only let us obey its heavenly direction, and in the end it will bring us to the presence of our Lord.

The flight into Egypt, the murder of the innocents, the return from Egypt.

13 And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him.

14 When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt:

15 And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, ¹ Out of Egypt have I called my son.

16 Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wise men.

17 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by ² Jeremy the prophet, saying,

18 In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, because they are not.

19 But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, 20 Saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young child's life.

21 And he arose, and took the young-child and his mother, and came into the land of Israel.

22 But when he heard that Archelaus did reign in Judaea in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither: notwithstanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aside into the parts of Galilee:

23 And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, He shall be called a Nazarene.

¹ Hos. 11. 1.

² Jer. 31. 15.

§ 5. Deliverance from spiritual fear and bondage.

The birth of our blessed Lord was soon followed by persecution⁶. Herod apprehending that Christ would prove a powerful prince, and be likely to interfere with his own sovereign authority, resolved by all means to destroy Him. For this purpose it was that he enquired so diligently of the wise men, v. 7, "what time the star appeared," and bade them when they had found the young child bring him word again. For the attainment of this object too he sent forth and slew all the male children in Bethlehem "from two years old and under," that is, all who had entered into their second year. So readily does ambition, whether in high or low, lead on the worldly mind from sin to sin! So easy is the progress from pride to jealousy, from jealousy to fraud, and violence, and bloodshed!

But the providence of God had in both cases effectually secured the life of the infant Jesus. The wise men were directed by a heavenly dream to depart into their own country another way. And Joseph was instructed, by the same method of revelation, to avoid the indiscriminate fury of Herod, by a private flight into Egypt. Thence, in due time, at Herod's death, he returned under the like direction towards Judaea; not indeed to dwell at Bethlehem, for fear of Herod's son, then reigning, but at Nazareth, a city of Galilee. So surely does the arm of the Almighty frustrate the malice of wicked men! So vainly do the "kings of the earth stand up, and the rulers take counsel together: against the Lord, and against his anointed." Ps. 2. 2.

Every thing connected with the infancy of Christ is seen in this history to have been conducted under express divine guidance. Four times already we have read of those heaven sent visions which the chosen servants of God had some method of distinguishing from ordinary dreams. Four times we have met with prophecy providentially verified; in the birth at Bethlehem, in the massacre of the innocents, in the return from Egypt, in the abode at Nazareth. Let us then by these things be reminded of the spiritual world in the midst of which we live. Let them quicken in us that saving faith which is "the evidence of things unseen." Heb. 11. 1. Let them relieve us under the pressure of spiritual fear; let them assure us of deliverance from spiritual bondage.

Around us live ministering spirits, angels, in number countless, mighty in power, commissioned to protect from harm the faithful servants of a heavenly Lord. Above, beneath, about, within us, is He who dwelleth in heaven, who preserves us, redeemed us, and makes us holy. Vain then are the arts of a deceitful world, vain the malice of evil spirits, shortlived the bondage of this Egypt of sin, in which for a while we are detained from the land of promise. What though no vision is now vouchsafed, no inspired dream to be expected, yet the same eternal Being who once ordered these miracles for our perpetual instruction, now dwells by grace in our hearts, there warns us against sin, there delivers us from its power, there urges us to obedience and heavenly hope. In his written word we enjoy our divine revelation, a vision of things heavenly not to be mistaken, a sure and certain direction of the way to eternal life, and a promise infallible of help to its attainment. Let us under that holy guidance walk ever in the path of God's commandments. Let us avoid danger, where we may without sin, by prudent flight. Let us be still mindful of the country we seek above, even when here we seem most remote from its enjoyment. Let us gladly turn aside from the strife of persecution, and from the bondage of iniquity, to dwell with Jesus in the peaceful Nazareth of a holy and religious life.

The preaching of John in the wilderness.

1 In those days came ¹ John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judæa,

2 And saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

3 For this is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, ² The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 And the same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins; and his meat was locusts and wild honey.

5 Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judæa, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

7 But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them,

³ O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits || meet for repentance:

9 And think not to say within yourselves, ⁴ We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

10 And now also the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: ⁵ therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

11 ⁶ I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

¹ Mark 1. 4. Luke 3. 2.
^a Ch. 7. 19.

² Is. 40. 3. Mark 1. 3.
^b Mark 1. 8. Luke 3. 16. John 1. 26.

³ Ch. 12. 34.

|| Or, answerable to amendment of life.

⁴ John 8. 39.

§ 6. That repentance is the due preparation for receiving the Gospel.

Not only is our Lord Himself the subject of prophecy, but even the office of his forerunner is distinctly foretold. This, as well as the place of his ministry, and the subjects he would chiefly insist on, all these are very plainly described beforehand by Isaiah. His dress and manner of life were suitable to his preaching, for he practised self denial, whilst he proclaimed repentance. The people whom he addressed were, as we learn from St. Paul, bent upon establishing their own righteousness. See Rom. 10. 3. The first steps therefore to be taken in preparing them for the Gospel were to make them conscious of sin, and to enforce on them the necessity of that hearty contrition without which no sin can be forgiven.

They resorted to the preaching of John, expecting to receive from him, as they had from the false prophets of those days, encouragement in their plans of temporal grandeur. They reckoned perhaps to find in him a successful leader, who should restore to Israel their lost dominion. They beheld instead, one who had not only renounced the glories of the world, but had denied himself also the comforts, yea, the necessities of life. They heard him proclaim no kingdom save that of heaven, no war save that against sin. They found him reproving even their honoured sects, the Pharisees and Sadducees, demolishing all vain trust in their father Abraham, and warning every one that they must repent in earnest, or be assuredly overtaken by the wrath to come. Nor does he assume in all this any authority to himself. On the contrary he plainly tells them, "he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." He shall purify our souls as metal in the furnace; consuming the image of the earthy, and bringing out the image of the heavenly. He shall, "gather his wheat into the garner," take into the arms of his mercy all true penitents; but sentence to destruction the vain, the negligent, the wilful sinner, "burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."

From this passage we may learn that the frame of mind most suitable for the due receiving of the Gospel is a state of sincere repentance. Those who for the first time hear it must repent, and so will become fit to hear it with profit. Those who have already heard it, but have not yet laid it to heart, must now repent, if they would henceforth effectually believe it. They must be changed in the inward disposition, in the mind, or heart, or soul; changed so as to love what before they hated, and to hate what before they loved; so as to hate the ways of sin, and to love the ways of holiness.

Further we learn from John's preaching and practice compared, that a conviction of the vanity of sensual delights is the first step towards a taste for things heavenly. Nothing is more inconsistent with true conversion of heart, than an indolent luxurious enjoyment of the good things of this world. For as a tree is known by its fruits, so will our repentance be esteemed, not by tears and sighs and professions, but by the change which ensues from evil unto good. "Every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire." What other then than this can be the end of that Christian, whose profession leads not to a holy life?

Lastly we see how vain is all trust in the mere possession of spiritual privileges, except according as we profit by them. To be children of Abraham, we need not indeed partake of his blood, but we must inherit his willing reliance on God, and his obedience to the divine commands. With faith such as he exerted, with repentance such as John enjoins, let us daily prepare our hearts for the final coming of our Lord. That so, when He shall purge his floor, we may through his merits and his grace be counted for that good grain, which is to be stored in heaven for ever.

John baptizeth Christ in Jordan.

13 ¹ Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

14 But John forbad him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

16 And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

¹ Mark 1. 9. Luke 3. 21.

§ 7. The new birth of Christians by baptism.

The office of St. John was to prepare the minds of men for the coming of Christ. He was reluctant therefore to officiate towards the person whose mere messenger he felt himself to be. "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me," I require that baptism of the Holy Ghost which Thou must dispense, "and comest thou to me," to my baptism of water only? "Suffer it to be so now," is the answer of our Lord, "for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." This means, that it became Christ to give the sanction of his example to John's baptism as a divine ordinance, and one which He meant to adopt in the Gospel. And it became John also to comply with the request of the Being, whom he confessed to be so much mightier than himself. And further, this ceremony appears to have signified the introduction of Jesus to the office of priest. For thus we read in Exodus 29. 4. "Aaron and his sons thou shalt bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shalt wash them with water."

Thus our Lord, we see, in entering on his priestly office, submitted to be baptized by one who had need rather to have been baptized by Him; teaching us thereby, whatever circumstances of advantage we may enjoy, so much the more diligently "to fulfil all righteousness;" and confirming the proverb of the inspired king, "Before honour is humility," Prov. 18. 12. Honour, truly, and that most signal, attended immediately on this act of humility. For at his baptism "the heavens were opened unto Him, and he saw the Spirit of God," the Holy Ghost, that is, "descending like a dove," coming down with like gentle movement, "and lighting upon him." The dove, the most harmless of birds, was, we know, the messenger of peace to the family of Noah in the ark, after their long tossing on the waves of the deluge. And now it is made the sign of that heavenly peace, which the ministry of Christ was to bring upon the earth, which the grace of God's Holy Spirit is able to confer amidst the troubled waters of this life's trial. Lighting on the "beloved Son," it testified to his divine parentage; as did also a voice from heaven, adding, "in whom I am well pleased."

So is it at the baptism He ordained for his disciples. Children, of wrath, by nature, we are hereby made sons of God. hateful through sin to Him who is of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, we are washed clean in the laver of regeneration, born again to a renewed nature, to new powers, to new hopes, to new privileges, to new duties. Let us perform those duties, improve those privileges, hold fast those hopes, and exercise those powers. Let us endeavour, as becometh us, "to fulfil all righteousness." Then shall the heavens be opened to us also, and He that dwelleth in them will acknowledge us for sons, in whom for Christ's sake He is well pleased.

For here note, that it was of Christ, and of Christ only, that this voice was heard, that these words were spoken. He alone it is throughout all this world below, in whom God is well pleased for his own sake. Not in man; for man is fallen. Not in us; for we are sinful. Not in all that He hath made, and once saw to be "very good," Gen. 1. 31; for all this hath fallen with our fall, and with ourselves is devoted to destruction. Only in Christ is God well pleased; only in Christ, and through Him and through his merits, in them that are Christ's. In the contrite sinner, in the sincere believer, in the obedient follower of Christ's example; in the meek, the pure in heart, the merciful, the peacemakers, in those who love as they have been loved by Him, and forgive as by Him they hope to be forgiven. In these, for Christ's sake, not for their own, but for his and for his only; in these, as in sons, is God well pleased. These doth He encourage by a voice from heaven, even by his word speaking peace unto their souls. To these are the heavens opened; that thence on them God's Spirit may descend, and thither draw them up hereafter to dwell with Christ for ever.

"Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!" 1 John 3. 1. God grant that the fire we have been baptized with, may light up in our minds clear views of Gospel truth, kindle in our hearts a holy flame of spiritual affection, consume all evil thoughts, all fleshly lusts, form like unto itself our earthly nature, and make our reluctant spirits mount upwards, in a life of thankfulness and love!

Christ is tempted of the Devil in the wilderness.

1 Then was ¹ Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.

2 And when he had fasted forty days and forty nights, he was afterward an hungred.

3 And when the tempter came to him, he said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread.

4 But he answered and said, It is written, ² Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

5 Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and setteth him on a pinnacle of the temple,

6 And saith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down: for it is written, ³ He shall give his angels charge concerning thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.

7 Jesus said unto him, It is written again, ⁴ Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

8 Again, the devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and sheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;

9 And saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.

10 Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, ⁵ Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

11 Then the devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him.

¹ Mark 1. 12. Luke 4. 1.

² Deut. 8. 3.

³ Psal. 91. 11

⁴ Deut. 6. 16.

⁵ Deut. 6. 13. & 10. 20.

§ 8. The use of temptation, and the means of subduing it.

Jesus did not of Himself seek these temptations, much less then may we presume to court any needless trial. Yet was He for this purpose “led up of the spirit into the wilderness.” And hence we may understand, that temptation, under the divine control, is administered for our exercise in obedience and faith. Convinced, therefore, that all things are ordered by God’s Holy Spirit for our good, let us, as St. James bids us, 1. 2. 3, “count it all joy when” we “fall into divers temptations; knowing this, that the trying of” our “faith worketh patience.” That it may more surely do so, to our endless comfort, let us note diligently what follows of our Lord’s temptation in the wilderness.

The tempter first appeals to the sense of hunger, “Command that these stones be made bread;” then to the pride of superiority, “If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down;” then to the love of this world’s pomps and vanities, “All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me.” In each case our Lord replies with words taken from the Scriptures of the Old Testament. He resists not by the manifestation of divine power, but by such weapons of warfare as are within the reach of every one of us, even “the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.” Eph. 6. 17.

For to us also does Satan apply the like malicious arts: to our lusts, to our pride, to our covetousness, to every evil passion we feel within us, offering opportunity, and whispering hope of safety. Let us then derive this lesson from the conduct of our heavenly Teacher, to resist firmly, by an entire reliance on God’s word, on God’s promise, on God’s aid. No temptation can possibly befall us, for which an appropriate defence may not thence be derived. Let us then lay to heart most earnestly those passages of holy writ which apply most closely to our besetting sins. Are we apt to be proud? Let us repeat to ourselves continually how God “giveth grace to the humble.” 1 Pet. 5. 5. Are we cross to each other? Let us say over and over again, “Blessed are the meek,” Matth. 5. 5. Are we covetous? Let us have ever ready to quote against ourselves, “Covetousness, which is idolatry.” Col. 3. 5.

And let us remember for our especial comfort the reflection of the apostle on this our Lord’s own case of temptation, Heb. 2. 18; “In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted.” He knoweth the better all our wants; and will the better help all our infirmities. Whilst here He abode in flesh as a man, not only did He in this one single instance discomfit the tempter, but He experienced also repeated efforts of his malice, in want and weariness, in sorrow, and oppression, and persecution, in the desertion of friends, and in the agony of death. But it is in heaven that now He dwelleth, and thence sendeth succour to them that are tempted. In Him therefore let us the more readily trust, not trusting so as to be idle ourselves, but so as to labour with more hope of success.

It was when Christ had been glorified at his baptism, “then” that He was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil. It is when we have by grace been brought most close to God, then we may most expect that He will lead us, as the Israelites, in the wilderness of temptation, to humble us, and to prove us, and to know what is in our hearts. See Deut. 8. 2. It is when we use all diligence in working out our own salvation, then it is that to reckon on God’s help is to trust with Christian faith. But to reckon on it when we wilfully do wrong, or idly neglect to do right, this is not to trust, but to tempt Him. Let us believe without presuming, and trust without tempting God. So shall he whom we resist flee from us; and, behold, angels will come and minister unto us! Sent forth we know they are “to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.” Heb. 1. 14. Let us hope then, if at least we have hope of heaven, let us hope that to ourselves they are sent. And when we consider that we are “compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses,” “let us run with patience the race that is set before us.” Heb. 12. 1.

Christ beginneth to preach, to choose his apostles, and to heal the sick.

12 ¹ Now when Jesus had heard that John was || cast into prison, he departed into Galilee;

13 And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim:

14 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

15 ² The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles;

16 The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.

17 ³ From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

18 ⁴ And Jesus, walking by the sea of Galilee, saw two brethren, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

19 And he saith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men.

20 And they straightway left their nets, and followed him.

21 And going on from thence, he saw other two brethren, James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ship with Zebedee their father, mending their nets; and he called them.

22 And they immediately left the ship and their father, and followed him.

23 And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people.

24 And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatick, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them.

25 And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judæa, and from beyond Jordan.

¹ Mark 1. 14. Luke 4. 14. John 4. 43.

|| Or, delivered up.

² Is. 9. 1.

³ Mark 1. 14.

⁴ Mark 1. 16.

§ 9. The nature of our Christian calling.

On hearing of the outrage offered to John the Baptist, our Lord departs from the neighbourhood; teaching us to avoid danger when we may, as well as to meet it fearlessly when we ought. The reason of his leaving Nazareth was the ill treatment He there received, as related by St. Luke, 4. 16—30. By coming to dwell at Capernaum, He fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, 9. 1. “The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up.” Hence we learn, first, that the Gospel was intended from the first to be spread abroad among the Gentiles as well as Jews. And secondly, that there is no ignorance so dark, no iniquity so hardened, but that it may be enlightened and reformed by its healing influence. The manner of that influence we may in some measure collect from the chief subject of our Lord’s first teaching. He “began to preach, and to say, Repent; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.” Repentance, which begins in sorrow, and ends in amendment of life, which consists in a thorough change of the inward disposition, from the love of sin to the love of holiness, which turns the thoughts from this world unto heaven, and the heart from this world’s vanities to the great God that reigns above, repentance, such as this, is the first ray of that light which beams from the Gospel on the soul of man.

In order the better to spread abroad this blessing, the apostles are appointed at the very beginning of their Master’s ministry; so that having heard all his words, and seen all his works, they might the better testify of these things to the world. And whom does the divine Teacher for this purpose first select? Not the eloquent, the learned, or the great; but, rather, a few plain fishermen of Galilee. By instruments thus evidently of themselves incompetent was the idolatry of the Gentiles discomfited, and the whole civilized world brought in subjection under the Gospel. An issue so strange, so beyond all reasonable expectation, so surpassing the means seen to be employed, as to force, both on them, and on us also, the conclusion, that “this is the finger of God.” Exodus 8. 19.

“They immediately,” that is, James and John, “left the ship and their father, and followed Him.” Here we see that there is no duty so sacred as that of following Christ, no business so important as to serve Him. The apostles were called to leave the very ship by which they earned their bread, nay, the very father whom they were dutifully assisting. And they left all, and followed Christ, even to persecution, disgrace, and death. Far easier is our call. To labour diligently for ourselves, to honour and support our parents, to live that life of faith and holiness which renders us at once respected by men, and esteemed for Christ’s sake by God; this is the sum of what is required to be done by Christians in general. Let not us then refuse to sacrifice any employments however profitable, any ties however dear, any sins however habitually indulged, when the word of Christ plainly requires it, for his service, and for our eternal good.

And whatsoever be the sickness that most affects our souls, whether fleshly lusts or regard for this world’s pomps; let us apply, like the people we here read of, to Him, who at his first coming healed thus freely all manner of grievous ailments. Readily we attend to each slight sickness of the body; and when we are seriously ill, we spare no pains, or cost, or self restraint, no distant consultation of the most eminent in skill, towards obtaining the recovery of the body. Much more then let us watch anxiously for the health of the spirit within. And in all its infirmities, let us have recourse with faith to the great Physician of souls.

Christ beginneth his sermon on the Mount.

1 And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him:

2 And he opened his mouth, and taught them, saying,

3 'Blessed are the poor in spirit: for their's is the kingdom of heaven.

4 Blessed are they that mourn for they shall be comforted.

5 'Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth.

6 Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: ' for they shall be filled.

7 Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy.

8 'Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

9 Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God.

10 'Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for their's is the kingdom of heaven.

11 Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of 'evil against you † falsely, for my sake.

12 Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you.

¹ Luke 6. 20.

² Ps. 37. 11.

³ Is. 65. 13.

⁴ Ps. 24. 4.

⁵ 1 Pet. 3. 14.

⁶ 1 Pet. 4. 14.

† Gr. lying.

§ 10. The beatitudes, or descriptions of persons blessed.

These three chapters, the fifth, sixth, and seventh, contain what is usually called our Saviour's sermon on the mount. He here expresses in a short and forcible manner some of the most important particulars of our Christian duty. In consequence probably of the miracles He had already performed, great numbers thronged to hear Him. He addressed Himself however chiefly to his disciples or apostles; whilst what He taught was of the deepest interest both to all his hearers, and to all mankind.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit;" that is, they who, being poor, are so also in spirit, are content to be poor, being humble in heart; all also, who, in any other situation of life, are like minded; content in all humility with such things as they have, with such treatment as they receive. This disposition seems to be first mentioned, because pride lies at the very root of man's transgression, and because humility is most absolutely necessary to his repentance and reform. "For their's is the kingdom of heaven;" that is, to them is allotted a sure portion in that state of peace, and hope, and glory which Christ in the Gospel proclaims. "They that mourn" are next blessed. They who grieve for their own sins, or, for the iniquity of the world; who when God is offended; when his majesty is affronted, his offers rejected, his goodness unrequited, either, as they must often see, in others, or, as they must often know in themselves; they who are thereby affected with real lively grief, even so as to do what people do that mourn in earnest, who shed tears, are sad in spirit, and take the less interest in the cares and pleasures of life; they are blessed. For "they shall be comforted." They shall be comforted now; they shall be comforted hereafter. They shall be comforted by the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, by his aid, by his inspired joy. They shall be comforted by the blessed sentence of that Judge who was Himself a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Isai. 53. 3.

"The meek," in like manner, are next blessed; and they are assured that "they shall inherit the earth." That is to say, they shall have a peculiar enjoyment even in this life, wherein few things so much embitter our existence as the dispositions opposite to meekness, namely, an angry, arrogant or contentious spirit. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness;" whose desire to do their Christian duty, and to be counted righteous for Christ's sake, is such as for strength and efficacy may be compared to these natural appetites. "For they shall be filled;" satisfied, yet never cloyed; fed continually, yet never surfeited; the spiritual feast enduring unto death, and furnishing the nourishment of eternal life.

The blessing of the merciful is, that "they shall obtain mercy." Have we then need of pardon? Let us not dare to seek revenge. Have we much to be forgiven? Let us then freely forgive; even after our heavenly pattern, unto the loving of those who most use us ill. The blessing of the pure in heart is, that "they shall see God." Would we then enjoy his presence, would we dwell in the light of his countenance, would we here behold Him with the eye of faith, and hereafter with the sense celestial? our rule is, that we be pure, that we abstain from every action, word, or thought, which approaches the impurity He abhors.

The peacemakers too are blessed, "for they shall be called the children of God." Brethren they are of that blessed Son who came down from heaven to reconcile to his Father lost mankind; brethren in their work of making peace, brethren in their title as children of the Most High, brethren in "the inheritance of the saints in light." Col. 1. 12. Lastly, there is a blessing, even "the kingdom of heaven," for those who are "persecuted for righteousness' sake." By which, we must observe, is meant the being persecuted, not for the profession, but for the practice of religion; not merely when men say evil of us, but when "falsely;" not when we submit to it for our own peace or gain, but when for Christ's sake. Persecution exactly such as this seldom can take place in a Christian country. But we may profitably call to mind this text whenever we incur censure, ridicule, or ill will, by the faithful discharge of our duty; and, in faithfully performing it, we may be encouraged by remembering that great is our "reward in heaven."

Who are the salt of the earth.

13 Ye are the salt of the earth: ¹ but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men.

14 Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.

15 Neither do men ¹ light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house.

16 Let your light so shine before men, ² that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

¹ Mark 9. 50. Luke 14. 34.

² Mark 4. 21. Luke 8. 16. & 11. 33.

|| The word in the original signifieth a measure containing about a pint less than a peck.

³ 1 Peter 2. 12.

§ 11. The effect of Christian example.

These verses were spoken to the disciples specially as teachers of others: But our Lord, in thus addressing them before the assembled multitude, designed also to interest all who heard Him in duties which to a great degree relate obviously to all. All do in some measure teach others, by their example for instance, and conversation, nay by their very character for good or evil. According as we are seen to be in earnest Christians, or to live regardless of our profession, we make others to glorify our Father which is in heaven, or we dishonour in their eyes the Lord who bought us.

To all then who are named Christians, to all, it may be truly said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." If sound, ye might keep by your holiness and faith the whole world from spiritual corruption. But if your own lives grow corrupt, then are you alike unprofitable to others, and miserable in yourselves. Thus is it in our power to help to keep in health the souls that are around us ready to perish; it is in our power, as a Christian family. For it is of no small moment for them to know of a whole family taking pains together in the service of a heavenly Master. What they see in our lives, hear from our lips, and meet with in our conduct, these things may convince them that piety towards God and love towards man both are, through grace, attainable, and when attained are full of joy. The salutary influence of each word we utter, each deed we do, each thought we think, may thus extend not to our neighbours only, but through them to theirs. And we may become so far the salt of the earth, that hundreds whom we neither know nor think of shall be the better and the happier for our Christian behaviour. But if Christians, who well know what their duty is, be found wanting in zeal and devotion, if, that is, "the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be salted?" by what means can they who already well know their duty be enabled, if they do it not, to know it better? They are thenceforth "good for nothing but to be cast out." Their attainments, thus disgraced by sin, will only ensure them the greater condemnation.

"Ye are the light of the world." This figure again, though most appropriate to our Lord's immediate disciples; well expresses the condition of every family that lives in the profession of the Christian faith. We "cannot be hid." How we live, and what we do, are well seen by all those who dwell around us. And here what a powerful motive have we all to set an example of industry and temperance, of gentleness, humility, and good will towards each other! What an argument for each singly to take care, that no misconduct shall arise, to bring scandal on the cause which we are bound to promote! In vain would we put the candle under a bushel; in vain indulge the hope that our conduct is of no consequence to others, that we may sin on without fear of doing them harm, or need not try to amend, in order to do them good. Being Christians, and professing to be Christians indeed, men will set us, as a candle on a candlestick, so our conduct will they set up as a direction to their own. Light we cannot help to give, whether we will or not. Light for evil or for good, to all that are in the same household of faith, to all that are in the same abode of earthly existence. An excuse they will derive from our neglect, if we be negligent; from our sin, if we transgress, a justification in sin.

Rather let us then endeavour that our light may "so shine before men," as for them to glorify our "Father which is in heaven." Not so as for them to glorify ourselves, but to glorify God. The one is vanity, the other devotion; the one presumption, the other humility. Let us then, whilst thus we seek to give good light, prove not only in our words, but by the very manner of all we do, prove how deeply we are aware, that we are ourselves all the while "unprofitable servants." Luke 17. 10. And whilst most earnestly by our patience in well doing, by our diligence, faithfulness, and charity, we are trying to win others unto holiness, let our hearts be the more alive to our own manifold failings; let us remember ever that it is the Lord that lights our candle, see Psalm 18. 28; and let our behaviour, if not our lips, continually proclaim, "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give the praise: for thy loving mercy, and for thy truth's sake." Psalm 115. 1.

Christ fulfilleth the law of the sixth commandment.

17 Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil.

18 For verily I say unto you, 'Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.

19 ' Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven: but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.

20 For I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

21 Ye have heard that it was said || by them of old time, 'Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment:

22 But I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.

23 Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee;

24 Leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.

25 ' Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him: lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison.

26 Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing.

¹ Luke 16. 17.

² James 2. 10.

|| Or, to them.

³ Exod. 20. 13. Deut. 5. 17.

⁴ Luke 12. 58.

§ 12. The Gospel enforces in a more full sense the Law and the Prophets.

The whole multitude who heard these words had been accustomed from infancy to hold in high reverence the divine dispensation under which they lived. Though they erred widely as to its spirit and intent, they were justly impressed with the conviction that it was ordained for their good by Almighty God. So that nothing would have made them more averse to receive the teaching of Christ, than a notion that He meant to destroy the law and the prophets. Here therefore He expressly declares beforehand, that He came not "to destroy, but to fulfil" them. The commandments which He was about to lay down were not to contradict those of Moses, but to enforce them in a more extensive sense. The doctrines He had to teach were not at variance with the teaching of the prophets, but were designed to explain further their holy lessons, and to apply them more closely to the hearts of the hearers. Thus it is that wilfully to break any one of our Lord's commandments, however comparatively small an one it may seem, either to break or teach others to break them, will prevent our advancement in the kingdom of heaven, nay, it will thrust us down to the very lowest place. For this would be a manifest violation of God's great design in both his revelations, the instruction of mankind in his will. Thus it is that our righteousness must exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees, by not consisting in the formal fulfilment of the commandments taken literally, but in readily applying to every event of life each separate precept of the Gospel, and in moulding our very inward dispositions after the pattern therein laid down.

This general principle is next explained in the case of the sixth commandment of the law. The scribes and Pharisees held themselves to have fully obeyed it, provided only they committed not actual murder. Not so must the Christian deem of this precept, as renewed, and fulfilled, that is fully and largely applied, by our Lord. Every word, look, or thought of evil, is to us sin, no less certainly than the act. Each provoking or contemptuous expression is shewn to deserve punishment, both in this world, and in the next. And the divine Teacher bids us leave even his own worship incomplete, his own gift unoffered on the altar, till we avoid this twofold curse by being first reconciled to our brother.

Who then, of us all, remembereth at this hour that his brother hath aught against him? Who is conscious of any grudge himself is cherishing, or of any that he has given cause, whether intentionally or not, for his brother to entertain? Who out of us that now are come together to offer on the domestic altar the gift of confession, prayer, and praise? First be reconciled. First, by all means, be thyself at peace, in thyself, at peace with all. Be reconciled, if it may be, as soon as possible, openly. Be reconciled, at all events, immediately, in thy own heart. So only can thy gift be acceptable. So only canst thou obey the command of God. For according to the Gospel of Christ, "whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." 1 John 3. 15.

In this way then Christians are here taught to apply every commandment in the law of Moses; to take it, that is, in a more full sense, and to extend it from the outward actions to the inmost thoughts. Thus is the axe most truly laid to the very root of the tree; and the character of each person is thus pronounced to consist in the purposes of the heart. In these are to be found, or in these are wanting, that love to God and to our neighbour, which is the fulfilling of all the commandments. See Matt. 22. 37, 39. By these purposes of love let us then now examine ourselves, for by these we must be judged hereafter. Where these remain corrupt, vain is all outside show of holiness. And only where these are conformed to the Gospel pattern of divine truth, can we be reckoned to have fulfilled the precepts of our law, or to have entered into the kingdom of heaven.

Christ further fulfilleth the Law in the seventh commandment.

27 Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, 'Thou shalt not commit adultery:

28 But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

29 'And if thy right eye || offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

30 And if thy right hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell.

31 It hath been said, 'Whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement:

32 But I say unto you, That 'whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery: and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced committeth adultery.

33 Again, ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, 'Thou shalt not forswear thyself, but shalt perform unto the Lord thine oaths:

34 But I say unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven; for it is God's throne:

35 Nor by the earth; for it is his footstool: neither by Jerusalem; for it is the city of the great King.

36 Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not take one hair white or black.

37 'But let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay: for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil.

¹ Exod. 20. 14.

² Ch. 18. 8. Mark 9. 47.

|| Or, do cause thee to offend.

³ Deut. 24. 1.

⁴ Luke 16. 18. 1 Cor. 7. 10.

⁵ Exod. 20. 7.

Levit. 19. 12. Deut. 5. 11.

⁶ James 5. 12.

§ 13. How we must restrain the lust of the eye and the license of the tongue.

We have seen already, in the case of the sixth commandment, how the Gospel destroys not but fulfils the Law. The same principle is here applied to the seventh, "Thou shalt not commit adultery." Purity, like kindness, to be a Christian grace, must be felt in the heart. Thence it is that evil thoughts arise, and there that they must be from the first suppressed. And whether it be with eye, or hand, that we are chiefly tempted to offend, that member we must restrain which lends its aid to sin, that thought cut off which prompts to hatred or to lust; lest also the whole body be cast into hell, the whole soul perish everlastingly.

To these general directions, we find here added a particular rule about divorcement. For the Jews, and much more the heathen nations of that period, held it lawful to put away their wives on the most trifling grounds. Thus the wayward inclinations of one party prevailed over those bonds which were ordained both as a remedy against sin, and for the mutual help and comfort that the one ought to have of the other. Thus strife and jealousy, confusion, and every evil work, took the place of what God in marriage had designed, domestic purity, and domestic peace.

Scandalous it is to the faith we profess, that in a Christian country the like offences should ever occur. And much it is to be regretted, that when they happen, they occupy both the thoughts and conversation of a neighbourhood. Remember, if such works of darkness are ever mentioned in your hearing, remember, the less you think of them, the less you speak of them, the better. The less pleasure you take in talking over the sins of others, the more likely you are to feel the weight of your own.* Let then any such extreme case of transgression make you consider how many risks you run yourselves, and how deeply you need the grace of God to preserve your feet from falling. Let it move you to give the more earnest heed to sober advice. Let it make you more distasteful of those vanities which prepare the way to ruin, and more distrustful of that ability of your own which is at the very best but weakness. Let it remind you to watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation; to watch and pray against whatever sin doth most easily beset you. And let it incline you to intercede for others also, even for these most flagrant offenders, in the charitable hope that it will please God, not only to strengthen such as do stand, and to comfort and help the weak hearted, but to raise up also them that fall, and finally to beat down Satan under their feet. (See Liturgy.)

And now further observe how Christ fulfils the Law, that is, fully interprets its meaning, in the important particular of swearing oaths. Because false swearing was prohibited, the Jews considered themselves allowed to swear in their ordinary discourse, provided only they took care to speak the truth. Our Lord shews that the forbidding of false oaths was but a step towards his more full prohibition, "Swear not at all." This is the rule of Christian perfection, this the state of things that would ensue, were but all men Christians indeed. No need to call God to witness, were we all honest and true, all sensible that whether we call on Him or not, He is witness to every word we utter! Were we meek, humble, self denying, and charitable, the plain utterance of yea or nay would answer every purpose of mutual information. "Whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." It cometh of the evil in our hearts, of our falsehood, our distrust of each other. It cometh of that evil spirit, who prompts the vain swearer wantonly to utter those profane words, of which he must give account hereafter.

Let us then not only never take God's name in vain, but promote also in all we say that practice of universal truth, which would make it plainly practicable to swear not at all.

Christ endeth the interpretation of the Law.

38 Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth:

39 But I say unto you, 'That ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also.

40 And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloke also.

41 And whosoever shall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.

42 Give to him that asketh thee, and 'from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away.

43 Ye have heard that it hath been said, 'Thou shalt love thy neighbour and hate thine enemy.

44 But I say unto you, 'Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and 'pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you;

45 That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust.

46 'For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same?

47 And if ye salute your brethren only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so?

48 Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

¹ Exod. 21. 24. Levit. 24. 20. Deut. 19. 21.

² Deut. 15. 8.

⁴ Levit. 19. 18.

⁵ Luke 6. 27.

⁶ Luke 6. 29. Rom. 12. 17. 1 Cor. 6. 7.

⁸ Luke 23. 34. Acts 7. 60.

⁷ Luke 6. 32.

§ 14. That we must overcome evil with good.

The Law had said in Leviticus 24. 20, "Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth." It allowed not this retaliation by way of private revenge, but ordained it for legal punishment. Hence the scribes and Pharisees, admitting that they were bound to love their neighbours, inferred what is nowhere written in the Law, that they were bound also to hate their enemies. But the severe retribution which the Law enforced was calculated not to encourage, but to check, the evil propensities of the heart. The unjust and violent were the less likely to do wrong to the peaceable and meek, under a system which required of every aggressor "eye for eye, and tooth for tooth." This was the first method of restraining wickedness, namely, severity of punishment immediately to be accomplished by lawful authority.

It is therefore in fulfilment of this very law, for it was for the more effectual attainment of the same object, that our Lord now teaches "resist not evil." For this end He bids us submit without retaliation, to blows on the person, loss of property, and oppressive exaction of labour. Nay, further, He urges us to meet them by a voluntary subjection to fresh indignities; "turn to him the other" cheek "also," "let him have thy cloke also," "go with him twain." This is the new and Gospel method of baffling wrong and violence, if not banishing it from the world. This is a method which, though it may sometimes fail in softening and converting the oppressor, is sure to exercise and to improve our own humility, charity, and self command.

Here is added in the same spirit an injunction that we should give and lend to all that ask of us. Not as though we have ability to give to all; but that we should desire to give to all if we could, and should give actually to all as far as we can. He that has wherewith to give should be as much concerned to find some one to give to, as they who are in want are anxious to find some one who will help them. He should be as much concerned, nay more; more in the same proportion, as "it is more blessed," it is the saying of the Lord Jesus, "more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20. 35.

Thus too, instead of hating our enemies, we are to "bless them that curse" us, "do good to them that hate" us, and "pray for them which despitefully use and persecute" us. Here we have the tongue, the hand, and the heart, all pressed into the service of our enemies: the tongue to bless, the hand to help for good, and the heart to pray for their eternal warfare. So might we overcome evil with good. So might enmity, hatred, and persecution, by the conduct of faithful Christians, and by the influence of faith upon their hearts, be gradually and utterly rooted out of the world. Difficult we find this method to fulfil for our own share; difficult to be, as we are here commanded, perfect, as is our Father which is in heaven. But remember, if we fulfil it not, we remain no better than publicans. If we love only our own families and friends, the natives of our own country, or members of our own church, what do we more than the heathen? Whilst in proportion as we love all mankind, we become children of that heavenly Father, who "sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." We are created anew in the likeness of that Son, who prayed for them that nailed Him to the cross, who died for them that crucify Him afresh. And we approach to the pattern of that Holy Spirit, who still, even to them which grieve and resist Him, continues, until the very end of life, to offer grace unto salvation.

Christ continueth his sermon on the Mount.

1 Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward || of your Father which is in heaven.

2 Therefore ¹when thou doest thine alms, || do not sound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

3 But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth:

4 That thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly.

5 And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

6 But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

|| Or, with.

¹ Rom. 12. 8.

|| Or, cause not a trumpet to be sounded.

§ 15. Of almsgiving and prayer; and of God's seeing in secret.

These injunctions of our Lord were directed against practices prevailing to a great degree among the Jews; namely, giving their alms in an ostentatious manner, and offering what should have been their solitary devotions in public and conspicuous stations. The rules here laid down for their instruction in these matters are applicable no less to us than to them. We have no less need than they to take heed that we do not our "alms before men, to be seen of them." And note, it is not merely the doing "alms before men," but the motive, "to be seen of them," this is what is here forbidden, this what we must take heed, very earnest precaution and pains, to avoid.

So also in the exercise of devotion, it is the desiring when we pray the praise of men, and not the mere praying in public, which is pronounced to be doing what the hypocrites do. In public we must needs often pray, as often as ever we pray together, either in a family, or in the congregation of the church. But even here we may apply this direction of our Lord. For here we may either pray with a desire to be seen of men, or with no regard to their presence or esteem. Let not then this vain desire actuate any portion of that service which is due to God Himself, and which we must render, if we would have Him accept it, entirely for God's own sake. Whosoever and wheresoever we pray, let our pure unmingled purpose be to be seen, to be heard, of Him.

Elsce is our lot cast for ever with the hypocrites, and our sentence pronounced in those awful words, "They have their reward." "They have" it. They have it now, in this world, such reward as this world offers; this is all that can possibly be gained by seeking the applause of men. This is the sentence of the hypocrites, to have here all that they are to have ever; to have nothing to hope for hereafter. This is "their reward;" not the reward of the faithful, not the "gift of God," not the blessing purchased by Christ for fallen man, imparted by Him freely to our prayers, and graciously by Him described as the reward of our devotion. Not this reward of his have they, but "their reward," that is, the praise of man on earth, laud hereafter "the wages of sin," the indignation of men and angels, and of God Himself, in the life that is to ast for ever.

He "seeth in secret." This is to be the motive of the disciple of Christ; the consciousness that God beholds him. This will help us to fulfil, to perform in a full and spiritual method, all the duties of almsgiving and prayer. An all powerful, all wise, all good Spirit is ever near us and round us; is privy to our very inmost thoughts, and views in every duty we perform the disposition with which we do it. He knoweth, not only what we do, but what we think, why we do it, for what object, with what design, what end. He knoweth it; and his knowing it is enough. Though man neither see nor suspect, though the left hand know not what the right hand doeth, though the nearest and dearest of our earthly friends scarce guess at the extent of either our gifts or prayers, they are only so much the more esteemed by our Father "which seeth in secret."

A deep conviction of this single truth, a continual sense of his continual presence, and of his knowing continually our most secret purposes, this will best secure in us the acceptable performance, not of alms only and prayer, but of every duty man has to perform, or God requires at his hands. Let us then, in all our thoughts and words and works, have regard to his all seeing eye. Let us consider first, in every thing we do, What will He think of it, what will He think of us? Let us esteem Him in our society to be that one chief Friend whose praise we most covet and whose censure we most fear. And let us look ever with hope to that reward of his, which through Christ, and through his merits, may in the end be ours.

God give us grace to see Him in all things, even Him who in all things seeth us. God make us to look mainly in all our doings to his will, even as He doth in all his dealings with us look only to our good!

Christ teacheth to pray.

7 But when ye pray, use not vain ¹repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking.

8 Be not ye therefore like unto them: for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him.

9 After this manner therefore pray ye: ²Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.

10 Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.

¹ Eccles. 7. 14.

² Luke 11. 2.

11 Give us this day our daily bread.

12 And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.

13 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, ~~for~~ ever. Amen.

14 ³For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you:

15 But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses.

³ Mark 11. 25.

§ 16. The Lord's Prayer explained.

Long prayers or frequent prayers are not what are meant by these vain repetitions. For our Lord Himself "continued all night in prayer." Luke 6. 12. And his apostle has enjoined on all Christians "Pray without ceasing." 1 Thess. 5. 17. The repetitions here forbidden in our prayers we must understand to be such as were used by the priests of Baal, 1 Kings 18. 26, calling "from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us." We have another instance of the like practice in the men of Ephesus, Acts 19. 34, who "all with one voice about the space of two hours cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians." They, it seems, thought they should be heard through their much speaking; so as to communicate their wants, and to enforce their wishes. We on the contrary acknowledge of our heavenly Father that He is "more willing to hear than we to pray," (Liturgy;) and we are here assured by Christ Himself, that He "knoweth what things we have need of before we ask." We ask then, not for his information, but for the expression of our own humble dependence, and out of a conviction that thus it is He best delights to give. We ask because He hath said, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Matt. 7. 7. And whatever we repeat in our prayers, is only that we may renew our devotion, only that by our attention at one time we may make up for the wandering of our thoughts at another.

For our direction we have here a form of words set down by our Lord, which should both frequently be used as a prayer, and may be taken also for a pattern of what all our prayers should be. "Our Father." We are to address the Almighty as a Father, to pray to Him, with reverence and love, as to one who made us and careth for us. "Which art in heaven;" who dwellest not visibly on earth, but whom by faith we see, or ought to see, in heaven thy dwellingplace. "Hallowed be thy name." We desire that thy holy Name may be worshipped devoutly by all. "Thy kingdom come." We pray that soon may be consummated, both in earth and heaven, the happiness thou hast revealed to mankind, soon the period of our warfare be accomplished, soon arrive the time when the knowledge of Thee shall cover the earth, and sin and sorrow shall be no more.

Meanwhile we pray further, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Give grace to us and to all mankind, that we may both know and do thy will; conforming to it the desire of our hearts, and exercising our souls in its devout fulfilment. "Give us this day our daily bread;" "neither poverty nor riches." Prov. 30. 8, neither want nor excess, but, according to our several stations, the food convenient for us. And yet rather to our souls impart the bread of life, such measure of divine grace as may ever from day to day, whilst life endures, stablish, strengthen, settle us. See 1 Pet. 5. 10. "And forgive us our debts," the many sins we commit, the many trespasses we are guilty of, the many debts we owe to Thee. Forgive them, O Lord, even as Thou hast bidden us to forgive those who thus owe to us, and even as by thy grace we desire and endeavour most entirely to do. "And lead us not into temptation;" not into any more, or more severe than we can bear. "But deliver us from evil;" save us in each trial Thou orderest for us, save us from the power of the evil one, from the evil contagion of a wicked world, from the evil influence of our corrupted nature. "For thine is the kingdom;" Thou rulest over all: thine "the power;" the power to support, to deliver, to save: thine "the glory;" the glory of all the good we do, of all the good we enjoy, of our creation, preservation, and redemption; "for ever," to all eternity.

Such is the prayer which our Lord has set forth for our instruction. Let us endeavour to pray always "after this manner;" always for spiritual rather than temporal blessings; always with the fervent desire of the inmost heart. Therein let it be our first aim, when praying, to cherish fervent love towards God and man. And often as, either in these, or in any other words, we seek what most we need, the forgiveness of our sins, let us remember the condition here so powerfully enforced; it is only if we "forgive men their trespasses" that our heavenly Father will also forgive ours.

Of fasting ; and where our treasure is to be laid up.

16 Moreover when ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward.

17 But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head, and wash thy face;

18 That thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret: and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly.

19 Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal:

20 ¹ But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal:

21 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

22 ² The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light.

23 But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

¹ Luke 12. 33. 1 Tim. 6. 19.

² Luke 11. 34.

§ 17. The duty and manner of fasting ; the cure of covetousness.

Fasting is to deny ourselves, either in quantity or kind, the food we feel inclined to take. Of this practice, as a religious exercise, we find traces in almost all parts of Scripture history. But though it is evident from several passages in the New Testament that Christians are expected on due occasions to fast, we find nowhere any very particular directions for so doing, nor any where, except in this passage, any directions at all. Hence it follows that the season and the degree of fasting are left to the ordering of the church, and to the decision of each man's own conscience. Hence too we may learn the error of the Roman church, in enacting rules about fasting, so minute and vexatious, as to have brought the ordinance itself into very general disuse.

Viewed justly, as in our own church, fasting is an exercise of the power to controul our appetites. It is "such abstinence" as may help to subdue our "flesh to the spirit." (Liturgy.) And whensoever it is undertaken in earnest, for that end, it will both promote our growth in Christian piety, and be rewarded by our Father which seeth in secret. But for this purpose it must be done in secret; done, at least, without ostentation, without design for it to be seen of men. "Anoint thine head and wash thy face;" that is, appear as usual, make no show of change in your outward dressing. In common with prayer and alms, and every other offering of religious duty, fasting is rendered worse than worthless by being done out of regard to the world's applause. It may be that others many times cannot help but see our good works. This however is quite a different thing from our doing them with a view to their being so seen. No; if we are desirous of glory, let us not be content with the praise of men. But let us remember that we are surrounded with "spiritual witnesses, that angels from above behold our faith, and rejoice over our repentance. And let our motives be all calculated for the praise of that heavenly Father which seeth in secret. So shall He reward us openly; proclaiming before assembled worlds the praise of them, who in all their work, of worship, and of love, aim only at being seen of Him.

Our Lord having thus, in the matter of fasting, struck at the very root of all pride and spiritual conceit, proceeds next to denounce another very grievous evil, namely, covetousness. In order to cure us of this malady, He first points to the perishable nature of all earthly wealth, and contrasts with it the security of treasure in heaven, which He assures us will endure undiminished for ever. This single consideration might serve to take off our fond affection from this world's goods, and to turn our views to the promised riches of eternity. Many times those things we here most covet fail us when most we reckon them our own. In any case we ourselves must at last leave them, leave also the world they belong to, and go to a world where they cannot follow us.

In the next place He reminds us that wheresoever we lay up our treasure, there will our hearts be also. How can we then endure to have the heart confined to earth? How allow that soul, which came forth from God, to be tied down to the gross and vain enjoyments of a world that soon passeth away? How bear to hinder it from soaring to the possession of its native light, to the enjoyment of that heaven, which lost as it has been by sin, we may yet, every one of us, through grace regain?

But, thirdly, this would be as though the very eye, which should enlighten and guide the body, were itself to become dark with blindness. For then should we wander in ignorance and error, trembling when least in danger, and rash when on the verge of destruction, eagerly pursuing trifles of no worth, and heedlessly passing by the pearl of inestimable price. Such is that great spiritual darkness that ensues, when the light which is in us becomes darkness; when the reasonable soul is blind to the truth of things spiritual, is insensible to God's love, and to heaven's value; when it takes for its wealth those treasures which "moth and rust doth corrupt," and "thieves break through and steal." Let us then always endeavour to see clearly and correctly with the eye of the inmost soul; and, fixing it on those things above, which Christ has revealed to our faith, there lay up our treasure, by here serving Him; and there, by here loving Him, set our hearts also.

Christ exhorteth not to be careful for worldly things.

24 ¹ No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

25 Therefore I say unto you, ¹ Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

26 Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

27 Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

28 And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

¹ Luke 16. 13.

29 And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

30 Wherefore if God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?

31 Therefore, take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

32 (For after all these things do the Gentiles seek:) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

33 But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

34 Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

² Luke 12. 22. Ps. 55. 22. 1 Pet. 5. 7.

§ 18. That we should seek first the kingdom of God.

That it is impossible to serve two masters is proved by the experience of human affairs. Hence we may better understand, and should more readily admit, that we cannot serve both God and mammon. If then we would escape captivity to this world's lusts, and be in earnest servants of God, we must adopt the Gospel principle, to take no thought, that is, to cherish no painful anxiety, for the comforts and enjoyments of this present life. This lesson we have here inculcated by the testimony of all things that we see around us. The firmament above, the earth below, the grass of the field, and the fowls of the air, proclaim aloud to man the providence of their almighty Maker. What folly then for us, who, by the exertion of our utmost power, can add not one cubit, nay no measure however small, to our stature, what folly, as well as sin, is it in us, to distrust the fatherly care of the God who giveth us our being!

True it is that we have to work, and to provide for ourselves. True it is, that labour is our appointed lot, industry and exertion our bounden duties. But so much the more should we watch, and take heed, lest they become a snare unto our souls, by engrossing that attention, and exciting that anxious thought, which are due only to life eternal. And therefore does our blessed Lord first expose the folly of laying up treasures on earth, by shewing us that we cannot amass them, at once both here and in heaven, any more than we can at once serve two masters. And next He lays bare the very root of covetousness, by bidding us take no thought of the kind for the morrow of this world's brief existence. Sufficient unto us, He argues, is the evil of each present day. Sufficient the trials and difficulties which beset us each hour as it successively arrives. Let us not add to them the apprehension of events which may never happen, of wants which, very probably, we may never feel. Let us bend rather the whole force of our thought to avoid the evil immediately before us, to be found faithful in those trials which each day brings forth. And whenever we would think of more than is yet present, let us carry on our views, beyond the short period of this world's time, to a morrow which never fails, whose sun will never set.

Eternity is before us. To live for ever in the presence of God, in the beholding of his countenance, in the enjoyment of his glory. This is the morrow we might do well to take thought for, to long after, and meditate on continually. Yet it is this, rather than the morrow of the life that now is, which we are apt to leave unprovided for by any care of ours, apt to let take thought for the things of itself! Let us not so pervert the sober calculations of our own understanding, as to neglect, for what we know to be uncertain, that which we are sure will last for ever. Let us not so violate the plain command of Christ, as to be seeking mainly, like the Gentiles, what we shall eat, or what we shall drink, or wherewithal we shall be clothed. But considering rather how short is our utmost time, and how uncertain our enjoyment even of one tomorrow more, let us employ diligently each moment as it comes in preparation for that state which has no end.

The way of doing so is here plainly set down. It is to seek "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness;" whatever we are doing, to make this our chief business; whatever we have next to do, to do this first of all. To seek the kingdom of God, that is, his future glory, his present grace; and his righteousness, that is, the holiness of life He commands, and the righteousness which is by faith in Jesus Christ. This is the provision we have to make. And this is the method we are to take, besides meditating on heaven and desiring it, to labour also after it, by holiness of life. Then shall all these things also be added unto us. In such measure as God knows to be for our good, He will give us the comforts of this world for a time, whilst He reserves for us an inheritance in heaven for ever.

Christ forbiddeth to judge.

1 Judge 'not, that ye be not judged.
 2 For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: 'and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.

3 'And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

4 Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

5 Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

6 Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.

¹ Luke 6. 37. Rom. 2. 1.

² Mark 4. 24. Luke 6. 38.

³ Luke 6. 41.

§ 19. How we may not judge.

The Gospel in several instances contains precepts which at first sight appear inconsistent with each other; but which on careful comparison serve only so much the better to enforce the one uniform system of Christian truth. For each passage serves as a check in the interpretation of the other, to prevent us from ever applying the words of Scripture in any other sense than that which they were designed to bear. Thus this command that we "judge not" seems at variance with our Lord's instructions to the apostles, "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault." Matt. 18. 15. It is opposed also to the direction given afterwards in this chapter, ver. 20, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." Nay it seems scarce to be consistent with the very words which follow, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine." For ere we obey this precept, we must judge some to be swine and dogs.

This very opposition and seeming variance is however, as was said, well calculated to make plain our line of Christian duty. For the necessity of our judging in some cases, serves to shew us in what cases we are to "judge not." That some men notoriously transgress, that some commit sins which others avoid, and violate obligations which others observe, we cannot fail to be in general aware of. Nor can we help sometimes noticing in individuals those gross instances of misconduct, which exceed the common measure of human iniquity. Our Saviour then would not bid us shut our eyes to the scandal of persons such as these. He would rather have us note their conduct, that we may renounce their principles, and avoid their society. And specially, whilst they continue obstinate in such sinful courses, He forbids us to waste on them the precious pearl of spiritual instruction. That is, we are not to give it them except with caution, and with prospect of success; lest like the dogs and swine whom in their lives they resemble, they should either hurt their instructors, or profane things holy by their scorn and abuse.

And yet even to such as these must we in one sense extend the precept, "Judge not, that ye be not judged;" that is, Judge not of the future eternal condition, judge not rashly of the present spiritual state, of any one among the children of men. We have each enough to do in the examining and judging of ourselves. To cast out the beam that is in our own eye, is ample employment, without our looking after the mote that is in our brother's eye. If we consider how many things we do, which we know we ought not, and how many we leave undone which we know we ought to do, how many good resolves we daily break, how many ways of being better, holier, and more heavenly minded, we heedlessly or even wilfully neglect; if these things we well lay to heart, we shall become too deeply occupied with our own repentance and amendment, to speculate unprofitably on the salvation or condemnation of our neighbours.

Their present actual outward conduct we cannot indeed help beholding. And we do well so far to observe it, as to determine whether we had best seek or avoid their company, to watch when we may offer to them religious exhortation, with best prospect of success instead of scorn. But of their final sentence from that Judge who knoweth the heart, to decide correctly is not in our power; to attempt it is forbidden, is sin. Rather let us hope, even in the worst we know of, that many circumstances, unknown to us, may extenuate, in God's sight, and in their case, conduct which in ourselves we feel would be unpardonable. Rather let us fear, lest our own progress in piety, when estimated by our greater means of improvement, should be counted inferior to theirs. And remembering that there are "last which shall be first," as well as "first which shall be last," Luke 13. 30; let us hope all things of all, see 1 Cor. 13. 7; and desire to mete to all with that measure, with which we would wish to have it measured to us again.

Teach us, O Lord, to judge righteous judgement. See John 7. 24. Teach us to judge ourselves strictly, our neighbours charitably. Teach us to judge, where we must, with mercy. And where we need not, teach us to "judge not" at all.

Christ exhorteth to prayer.

7 ¹ Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:

8 For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.

9 Or what man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone?

10 Or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?

11 If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?

12 Therefore all things ² whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets.

¹ Ch. 21. 22. Mark 11. 24. Luke 11. 9. John 16. 24. James 1. 5, 6.

² Luke 6. 31.

§ 20. The nature and efficacy of prayer.

The precepts already considered, in this sermon on the mount, are enough to make the most sanguine of us exclaim with the disciples, "Who then can be saved?" ch. 19. 25. Our righteousness, we are here told, must not only "exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees," ch. 5. 20, but must have for its aim and rule that we be perfect, even as our "Father which is in heaven is perfect." Ch. 5. 48. Our conduct must be ever directed, not to satisfy the views of those who behold our outward actions, but to please a Father "which seeth in secret." Ch. 6. 4. Our treasure must be laid up where "neither moth nor rust doth corrupt." Ch. 6. 20. Our thoughts must be engaged, not by the vain morrow of this world, see ch. 6. 34, but by the distant glories of eternity. And many doubtless are hence tempted to say in their hearts, This burden is too heavy for us, this piety impossible to flesh and blood. Here therefore the divine Teacher encourages us by promising, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." There is One to whom all things are possible. And here we find how we may obtain his help. With Him all things will be possible to us also; even for the once sinful heart to bring forth the fruit of holiness; for our flesh to be subdued to the Spirit; for our corrupt affections to be purified by his love; for the soul, however deeply it may have been engrossed with the cares of its earthly sojourn, to desire above all things "to depart and to be with Christ." Phil. 1. 23.

Let us never then, for one moment, shrink from the high standard of Christian duty, on the plea that it is above our reach. Let us not flag in the prescribed course towards perfection, out of a fainthearted distrust of the possibility of attaining it. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Rom. 8. 31. If we may have help of Him, what is there we need fear to undertake? Hath He not given for us his own Son? and will "he not with him also freely give us all things?" Rom. 8. 32, all things good for us? all things necessary for the fulfilment of that duty He hath enjoined, for the attainment of that heaven He hath promised? Shall the earthly parent be found willing to indulge his children in each reasonable request, and can we doubt that our Father which is in heaven will "give good things to them that ask him?" Nay, surely, with his aid, we may prevail. We may accomplish the love both of God and of our neighbour. We may so behave to all the rest of mankind, that whatsoever we would have them do to us, "even so" we shall do unto them.

Let us set before ourselves no less than thus to fulfil the law, the prophets, and the Gospel of Christ. But not, let us remember, not in our own strength. And further, let us remember that if we would have God's help, we must ask, we must seek, we must knock. To ask alone is not to pray. Besides asking with our lips, we must seek; that is, we must use means, use diligent exertion, with the earnest desire of our hearts. And further, we must knock. For in every good we desire there is usually some hinderance, some bar or bolt of difficulty in our way, which would tempt us to relax in our petitions. Here then we must knock with importunity, till stronger hands than ours open to us in due time.

Have we then, any of us, prayed hitherto in vain? But how have we prayed? with faith, nothing doubting? with zeal, nothing failing? with affection, nothing doating on the world we renounce, nothing divided between heaven and earth, God and mammon? Have we felt our necessities? Have we asked as desiring? Have we sought as for a paradise lost by sin? Have we knocked as at a door, guarded by a flaming sword, but leading to the mansions of eternal bliss? If not, no wonder we neither receive, nor find, nor have it opened to us. We have not prayed. If we had, we have God's word for it, we should have been sure to be heard. To say prayers, this is not to pray. To repeat with the lips a devout form of devout words, this is not to pray. To pray is to desire in the heart, to desire of God what He alone can give. It is to put up from the inmost soul, whether with words or without, the offering of a humble dependance on the Giver of all good things. He which "seeth in secret," ch. 6. 6, heareth also in silence; feelth the movement of each contrite soul that draws near in faith unto Himself. Let us, then, whatever prayer we offer, ask believing. For thus hath our blessed Lord elsewhere assured us, ch. 21. 22, "All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive."

Christ exhorteth to enter in at the strait gate.

13 ¹ Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat:

14 ¹ || Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

15 Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves.

16 Ye shall know them by their fruits. ² Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?

17 Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit.

18 A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

19 ³ Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

20 Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them.

21 Not every one that saith unto me, ⁴ Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.

22 Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?

23 And then will I profess unto them, ⁵ I never knew you: ⁶ depart from me, ye that work iniquity.

¹ Luke 13. 24.

|| Or, How.
² Luke 13. 27.

³ Luke 6. 43.

⁴ Ch. 3. 10.
⁵ Ps. 6. 8.

⁶ Rom. 2. 13. James 1. 22.

§ 21. The vanity of profession without practice.

In proportion as the rule of the Gospel is pure and practical, the mind of man being corrupt, is apt to explain away its application and force. Our Lord therefore concludes this plain account of Christian conduct, by warning us how greatly we are in danger of extenuating its solemn obligations. The wide gate, He speaks of, and the broad way, are those various false methods of religion which men have from time to time adopted, instead of the true one; deceiving themselves by the hope, that heaven may be attained by some easier service, than devotion of heart, and holiness of life. The false prophets are they who thus promise "peace; when there is no peace," Jer. 8. 11: who teach men to seek for salvation by means other than that faith in Christ which produces the fruit of good works. These are the corrupt trees that bring forth evil fruit. These are they that cry unto Jesus, Lord, Lord, without doing the will of his Father which is in heaven. These are they who make boast of what they have done in his Name; and yet must receive, notwithstanding, the fearful sentence, "I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

Scarce any kind of false religion has prospered in the world, which does not offer salvation, on terms in some sense easier, than those which the Gospel enjoins. And this is the chief reason why false religions have so generally prevailed. Men love darkness rather than light, because their works are evil. See John 3. 19. All mankind, doubtless, wish to go to heaven. All wish, rather than not, to be happy when they die. But yet many resolve here to enjoy first, as long as may be, the pleasures of sin. Many desire here to avoid, as far as can be, the work of righteousness, the humiliation of faith. To believe in what they cannot here see, to labour for that meat which here they cannot thoroughly enjoy, this they are reluctant to undertake, though it, and it alone, endureth unto everlasting life. Eagerly therefore they close with any false form of religion which pretends to allow their indolence or iniquity, and yet promises to make all right at the last.

Nor is this error confined to the profession of a false religion. In some shape it besets all; even those of us who hold the faith most true, and have been brought up in communion with a church most pure. Many times, and many ways, we are tempted, all of us, to start aside into some broad and easy track, out of the narrow and up hill path of Christian perfection. But when the difficulties of the Gospel thus go nigh to affright us, we should do well on the other hand to consider the difficulties of rejecting the Gospel. Who can "dwell with everlasting burnings?" Isaiah 33. 14. We are born under sentence of eternal death. At an hour we know not of, we shall be summoned before the judgment seat of Christ. The great points to be then inquired into are our faith and obedience, not in a religion of our own devising, but in that which is set forth in his word. What will it then avail us to have professed his Name? Nothing; unless we have obeyed his will. What to have owned the truth of his Gospel in general? Nothing; unless we have followed it, in its several particulars. Of what use will it then be to us to plead his precious death, if it hath wrought in us no mortifying of the flesh, no effectual dying unto sin? Of what use to glory in his resurrection, if we have never risen again from sin to walk in newness of life?

Never then let us cease to watch against a peril so imminent, against a delusion so fatal to our soul's health. Never let us dare offer to Him who seeth the heart, instead of real inward devotion, any formal outward service, any sacrifice, of mere man's invention. Narrow is the way wherein we have to walk, strait the gate through which we have to enter. Let us be aware that such is the nature of our pilgrimage. And when most we find all things smooth to us, then let us most suspect, that in some point our conscience is asleep, our duty neglected, and our progress towards perfection at a stand. That so we may be neither deluded by the prophets of smooth things, nor by the fair show of trees whose fruit is corrupt: but, finding the true way that leadeth unto life, we may be counted, through the merits and mercy of our Lord, to have done the will of our Father which is in heaven.

Christ teacheth us not to be hearers only but doers of the word.

24 Therefore 'whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock:

25 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock.

26 And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand:

27 And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it.

28 And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, ² the people were astonished at his doctrine:

29 For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.

¹ Luke 6. 47.

² Mark 1. 22. Luke 4. 32.

§ 22. That the Christian life must be built on the foundation of Christ.

To hear and to do these sayings of Christ is the only way to build on a foundation that will never fail. That foundation is the promise of God; that rock is Christ Himself. He it is, and his death, on which we build; the atonement He made for sin, the covenant He hath sealed for our redemption. The method of our building is faith. For it is by faith that we lay hold of the promises, by faith that we are justified, by faith that we are admitted into the covenant of grace. The building to be raised is holiness of life. It is a heart devout, pure, and charitable. It is a spirit that is in all things purposing to be conformed to the will of God. Against that which is thus fitly framed together in the soul, thus firmly founded on the sufferings of Christ, in vain does the rain descend, the storm of temptation pour. In vain do the floods come, and the winds blow; whether from without they be the snares of the world, or the violence of passion from within. It falls not; for it is founded on a rock. It falls not; for that rock is Christ; and Christ is God.

How foolish then are they, who, on the sand of this world's foundation, build the Babel tower of wealth, of indolence, and luxurious living, of worldly pleasure, or of worldly gain; rearing with vain labour a work that is sure to fall to their destruction! How entirely is it our wisdom to do according to the sayings of our Lord, that so our work may endure for ever! He taught "as one having authority;" as One who had the power to enforce what He commanded, and to fulfil whatsoever He promised. Let not us then, like those who first heard Him, be content with being "astonished at his doctrine." But let us receive it with thankfulness, study it with attention, believe it utterly, and thoroughly obey it. The more we devote ourselves to do so, the more deeply we shall become convinced of its heavenly nature, the more entirely we shall be absorbed in the only one pursuit worthy of our care, the saving of the soul. The higher we advance in this spiritual building, we shall find our sight of truth continually extended, our field of duty widened, and the boundless horizon of perfection ever further and further enlarged, to our anxious and admiring view. So much the more should we rejoice, so much the more stedfastly continue our heaven directed efforts, and press forward to the prize of our high calling. Our toil may be irksome, but God will give us strength; our hazard great, but He will make us safe. The work we have in hand is founded on a rock, and we have his own assurance, that it shall never fall.

This assurance we may apply profitably, if soberly, to the prospect held out to us in Scripture of our own final perseverance. No drawback could be more injurious to our Christian progress than an apprehension that we were likely in the end to perish. Nor can any encouragement to our zeal be more effectual than the conviction that we shall in the end overcome. The enemy therefore of man, the enemy of man's salvation, would fain fill us with misgiving and doubt. He sets before the mind its expected series of many times repeated trials; and suggests the faithless question, "Where is the promise of his coming?" 2 Pet. 3. 4. Thus would he promote our backsliding, by inducing us to despond. Without falling into his other snare of presumption and spiritual pride, let us ever closely lay to heart this encouraging representation of our Lord: "It fell not; for it was founded upon a rock." Let us but be careful to build on Christ, to build with faith, and to build holiness of life; and then we may be sure that what we build shall in no wise fall. His grace is sufficient to make us persevere to the end. A mansion eternal in the heavens awaits our joyful arrival. A house not built with hands, a happiness, a glory no work of ours could earn, is ensured to us by the love of God; who so loved the world, as to give his Son, to the end that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3. 16. He that hath worked will work, if only we work also. He will provide, if only we be not wanting in that which He has put in our own power, He will provide strength unto salvation.

God give us the grace to feel that his "grace is sufficient" for us! 2 Cor. 12. 9. God help us to be not "weary in well-doing." Gal. 6. 9. God make us to know, so far as here we may know, "that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!" 2 Cor. 5. 1.

Christ cleanseth the leper.

1 When he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him.

2 ¹ And, behold, there came a leper and worshipped him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

3 And Jesus put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately his leprosy was cleansed.

4 And Jesus saith unto him, See thou tell no man; but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer the gift that ² Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

¹ Mark 1. 40. Luke 5. 12.

² Levit 14. 4.

§ 23. The evidence of miracles. Sin the leprosy of the soul.

The miracles of our Lord form the most striking confirmation of his doctrine. Well might He teach with authority who could heal the sick, cleanse the leper, and raise the dead. This is the first of these signs and wonders which St. Matthew has recorded at any length. Here therefore we may take occasion to consider their great importance, as testimonies to the truth of the Gospel. The great force of the evidence of a miracle consists in this, that it is a thing which could not any how happen naturally. It is something which could not take place in what we call the course of nature, something which could not arise from any other cause, conceivable by man, except the interference of divine power. He who made the world, has formed it subject to certain rules, fixed by Himself, and accessible to the observation of mankind. These rules we call the law of nature. Such for instance are these, that the sun rises and sets, the moon fills and wanes in turn, that the sick lose their strength, and require time to recover it; that different diseases take more or less time in healing, and that some are rarely if ever healed at all; that the living never fail to die; that the dead never return to life. Whatever might happen contrary to such rules as these, we should reckon supernatural. And we reckon it a miracle, when it is so plainly supernatural, as that all men may understand, that it could not have been done, without interference of God. When this is thus acknowledged, when a miracle is thus wrought, we cannot doubt that he who works it has the sanction and authority, if not the power of God Himself. And in this consists the great importance of our Saviour's miracles; they prove the doctrine He taught to be the will of the very same Being who made the world we see around us, and the souls we feel within us. Conceive then of power, such as stretched forth the heavens. Conceive of wisdom, such as knoweth all things that have been, are, and will be. Conceive of goodness, such as made all things to be good, such as filleth all things living, bad as they have themselves become, yet filleth "all things living with plenteousness." Psalm 145. 16. And then consider, that each miracle you read of in the Gospel, proves the Gospels to have come from this same power, and wisdom, and goodness. God it is, the same God, who hath here said unto the soul, as He once did to the world, in its dark estate, "Let there be light, and there was light." Gen. 1. 3.

The case before us is the healing of the leprosy; a disease which was then of common occurrence among the Jews. The whole multitude therefore well knew its nature. They knew that it was a very loathsome and lingering disorder, a disorder which never ceased on a sudden, and which rarely ceased at all, except with life itself. Those, who are well acquainted with the Old Testament, will remember how much is said about the leprosy in the Law of Moses; how all who might be infected with it were to be shut out from society, and were forbidden to hold communication with any one else, until pronounced by the priest to be entirely recovered. They may remember also the words of the king of Israel, when Naaman was sent to him to be healed of his leprosy, how "he rent his clothes, and said, Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy?" 2 Kings 5. 7. How high then must have been the esteem in which Jesus was already held, when "there came a leper," one afflicted with this very same disease, "saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." He seems to expect at once some divine interference. He does not say, if Thou prayest for help, if Thou givest time, attention, medicine; but, "if thou wilt." And our Lord too, in his reply, confirms this notion, saying, "I will; be thou clean;" shewing that it was of his own will, and power, that the healing took place. So that here we have evidence, both that God interfered, and that Christ was Himself that very God.

Moreover, He "put forth his hand and touched him." This might seem to be violating the Law of Moses; yet did our Lord here fulfil its spirit, for by his touch He imparted health, instead of multiplying disease. Compare this with what is said of Elisha, who, when Naaman applied to him for the cure of his leprosy, would not "strike his hand over the place," 2 Kings 5. 11, as being subject to the Law, which forbade to touch. Jesus acted as being the Giver, the Master of the Law. He healed, not as a minister of healing, but as the Lord of health, and of life.

This, let us remember, is his character, in regard to all the spiritual infirmities of his creature man. The leprosy of our souls is sin. The disease, which separates us from communion with God, is wilful transgression of his laws. And from the history of this miracle we should learn to apply, with faith, for our cure, to Him who alone can say, "I will; be thou clean." No outward purifying can here suffice. With the tears, rather, of repentance, with the offering of a humble and devout spirit; with these let us appear before our great High Priest. His merciful touch will heal our infirmities; and his voice, in the presence of his Father, will pronounce us whole, and clean.

Christ healeth the centurion's servant.

5 ¹ And when Jesus was entered into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beseeching him,

6 And saying, Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented.

7 And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him.

8 The centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed.

9 For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

10 When Jesus heard it, he marvelled, and said to them that followed, Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

11 And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven.

12 But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

13 And Jesus said unto the centurion, Go thy way: and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee. And his servant was healed in the selfsame hour.

¹ Luke 7. 1.

§ 24. The proof of the centurion's faith.

The faith of this centurion spring from a just conception of our Saviour's miraculous power. It was exercised in charity. For he applies in behalf, not of himself, but of his slave, one who was in the most abject state of servitude, and yet even in that state was "dear unto him." Luke 7. 2. Jesus, by way of drawing forth the expression of his faith, replies, "I will come and heal him." Such was the gracious resolution in behalf of fallen man, that brought down the blessed Son from the glory of the Father; "I will come and heal him." Such is the voice of mercy that appeals continually to the conscience of the sinner; "I will come and heal him."

On these words the centurion thus reasons: If I who am under authority can have my own orders readily executed, even in my absence, by those who, in their turn, are under me; how much more certainly shall Christ have his will fulfilled, without his coming, by the ministering spirits who do his pleasure. His faith therefore is expressed in humility: "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." He requires no more sensible presence, no more forcible manifestation, of Christ. He teaches us, by his example, to be content with even less of evidence than our Saviour offers. He shews us how to build upon the word of Christ, whether He be present, or absent, whether on earth, or in heaven, a lively assurance of our redemption through his blood.

His praise was, that in all Israel, among those who had so much better preparation for belief, our Lord had not found so great faith as in this stranger of the Gentiles. And hence Christ proceeds to utter that prophecy, of so deep interest to ourselves, that many should come from the different Gentile nations, and sit down with the patriarchs in the enjoyment of the covenant: whilst the children of the kingdom, the people of the Jews, for lack of corresponding faith, should be cast into outer darkness.

But further, to put this faith to a manifest proof, our Lord adds, "Go thy way, and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee." Thus the recovery of the servant was to be dependent on the convictions of the master. That these were lively and sincere was proved by the result: "his servant was healed in the selfsame hour." Let us apply now to our own faith this searching test. Let us consider, in regard to those things which we profess to believe, how would it fare with us, if, according as we believe, so it were to be done unto us? How much should we enjoy of the protecting care of Providence, if we had so much of it only as we effectually trust in? How much should we experience of God's love, in preserving our lives, supporting our health, bearing with our neglect, ignorance, and ingratitude, if no more of it were to be extended unto us, than we in our hearts faithfully acknowledge? To what extent, again, would the merits of our Saviour Christ atone for our sins, the grace of the Holy Spirit sanctify our hearts, or the joys of heaven be in the event of death imparted to our souls, if the measure of these blessings were to be determined by the limits of our faith, by the degree in which we feel convinced of their certainty, and assured of their being covenanted to ourselves? Who, after such searching of his heart, dare say, Lord, as I have believed, so be it done unto me? Yet such is, we see, the condition of Christ's heavenly healing; such is the faith He requires in us, if, with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, we would sit down in the kingdom of heaven. This faith then let us now seek by prayer, and by meditation on God's word. This faith let us endeavour to shew forth by the constant practice of his will. That so we may be prepared for that day, when, whether we would choose or not, each Christian soul must receive for its last sentence, "as thou hast believed, so be it done unto thee."

Christ healeth Peter's wife's mother; and many others.

14 ¹ And when Jesus was come into Peter's house, he saw his wife's mother laid, and sick of a fever.

15 And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and she arose, and ministered unto them.

16 ² When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils: and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick:

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, ³ Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses.

¹ Mark 1. 29. Luke 4. 38.

² Mark 1. 32. Luke 4. 40.

³ Isaiah 53. 4. 1 Peter 2. 24.

§ 25. The evil spirit of sin must be cast out by Christ.

The centurion had justly said, "Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof." Ch. 8. 8. Yet Jesus, we see, was willing of his own accord to enter the lowly dwelling of his disciple Peter. This had taken place previously; the very next thing, as we learn from St. Mark 1. 29, and from St. Luke 4. 38, the very next thing after our Lord's announcement of his ministry, in the synagogue of Nazareth. We should remark here, that it was the mother of Peter's wife whom our Lord selected for this early miracle. Whence it is plain, not only that St. Peter was, as our church reminds us in the service for matrimony, a married man; but also, that our Lord sanctioned, in him, his being married. So that there remains no excuse for the error and presumption of the Roman church in forbidding even to ordinary ministers the sacred ties of marriage.

"When Jesus was come into Peter's house, he saw his wife's mother laid, and sick of a fever." Her fever was so severe that she was laid, or confined to her bed. Our Lord no sooner heard of it than "he touched her hand, and the fever left her." In her, and in her son, He could, without any profession of theirs, discern the faith He required. And without any words of his own, He could remove her sickness with a touch. "And she arose, and ministered unto them." Hence we learn that her recovery was instantaneous. She was not, as is natural after a fever, left weak and languid for a time; but she was restored to the full possession of her health and strength, in such a manner as naturally she could not have been, that is to say, miraculously. And further, from her ministering unto them we learn, that our Lord not only entered this humble dwelling, but partook also of the frugal fare prepared for the apostle and his family. Thus did He, in the selfsame hour, give proof of divine power, and of human nature; nourishing in Himself by ordinary means that form of flesh and blood, which in others He by a word relieved from hunger, or by a touch recovered from disease.

In the evening the people brought to Him great numbers both of sick, and of those who were possessed with devils. In regard to the latter, we must suppose that the evil spirits, which watch continually for our destruction, were permitted, at that period, to exercise more than ordinary control over the human race. Instead of having their influence confined to the beguiling of the soul within, they were allowed sensibly to possess the body, to distract it with strange pains, to deform it with violent and frantic gestures, and to defile it with the forced utterance of evil imaginations. And this outward sensible possession by devils we may conceive to have been ordered, at that time, for the more plain and permanent proof of their real agency in the world. Whilst it served also to shew forth the victory of Him, who came to bruise the serpent's head, see Gen. 3. 15, and who, as He Himself declared, "beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven." Luke 10. 18.

"And he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick." So that not only in the atoning for our sins, but also in the healing of our sicknesses, He fulfilled the words of Isaiah 53. 4. "Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows." Have we then, who, like these believing Galileans, hear the words of this heavenly discourse, have we who daily study them, recorded and enforced in the writings of his apostles, have we, when the even is come, no sickness to present to his healing hand, no evil spirits for his word to cast out? Does not each day produce some sin to be confessed before Him at night? Hath no fever of passion, no heat of a disordered fancy, prevented us from ministering, as largely as we ought, to the good of others, and to the glory of Christ? Hath any evil spirit defiled our hearts with forbidden lusts, deformed our souls with doubt, or care, deceit, or envy, or revenge? Let us bring them to the throne of grace, and there lay them before Him who "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Let us present them with humility nothing excusing, with truth nothing concealing, with faith nothing misgiving. In Him is mercy; and in Him is health. Our sins, if only we believe, our sins are no longer ours. He hath taken them on Himself. O! Himself hath He taken the burden to us intolerable, that we thus relieved might sin no more.

Let us then endeavour henceforth, to live according to his will, in holiness, and righteousness, all the days of our lives. Let us minister unto Christ, by ministering unto those amongst our brethren to whom we can by any means do good. By helping them in their sicknesses, bearing with their infirmities, relieving their wants, and overcoming with good any evil they attempt, let us strive to imitate, however feebly and far off, these instances of our Saviour's boundless love.

Christ stilleth the tempest on the sea.

18 Now when Jesus saw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other side.

19 ¹ And a certain scribe came, and said unto him, Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

20 And Jesus saith unto him, The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

21 And another of his disciples said unto him, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

22 But Jesus said unto him, Follow me; and let the dead bury their dead.

¹ Luke 9. 57.

23 And when he was entered into a ship, his disciples followed him.

24 ² And, behold, there arose a great tempest in the sea, insomuch that the ship was covered with the waves: but he was asleep.

25 And his disciples came to him, and awoke him, saying, Lord, save us: we perish.

26 And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm.

27 But the men marvelled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!

² Mark 4. 37. Luke 8. 23.

§ 26. The cost of following Christ.

We learn from these passages in the conduct of our Lord, how many privations must be cheerfully undergone, what binding engagements must be readily put aside, and what vehement troubles must be faithfully encountered, by those who would really follow Christ. He gives all of us express commandment to depart, as it were, "unto the other side;" to leave the shore where the multitude assemble, the crowded haunts of worldly vanity; and to betake ourselves to that narrow, and nearly empty, path, which He has trod before us. Would we profess, with the scribe here mentioned, our willingness to follow Him whithersoever He goeth? Would we, as this professor seems to have done, hope by such obedience to profit in our worldly advancement? The reply of our Lord informs us, that at least this is not what we should look for; not what we are designedly to work for. In his service we should aim at no preferment of gain, or of worldly comfort; no preeminence of rank or station, no security of rest or sustenance. We must devote ourselves, rather, to share the lot of one, who had not where to lay his head.

Would we excuse ourselves in ease or indulgence, by pleading the duties of social life? Would we entreat that, ere we thus strictly follow Christ, we may be allowed first, as this other disciple asked, to bury a father or a friend? to perform these or any other kindly offices, towards each other, to such extent, as might interfere with any higher duty we owe to God? "Follow me," is the answer, "and let the dead bury their dead." Even the sacred rites of burial must give way, the indulgence of our most natural feelings in honouring the remains of those we love, and yet more, that attention to the settling of their affairs, which is perhaps here chiefly meant; even these must be relinquished, were they likely in any way to hinder the following of our Saviour Christ, in the discharge of any paramount Christian duty. How much more then must we regulate by his will all our ordinary social behaviour; and so far only engage ourselves in the business of the world, and in the interesting connexions of this present life, as may be consistent with our devotion to his supreme command! How freely must we give up, at his bidding, the plans we most fondly cherish, the engagements we may have most eagerly desired! And in all this subjection to his will, how deeply should we feel convinced, that He both best knows what is good for us, and kindly gives us that which is the best!

Not that, even when we are resigned to these privations, and walk cheerfully in the direction which his word and will point out; not that thus even we ought fondly to expect, that we may pass over the waters of life, in a course that is continually smooth. He is, it is true, in the ship with us. He is present, by his providence, in the world; by his grace, in the church. He is in the ship with us; but often, to our weak apprehension, He is, as it were, asleep. He interferes not even in our behalf outwardly or sensibly; nor always promptly, forcibly, and uniformly. Meantime the tempest is permitted to arise, the wicked to prosper, Satan to bear rule in the ocean of this wide world, and to cover with the waves of persecution, or of yet more perilous corruption, that vessel, the church, in which we are embarked. When most these perils beset the soul, let us none the less have faith in the power of our ever present Lord. Let us wait patiently his good time for our deliverance; lest otherwise, ere He rebuke the storm, He should reprove first our frailty, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith?"

"Then he arose, and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm." Then; that is, when they had earnestly besought Him, saying, "Lord, save us, we perish." If therefore we wait with humble patience, let us wait also with earnest prayer. Let us beg of Him, whom the winds and the sea obey, that He will allay every storm of passion, give rest in each trouble of life, and deliver the soul, in its extreme affliction, from the danger and apprehension of final wreck. Let us cast on Him all our care. Let us repose in Him all our trust. Let us direct diligently our course by the compass of his word. And then, whatever storms arise, whatever waves surround us, though our outward condition be chequered with disaster, or even our spiritual course be perplexed with difficulty and distress; yet shall we, at length, enjoy within, a great and lasting calm.

Christ driveth the devils out of the possessed. They go into the swine.

28 ¹ And when he was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there met him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way.

29 And, behold, they cried out, saying; What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time?

30 And there was a good way off from them an herd of many swine feeding.

31 So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine.

32 And he said unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of swine: and, behold, the whole herd of swine ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters.

33 And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing, and what was befallen to the possessed of the devils.

34 And, behold, the whole city came out to meet Jesus: and when they saw him, they besought him that he would depart out of their coasts.

¹ Mark 5. 1. Luke 8. 26.

§ 27. How all evil spirits are under the control of Christ.

That the demoniacs should dwell among tombs, and by their violence molest all who would pass that way, may help to teach us two things of those who are the servants of Satan; the first, how mischievous they are to all around them, and the other, how near akin they are themselves to the dead. Dead indeed they are in trespasses and sins; dead to all good works; dead to the motions of God's Holy Spirit. In vain to them his Gospel sounds; they hear it not. In vain does its glorious light shine forth; they see it not. In vain is his boundless love daily made manifest within their reach; they feel it not. They are poisoned by some unholy pleasure. They are slain by some forbidden lust. And whilst they are themselves thus like unto the dead, their influence is at the same time most injurious to the living. They suffer no man, without harm, to pass that way. Either they do real violence, on purpose to annoy; Satan shewing most readily his spite against mankind, in the making them spiteful to each other. Or else they entice others into the like sins with their own; it being common to all, who do things worthy of death, to have "pleasure in them that do them." Rom. 1. 32.

And further, in the history of this miracle, we should observe of these evil spirits, that though they confessed our Lord to be the Son of God, they complained of his molesting them, before what they counted their time. "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God; art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" Thus many also of mankind, in their folly, seem to think that, in this world at least, they are entitled to a full share of sinful pleasure. Having braved the torments of eternity, they reckon on practising securely, for these few score years, whatsoever height of iniquity they please. Here however they might learn, how entirely they depend on Almighty power for each moment's continuance in their wicked course. If then you would any of you sin wilfully, if, in any single instance, you would deliberately barter your eternal happiness for this life's enjoyment; remember, ere you strike the fatal bargain, that Satan, to whom you would thus sell your soul, cannot himself secure you his pretended wages. God who permits evil, for good to us unknown, God, though He permit you for a time to sin, may, long before the time you reckon on, think fit to cut you off; and in the very hour of your projected pleasure, may announce to your dismay, that it is the hour for death and judgment.

Without the divine permission the evil spirits could not even enter into a herd of swine. In the violent death, to which they at once brought these animals, we see how fiercely and utterly, in our helplessness, they would destroy both body and soul, but for the aid of the same mighty Saviour. It is through his mediation that their wrath is stayed, their violence restrained. Through Him, is held out to man the hope, that they may even be cast out from the heart, which has been once taken captive at their will. Let us beware, when we have opportunity of grace so great, let us beware lest we lose it, like these Gergesenes; who thought only of the loss of their swine, and who rudely request our Lord to depart out of their coasts. What else than this do we, if we receive blessings without thankfulness, or chastisement without resignation? if one hour we pray to be delivered from evil, and the next long to be indulged in it? if, whilst we profess to have at heart the welfare of others, we are all the while concerned chiefly for our own? Is not this like grudging the loss of the herd, instead of rejoicing in the recovery of the possessed? Is it not like beseeching the Lord in our hearts, beseeching Him to depart out of our coasts? Such sin if you would avoid, receive with gladness every correction, every means of improvement, God dispenses for your good. Whatsoever it may cost you in loss of worldly goods, rejoice at every occasion to grow in grace. Whether it be sorrow or sickness, whether disappointment or distress, whatsoever you may suffer in this life for Christ's sake, remember always it is not worthy to be compared with the sufferings of eternity, with the loss of the immortal soul.

Christ healeth one sick of the palsy.

1 And he entered into a ship, and passed over, and came into his own city.

2 And, behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy; Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee.

3 And, behold, certain of the scribes said within themselves, This man blasphemeth.

4 And Jesus knowing their thoughts said, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?

5 For whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and walk?

6 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (then saith he to the sick of the palsy,) Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house.

7 And he arose, and departed to his house.

8 But when the multitude saw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given such power unto men.

1 Mark 2. 3. Luke 5. 18.

§ 28. Sin the palsy of the soul; how it is to be healed.

Our Lord, we read in the last chapter, 8. 28, "rebuked the winds and the sea," and they obeyed Him. He was able too, as we learn elsewhere, ch. 14. 25, to walk on the waters, whithersoever He would. Here however, we see, He enters into a ship; passing over, in the ordinary manner, to Capernaum, the city where He dwelt. See Matt. 4. 13. He was content to use the common means of conveyances, and to have no further recourse to miracles than was needful for the conviction of mankind. Living, as we do, far from the time when miracles were wrought, we may hence learn to be the better satisfied without beholding them. It is enough for us to know that they once took place. It is our duty, to derive no less deep impression of our Saviour's power, from the settled ordinances of religion, than if we could see Him now walking on the waves of the sea.

"And behold, they brought to him a man sick of the palsy, lying on a bed: and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick of the palsy; Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." An effectual faith was doubtless here discerned by Christ, in the sick man himself, as well as in those who brought him. And the words, with which the healing was announced, were graciously adapted to fill him, and them, and us, with the cheerfulness of spiritual joy. For, that sin may in any way be forgiven is the most encouraging of all tidings to a sinner. But near to them stood certain of the scribes, more ready from what they heard to frame objections, than to derive any profitable instruction. They said therefore within themselves, "This man blasphemeth." Thus easy is it for a perverse disposition to turn the sweet tidings of redeeming love into the gall of controversy and contention! Our Lord first proves to them that He knew these their secret thoughts; asking, "Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?" He then puts it to themselves, whether the one thing were not as easy as the other, to forgive sins, or to make the sick man arise and walk; meaning that both were alike easy to God, and that through God alone could either of them be done. And lastly, by way of making it manifest that He could do either, He "saith to the sick of the palsy, Arise, take up thy bed, and go unto thine house. And he arose, and departed to his house." The forgiveness of sins could not be seen, and the scribes therefore might make bold to question it. The rising up of the sick man, the recovery of his strength, the taking up of his bed, and the walking to his house, these things they could not deny to have taken place. The conclusion could not be resisted, that his word which was thus fulfilled in one case, would be fulfilled also in the other; that the Son of man had "power on earth to forgive sins."

* Sin is indeed the palsy of the soul; and its nature may be aptly illustrated from some particulars of this complaint, as it afflicts the body. It happens commonly with the paralytic, that when they would move a limb in one direction, it goes the contrary way. Closely does this resemble that state so familiar to the conscience of the sinner, "The good that I would I do not, but the evil which I would not that I do." Rom. 7. 19. Let those, who are now sensible of this law in their members, rejoice to know, that with Christ it is alike easy to say, "Arise, and walk," or, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." Here He can enable us to do what is right; and hereafter pronounce pardon on what we have done wrong. The one is the great pledge and condition of the other. The belief, that there is mercy with God through Christ, is the chief Gospel encouragement in well doing. And the grace also which He imparts for our help in walking uprightly, is the true earnest of his design to forgive. We believe Him to have died to save us, therefore we have hope through his blood. In that hope we obey, through grace. And the testimony of conscience, the consciousness that we of his mercy have grace to obey, is our best ground of assurance that we shall in the end be saved.

Christ calleth Matthew ; justifieth his disciples in not fasting.

9 'And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man, named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom: and he saith unto him, Follow me. And he arose, and followed him.

10 And it came to pass, as Jesus sat at meat in the house, behold, many publicans and sinners came and sat down with him and his disciples.

11 And when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto his disciples, Why eateth your Master with publicans and sinners?

12 But when Jesus heard that, he said unto them, They that be whole need not a physieian, but they that are sick.

13 But go ye and learn what that meaneth, 'I will have mercy, and not sacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, 'but sinners to repentance.

14 Then came to him the disciples of Johu, saying, 'Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but thy disciples fast not?

15 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bridechamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken from them, and then shall they fast.

16 No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment, for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse.

17 Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: else the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles perish: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preserved.

¹ Mark 2. 14. Luke 5. 27. ² Hos. 6. 6. ch. 12. 7. ³ 1Tim. 1. 15. ⁴ Mark 2. 18. Luke 5. 33. ⁵ Or, raw, or, unwrought cloth.

§ 29. Forgiveness of sins on repentance and amendment of life.

St. Matthew was called to be an apostle, from sitting "at the receipt of custom." This signifies to us, that he was, as he elsewhere tells us of himself, chap. 10. 3, a publican, or tax gatherer. For all taxes and customs, due to the government, used to be farmed, or let out, to certain persons called publicans; who, paying a fixed rent for them, made the larger profit, the more they could collect. Thus they were often tempted to be guilty of extortion. And whether guilty of it or not, they were liable to have it imputed to them by the people. And they were accordingly very generally disliked. Yet from this obnoxious class did our Lord select one of his own immediate followers. And further, He allowed many others of the same description, to sit at meat with Him in the house. Hereupon the Pharisees took offence, asking, "Why eateth your master with publicans and sinners?" The disciples too of John the Baptist were surprised at our Lord's partaking of this feast. And in somewhat of the same spirit, they asked, "Why do we and the Pharisees fast oft, but thy disciples fast not?"

The answers of our Lord to both these questions may be the better understood by being viewed in connexion. "They that be whole need not a physieian, but they that are sick." Therefore He disdained not the company of sinners, because it was to heal, and to save sinners that He came down from heaven. If then his coming was for an end so gracious, it was fitting for his disciples to rejoice in his presence, all the while He continued amongst them. Herein He was as a bridegroom, as one bound on a joyful errand, as one come to unite with Himself, his spouse, the church, in the bands of redeeming love. It well beseemed that chosen company, who were privileged to behold his coming, that they should, in his presence, neither mourn nor fast. His dispensation was new, and therefore unfit to be mixed up with the severe ordinances of the elder covenant. Even as a piece of new cloth would not suit for filling up the rent in an old garment. His doctrine, his precepts, and the pattern of his conduct, were altogether of a more high and heavenly kind than those which the Pharisees referred to. Their method therefore was no more fit to regulate his, than old bottles, such as were then used, of more perishable materials than now, would be fit to contain new wine.

In nothing is the dispensation of the Gospel more distinct from that of the Law, than in the explicit promise of forgiveness, set forth through Christ, to contrite sinners. This notion had indeed been beforehand shadowed forth by the prophets. Thus Hosea had said both of God's dealings, and of man's duties, "I desired mercy, and not sacrifice." Hos. 6. 6. And Daniel 9. 9. had in like manner proclaimed, "To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him." Thus the minds of their readers might have been prepared to expect, that in some way, though they knew not how, the vengeance due to sin might be appeased. It was reserved, however, for the Author of salvation Himself, to make plain the welcome tidings; and to invite all into his fold by those gracious words, "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." When all strictness of ceremonial law had been tried in vain, it was the voice of the bridegroom that brought to frail man, the joyful tidings of forgiveness, through his own most precious blood. All are sinners; all therefore He called. And all whom He called He called to repentance, even that from sinners they should become righteous. All are sinners. Only all know not their sins. Only some there are that trust in themselves that they are righteous, and despise others. Let not us then say that we have no sin, lest we deceive ourselves, and the truth be not in us. See 1 John 1. 8. Neither let us be content with merely owning that we are sinners, without obeying also the invitation to repentance. For so only may we rejoice with the heavenly Bridegroom, if we presume not on his mercy, to continue in sin, but take it for our great motive to amendment of life; if, the more freely He offers to forgive, the more sincerely we aim to have the less to be forgiven.

Christ cureth the issue of blood ; raiseth from death the ruler's daughter.

18 ¹ While he spake these things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worshipped him, saying, My daughter is even now dead : but come and lay thy hand upon her, and she shall live.

19 ² And Jesus arose, and followed him, and so did his disciples.

20 And, behold, a woman, which was diseased with an issue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment :

21 For she said within herself, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole.

22 But Jesus turned him about, and when he saw her, he said, Daughter, be of good comfort ; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.

23 And when Jesus came into the ruler's house, and saw the minstrels and the people making a noise,

24 He said unto them, Give place : for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn.

25 But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose.

26 And || the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

¹ Mark 5. 22. Luke 8. 41.

|| Or, this fame.

§ 30. That the Christian is not dead, but sleepeth.

In the healing of the woman here mentioned, it was not her touching the garment of our Saviour, but faith that made her whole. And this faith is within our reach. And although, since the ascension of Christ into heaven, we enjoy not the like privilege of touching, or beholding Him, we should rejoice to think, that nevertheless we have access to the benefits of his heavenly healing. Let us then be firmly persuaded that in Him is a divine virtue to remove all our infirmities. Weak though we be, He can make us strong ; sinful, yet He can make us righteous. Though many years our frailty may have troubled us, and our evil habits long constrained us to transgress, yet may we lay hold of the garment of his grace, with full assurance that there our issue of sin will be stopped. His robe is mercy, faithfulness, and truth. Let us learn from this woman at once to think lowly of ourselves, and to think all things possible with Him. Let us approach Him with humility, in proportion to our unworthiness, with liveliness of faith, according to his power. And then though we neither see that face which "turned about" to her in mercy, nor hear that gracious voice, which said, "Daughter, be of good comfort," yet may we enjoy a conviction, abundantly sufficient, that our faith, through Him, hath made us whole.

This miracle took place whilst our Lord was on his way to the ruler's house, whose daughter was "even now dead." On his arrival, observe how readily He left his conference with the Pharisees, and disciples of John, that He might attend to the application of the ruler. Controversy with gainsayers may be sometimes necessary, and conversation with friends many times profitable ; but either of them we ought readily to break off, when an occasion offers to do good to the distressed. On the arrival of our Lord at the ruler's house, He "saw the minstrels and the people making a noise." These were mourners, uttering a lamentation, according to the custom of the country, over the young woman's decease. By way of preparing them for her restoration to life, "He said unto them, Give place ; for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth." In these words we may conceive Him to have intimated somewhat of what death is to Christians, when tempered by his healing hand. "And they laughed him to scorn." Being quite certain that the young woman was truly dead, they made light of Christ's words, which they understood to mean literally, that she was only asleep. He however went in ; and "took her by the hand, and the maid arose."

True then were his words, in the sense He meant ; true were they proved to the beholders ; and to us, whom they most deeply concern, full of grace no less than truth. For this much we may learn from them for our comfort, that death under the control of our blessed Lord, is, unto all them that believe in Him, only as the repose of sleep. Weary with the arduous course of duty, the Christian lies down in the grave, as in the enjoyment of his needful rest. He works, whilst life lasts, the work given him to do. He performs with diligence his appointed task. He runs with patience the race that is set before him. He submits to its hardships with resignation. And thankfully he partakes of the manifold blessings, whether of health, or wealth, of good character, or of social affection, that attend him on his way rejoicing. But as the day advances, and when it is now far spent, it is no cause of grief to him to think that the night is near at hand. It is the period he has looked to for his rest. The evening closes round his head, either gradually, if life is prolonged, or early, it may be, as with the ruler's daughter, in the term of his natural existence. Whensoever under Providence his hour may arrive, he takes leave without repining of all that most here he loves, and enters the valley of the shadow of death, with an entire dependance on the mercy of God, in all that most there he fears. He "is not dead, but sleepeth." He rests in Christ. He waits with Christ for the appointed day, when He shall put all enemies under his feet. See 1 Cor. 15. 25. Meantime, if time there any longer be to those who are departed from this world of sense, visions of things heavenly are imparted to his soul. He "is not dead, but sleepeth." He is awakened by the midnight cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh !" Matt. 25. 6. Then shall the Lord take him by the hand, and he shall arise ; not to a state of trial, but to a crown of victory ; to a heaven where there shall be neither toil nor sleep, but life perpetual, and at God's right hand "pleasure for evermore." Psalm 15. 12.

Christ healeth two blind men, and one that was dumb.

27 And when Jesus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying, and saying, Thou son of David, have mercy on us.

28 And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him: and Jesus saith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord.

29 Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you.

30 And their eyes were opened; and Jesus straitly charged them, saying, See that no man know it.

31 But they, when they were departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country.

32 ¹ As they went out, behold, they brought to him a dumb man possessed with a devil.

33 And when the devil was cast out, the dumb spake: and the multitudes marvelled, saying, It was never so seen in Israel.

34 But the Pharisees said, ² He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils.

¹ Luke 11. 14.

² Ch. 12. 24. Mark 3. 22. Luke 11. 15.

§ 31. Through faith our eyes are opened and our tongues loosed.

In the case of these blind men, we may observe of true faith, how much more it depends on the inward disposition than on any mere outward advantages. They were not able to see the miracles which Christ had wrought. They were less likely, therefore, to be struck with any lively conviction of his divine authority. Yet, blind as they were, they persevered in following Him, and were the first to address Him by the title of the Messiah, "Thou son of David?" That there might be no doubt of their being actuated by true faith, our Lord asks, "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" He then adds, by way of reward as well as proof, "According to your faith be it unto you." "And their eyes were opened." So valuable in his sight is that humility, and love of truth, which prepared these blind men, as we may hope, to believe! So sure is the progress of true faith, from weakness to strength, and from strength to more strength, and to brighter vision!

For thus is it also with the spiritually blind, under the healing influence of Christ's heavenly touch. At first they have as afar off to cry, "Thou son of David, have mercy on us." For a while they do but as in the dark feel after Him, if haply they may find Him. See Acts 17. 27. But in proportion to the vigour and sincerity of these their first efforts, their eyes are gradually more opened, and their sight becomes more bright; until at length they shall behold, "face to face," 1 Cor. 13. 12, the gracious countenance of that Lord, in whom, not seeing Him, they believed. Here indeed, whilst on earth, even they who best see are but as blind. The most clear conceptions we can form of God's mercy, and of our Saviour's love, are but as a dim and dark shadow, compared with the real enjoyment of them hereafter in heaven. Here too we all are, as it were, dumb. The prayers, and praises, of the most devout worshipper, are alike unworthy of the mercies for which they are put up, and of the majesty of that Being, to whom they are addressed. The same evil spirits, who were permitted in times past sensibly to bind the tongue in dumbness, inflame now that offending member, with false, haughty, angry, or malicious words; and prevent it also, by distractions of thought, or worldliness of heart, from uttering aright the language of devotion. But He, who then cast them out, still offers, through the grace of his Holy Spirit, that both tongue and heart shall be enlarged in his service; shall be loosed from the bands of each sinful habit, from the possession of each evil spirit, whether it be the demon of pride, or of ill temper, of impurity, covetousness, or uncharitableness.

Thus will gradually be fulfilled amongst ourselves, in a high and spiritual sense, that prophetic description of our Saviour's power, Isa. 35. 5, 6, "the eyes of the blind shall be opened," "and the tongue of the dumb sing." Here, even on earth, shall we have clearer and clearer before our eyes the evidence of things heavenly, the fear of God, the love of Christ. Here shall our voice, however faint in prayer, be lifted up with more and more fervour, and be heard with more of approbation by our Father which is in heaven. Here shall the tongue, that was dumb in sin, be sanctified both in the constant practice of devotion, and in the hourly utterance of a pure, charitable, and edifying conversation. Hereafter, when the body shall be glorified, when the eye shall no more "see darkly," 1 Cor. 13. 12; the tongue also shall be inspired to join in strains unknown on earth, even to sing "the song of the Lamb." Rev. 15. 3. Whilst the sight, in some manner we know not, shall behold the things that are invisible, the voice also, in some method we cannot comprehend, and with feelings of joy which we cannot conceive, shall proclaim unto Him that sitteth on the throne, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Rev. 4. 11.

Christ hath compassion on the multitude.

35 ¹ And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness and every disease among the people.

36 ² But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they ³ fainted, and were scattered abroad, ⁴ as sheep having no shepherd.

37 Then saith he unto his disciples, ⁵ The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few;

38 Pray ye therefore the LORD of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest.

¹ Mark 6. 6. Luke 13. 22.

² Mark 6. 34.

³ Or, were tired and lay down.

⁴ Num. 27. 17.

⁵ Luke 10. 2.

§ 32. That we must bring in our fellow creatures to the knowledge of Christ.

Jesus, "when he saw the multitudes," "was moved with compassion on them." The mass of mankind, as they labour under ignorance and want, may be objects of scorn to the worldly mind; but by the enlightened Christian, as by his divine Master, they must be viewed with affectionate concern. The more he has been raised above the multitude, by birth, wealth, education, or any other means; the more he must make allowance for their infirmities, the more he must desire to relieve their necessities, to respect their rights, and to improve, in all things, their condition.

That these multitudes should be compared to sheep having no shepherd, may seem strange, when at the very time Jesus Himself was going about amongst them, "teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease among the people." It was in his power, no doubt, to have supplied every want of all, from his own divine abundance. But it is his will, that, under Himself and his providence, we should depend on each other for every blessing we enjoy. And He represents people without preachers as sheep without a shepherd, that his followers might be the more inclined to profit by that ministry, to which his church should be afterwards committed. He said therefore to his disciples, that is, to the whole multitude of those who now believed on Him, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few." Great, that is, are the numbers, who might, by due care and attention, be brought into the kingdom of heaven; but few are they who are employed in the good work. Apply yourselves therefore in prayer, and, by all other means in your power, promote the sending forth of more labourers into this spiritual harvest.

Here we see how great is our obligation to assist, both at home, and also abroad, in forwarding the diffusion of Christian knowledge. To our own times, to our own country, to our own neighbourhood, to our own parish, we may justly apply these words, "The harvest truly is plenteous." Millions there are in far distant lands, to whom the very name of the Gospel is unknown; millions, by whom it is known only in scorn. Thousands there are, many thousands it is to be feared, in our own Christian community, who have no saving knowledge of their Saviour Christ, no effectual faith in his merits, no comfortable hope in his mercy. For these, let us pray the Lord of the harvest that He would send forth labourers, that He would gather them into his fold, that He would make them his own for ever. Prayer for our fellow creatures is within the power of all. But in order to pray effectually, we must desire fervently. Let us see then that we feel, in behalf of our brethren, a fervent desire that they may be saved. Such a desire will prompt us, besides praying, to contribute also from our means, however scanty they may be, some help towards the furtherance of these objects. "Preachers of the Gospel cannot be sent out to foreign countries without great cost. Nor can the word of God be dispersed widely amongst the poor at home, without a large and corresponding expense. For such purposes, therefore, societies have been formed, which collect the contributions of many single persons, and apply them to advance the common object." In giving to them, let us take pains always so to give, as to do the most good that our means admit of. And let us prefer those plans and societies, which, with the least admixture of human infirmity, seem likely to promote, as far as we can judge, the largest possible amount of Christian knowledge.

Nor is it enough that we give bountifully, to the most excellent public associations we can meet with, for the furtherance of religion. We must regard also our own lives, in private, as responsible for the effect they produce on others. We must remember that, according as we ourselves set up to, or fall short of, our Christian profession, we shall win also others to the faith, or bring it into discredit and disgrace. There is nothing that so much hinders the growth of Christianity, either among the heathen, or in our own country, as the notorious offences, the scandalous diversions, the acknowledged worldliness of mind, prevalent among those who profess to be Christ's. So neither are there any means more sure to forward his heavenly harvest, than that piety of heart, that conformity of our life to our calling, which are alike within the reach of all. These things let us aim to do, whilst we pray that his kingdom come. Whilst we beseech Him that his harvest may be speedily gathered in, let us forward it, and help in it ourselves. And so may we here enjoy the thought that we have aided in the salvation of our brethren; and be summoned hereafter, as faithful labourers, to receive the wages of eternal life.

Christ sendeth out his twelve apostles.

1 And 'when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power || against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease.

2 Now the names of the twelve apostles are these; The first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother;

3 Philip, and Bartholomew; Thomas, and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alphaeus, and Lebbaeus, whose surname was Thaddaeus;

4 Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iscariot, who also betrayed him.

5 These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not:

6 'But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

7 And as ye go, preach, saying, 'The kingdom of heaven is at hand.

8 Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give.

9 '|| Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass in your purses.

10 Nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; 'for the workman is worthy of his meat.

11 'And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, enquire who in it is worthy; and there abide till ye go thence.

12 And when ye come into an house salute it.

13 And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you.

14 'And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet.

15 Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city.

¹ Mark 3. 14. Luke 9. 1.

|| Or, over.

² Acts 13. 46.

³ 1 Tim. 5. 18. Luke 10. 7.

⁶ Luke 10. 8.

⁵ Luke 10. 9.

⁴ Mark 6. 8.

Luke 9. 3. & 22. 35.

|| Or, Get.

⁷ Mark 6. 11.

⁸ Acts 13. 31.

§ 33 The commission of the apostles instructive to ourselves.

This chapter contains the instructions given to the apostles, when they were first sent out to preach the Gospel. It relates therefore to their office, as inspired teachers, having authority to work miracles in support of what they taught.* Yet neither in these, nor in any other of our Saviour's words, shall we fail to find abundant matter, to interest, and instruct also, ourselves.

First, we observe "he gave them power against unclean spirits, to cast them out, and to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease." He had then this power in Himself, in such manner as that He could confer it on others; differing herein from all former prophets, and leading us hereby to consider, what is elsewhere very plainly set down, that He was no other than God Himself. And next, of those to whom the power was thus given, as we have already seen that some were poor fishermen, and Matthew himself a publican: so it is known also of the rest who are here mentioned, that they were men of no rank, or wealth, or learning. And the more humble are seen to be the instruments which "turned upside down," Acts 17. 6, the heathen world, the more forcibly are we compelled to admit that "this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." Psalm 118. 23.

They are directed to "go not into the way of the Gentiles," but "rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." So faithfully did the Almighty fulfil his covenant with the chosen people! So entirely will He, in like manner, make good his promises, no less gracious, to the children of the faith of Abraham, the called according to his purpose, in all ages and nations of the world. Only let us be duly sensible that the "kingdom of heaven is at hand." Only let not us, through our own unbelief, fall short of his proffered mercy; or fail to receive freely, that is, gladly, thankfully, that grace which is freely, that is, bountifully, given.

The apostles were to make no earthly provision for their journey. This was that they might better put to the proof the kindness of those whom they addressed. And further, their own faith must have been daily confirmed, by the support they thus experienced from the hand of God. "The workman is worthy of his meat." Hence they who labour may well trust, that industry in their work will lead usually to a competent provision. Hence they also, who use the labour of their fellow creatures, must infer the duty of providing for their wants. And especially is here enforced the obligation which lies on all who hear the Gospel, that they contribute to the support of those who preach it. Nor is supporting them enough. To hear their words, that is, to attend to their exhortations, appears from this passage to be the bounden duty of every Christian. "And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet."

Our Lord from the very first made use of human helps for the spreading abroad his Gospel in the world. He preferred, as we here see, to other, and more heavenly means, the preaching and the healing of these twelve apostles. This may make us the less surprised, that beings so frail as man, a ministration so imperfect as any man can perform, should still be used by the Almighty in the edification of the church. "We have," saith the apostle, and so must say all ministers, "this treasure in earthen vessels." 2 Cor. 4. 7. And the reason he thus adds, "that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." The frailties then of God's ministers, such as they necessarily have in common with their brethren, should be no impeachment to the message they are appointed to enforce. And the ordinance should lead us, on the contrary, to admire the wisdom of that great and good Being who out of weakness can bring forth strength, out of labours so faint and frail as ours, can forward the salvation of mankind.

Christ comforteth his apostles under expected persecution.

16 ¹ Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves: be ye therefore wise as serpents, and ^{||} harmless as doves.

17 But beware of men: for they will deliver you up to the councils, and they will scourge you in their synagogues.

18 And ye shall be brought before governors and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles.

19 ² But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye shall speak; for it shall be given you in that same hour what ye shall speak.

20 For it is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you.

21 ³ And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child; and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death.

22 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: 'but he that endureth to the end shall be saved.

23 But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not ^{||} have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come.

24 ⁴ The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord.

25 It is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord. If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?

¹ Luke 10. 3.

^{||} Or, end, or, finish.

^{||} Or, simple.

² Mark 13. 11. Luke 12. 11.

³ Luke 6. 40. John 13. 16.

⁴ Luke 21. 16.

⁴ Mark 13. 13.

§ 34. Motives to patience in affliction and to perseverance in well doing.

The directions which are here given to the apostles, in regard to the fear of men, may serve as well as the rest of this discourse for the improvement of all faithful Christians. Are not we too, if at least we serve Christ truly, are not we to dwell in the midst of a worldly multitude "as sheep in the midst of wolves?" returning good for evil, blessing for cursing, and love for persecution? Is it not our duty, in all intercourse we hold with the rest of mankind, to be, at once, "wise as serpents, and harmless as doves?" to do no hurt to others, either directly or in the way of example? and to watch prudently, lest in ourselves we contract harm from them? Thus too we, as well as the apostles, must "beware of men;" must be on our guard against the wiles of the wicked. And into whatsoever difficulties or dangers we are brought for conscience sake, we should consider that we have in heaven a Father, who careth for us, whose blessed Son pleadeth for us, whose Holy Spirit speaketh ever, if not in us, yet for us, "with groanings which cannot be uttered." Rom. 8. 26. Seldom are we in danger of being delivered up, and brought as were the apostles, for Christ's sake, before governors and kings. But in many things we run risk, lest through fear of man, of man's ridicule for instance, or scorn, or anger, we be tempted to do what we know to be wrong, or to neglect what we know to be right. Whosoever such a temptation occurs, let us call to mind the motives, here suggested by our Saviour, against the fear of man's persecution.

First, though brother should rise up against brother, parent against child, or child against parent, nay, though it were our apprehension to be hated of all men for the sake of Christ; we have for our consolation this divine assurance, "he that endureth to the end shall be saved." However long be the race that is set before us, it must at length be finished. However many may be our trials, the end at last is sure; that end, if only we endure, the salvation of the soul.

Or, secondly, does the time seem tedious? the interval too long? is our patience weary? does our courage fail? Mark then this next topic of consolation, "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come." This we may thus apply to ourselves. The work appointed us requires that we should thus long continue under trial. Our heavenly Master has service for us to perform, until the time when his summons shall arrive. For the apostles, that service was to go over the cities of Israel, teaching and healing. For us, it is to honour Him by holiness in ourselves, and to do good in our generation to all mankind. Life is not vanity, where it may be thus employed. It need never be vexation of spirit, where it may be spent for ends so excellent, and in a manner so full of satisfaction, as in doing good to our fellow creatures, and in exercising, out of fear towards God, humility, charity, and faith, in ourselves.

Would we still repine as being subject to so many pains and perils in our Christian warfare? Let us call to mind then, thirdly, what contradiction of sinners, what desertion, and scorn, and ignominy, our Lord Himself endured. Let us consider that "it is enough for the disciple that he be as his master, and the servant as his lord." He suffered for us, "the just for the unjust." 1 Pet. 3. 18. Much more then should we suffer for Him, the unjust for the just, out of regard to his will. And there should be no greater comfort to us, in the very worst we have here to undergo, than to know, that herein we may become like unto Christ, if we suffer patiently, cheerfully, thankfully. Let us not then be disheartened either by the fear of man, or by apprehension of the pains, and weariness, and sorrow which this life usually presents. The more we have to bear, the more gladly let us suffer; the more to do, the more devoutly let us work. We cannot have either so much to do, or so much to bear, for Christ's sake, as He graciously condescended, both to do, and to endure, for us, and for our deliverance from eternal death.

Christ continueth his instructions to the apostles.

26 Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; and hid, that shall not be known.

27 What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops.

28 And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

29 Are not two sparrows sold for a || farthing? and

¹ Mark 4. 22. Luke 8. 17. & 12. 2. ² Luke 12. 4.
of the Roman penny. ³ 2 Sam. 14. 11. Acts 27. 34.

one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father.

30 But the very hairs of your head are all numbered.

31 Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows.

32 Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.

33 But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven.

It is in value halfpenny farthing in the original, as being the tenth part ⁴ Luke 12. 8. ⁵ Mark 8. 38. Luke 9. 26. 2 Tim. 2. 12.

§ 35. Further arguments against the fear of man.

Here we find further topics of encouragement, set forth to the apostles, in their preaching of the Gospel. And we may proceed to apply them to our own support, in the practice of what they preached. True Christian practice leads us often, as we have already observed, to encounter difficulties, privations, and pain. And sometimes, perhaps, we are disheartened at the thought, that no one regards our suffering, or gives us credit for our patient endurance. Let us consider then, that God always seeth us; and that, by his sure decree, "there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed, and hid that shall not be known." The perseverance of the faithful, as well as the falling away of the wicked, shall be brought to light, at the last day. This truth is further insisted on in what follows, as to Christ's confessing, and denying those, who confess, or deny Him.

But first He gives us another argument against unworthy fear, another ground of fortitude in the fulfilment of our duty. He points out to us, for this end, the distinction between the body and the soul. "Fear not," saith He, "them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul." Is it then for the body that we fear? In any duty we have to do, are we afraid lest it might interfere with the comforts and conveniences which the body enjoys? Would we, rather than lose this world's goods, venture on any known sin? Would we rather than brave the ill will of men, speak falsehood, or do wrong; neglect the duties of religion, or suspend the progress of the soul to heaven? If in any such way we are tempted to transgress, out of fear, or deference to them, who at the utmost could but kill the body; let us reflect how little this concerns us, compared with the well being of the soul. Let us learn rather to "fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." His providence, we should observe, preserveth even the birds of the air; numbereth even the hairs of our heads. He therefore is most near to us, in all that we can fear. Nor can any one have power, in any way, against us, unless it be given of Him. If it be power we are afraid of, what power is so great as his? if anger, what wrath so fierce? Or if kindness weighs rather in our minds, and we are tempted to do evil in order to gratify the friends we love, or those who have first loved us; what so great goodness can we think of, what mercy ought we to be so much afraid of not being duly thankful for, as that which shines forth in the redemption of mankind, by the precious blood of our Saviour Christ?

And here we have one more argument against an unworthy fear, one more ground of that holy courage, which, through the fear of God, sets at nought the world, the flesh, and the Devil. "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven." When the books shall be opened, and the judgment set; when the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, then shall they of a certainty be exposed to shame, who have through fear of scorn, done evil; and they who have, for Christ's sake, despised shame, shall be exalted in honour by Himself. Our future sentence, whether of praise or blame, whether of reward or punishment, will be pronounced in a most public and full assembly. Which, out of us all, would now like to have his heart laid open to those who sit around him? Who but must be conscious of many things within, which he would be ashamed to have proclaimed to his nearest friends? Let us then repent and amend, that our sins may be blotted out; or sure we may be, all these things will soon be as clearly seen, as fully known to others, as is our outward bearing in this present world. Nor is it only evil that will be then made known. Our more holy thoughts, our more kindly feelings, the good purposes we should be ourselves reluctant to profess, and the patience with which we have borne, in privacy, any pain or sorrow for Christ's sake; these also will He hereafter make manifest, confessing us for his own, before our Father which is in heaven.

God make us to be not "afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass!" Isaiah 51. 12. God work in us that reverent apprehension of Himself, which, raising the soul above all other fear, may enable us, by a holy life, and by an edifying conversation, to confess Christ before men! God give us the true Christian courage to resist the Devil, and to renounce the world; to speak, in season, the unwelcome truth; to brave when needful, the undeserved rebuke; to dare to give offence, rather than deceive; rather than sin, to die!

Conclusion of the instructions given to the apostles.

34 'Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword.

35 For I am come to set a man at variance ¹against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter in law against her mother in law.

36 And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.

37 'He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me.

38 'And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

39 'He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it.

40 'He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.

41 He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet shall receive a prophet's reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man shall receive a righteous man's reward.

42 'And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward.

¹ Luke 12. 51.

² John 12. 25.

³ Mic. 7. 6.

⁴ Luke 14. 26.

⁵ Ch. 16. 24. Luke 9. 23. Mark 8. 34.

⁶ Luke 10. 16. John 13. 20.

⁷ Mark 9. 41.

§ 36. How much we ought to suffer and do for Christ, and how great will be our reward.

The apostles had been already warned to expect persecution from the world without. They have here, further, notice, that not even in their own families must they look for peace and concord. The Gospel is good tidings of "peace on earth;" see Luke 2. 14; that is, it makes us, in proportion as we receive it, at peace, with God, and with each other. But at its first preaching, it engrossed so deeply the affection of some, and so vehemently excited the opposition of others, as not unfrequently to set at variance even children and parents. Nor must we suppose that it will ensure us peace, even where it is generally professed; but expect rather, that it will sometimes furnish matter of painful difference amongst the nearest friends. Whensoever such cases shall arise, and they of the same household become in this sense our foes; let us remember that then only are we worthy of Christ, when we love not more than Him, father or mother, brother or sister, husband or wife. The duties we owe to these several relatives are so plainly enforced in the Gospel, and the affection we feel for them so highly extolled, that, in most instances, a readiness to comply with their desires will be the most substantial proof of our love towards Christ. And we must consider, therefore, these words of his to be comparative; not meant to extenuate the love we owe to them, but to exalt so much the higher that which is due to Him. Where, however, their wishes are opposed to that which, after the utmost pains taken to inquire, we believe, in all humility, to be his will; then, if we would be worthy of our Saviour, we must resolve to have his will preferred. Even this cross we must take up; and incur the displeasure of those we best love, rather than not follow Him. Even our lives, if needful, and all that makes life worth living, must we be willing for his sake to lose, if we would through Him hereafter find it.

In the midst of these threatened troubles, Christ assures his apostles, that whosoever received them should be counted to receive Himself. And He thus puts on record, for us, the most lively motive we could conceive, to treat with especial kindness those, whom we see to be ill used for his sake. If some have "entertained angels unawares," Heb. 13. 2, we too may have the privilege, in refreshing an oppressed disciple, of entertaining our common Lord and Saviour. Let us study both to receive "a prophet in the name of a prophet," that is, to treat with reverence, and assist with readiness, for their office' sake, the ministers of the word. And further, let us receive "a righteous man in the name of a righteous man;" that is, prefer such for our friends, not out of any worldly convenience we may expect to ensue, but out of a hearty regard for Christian piety, out of a lively sympathy in their love of Christ. And as we should be ever willing to do good to all men, so let us render ever our best offices to those whom, by reason of their sufferings in his behalf, we may count for his little ones, or beloved children. Whilst for ourselves we must herein look for no immediate return; but for a reward, which, when there shall be no more trouble, no more strife, no more death, we have God's sure word for it, that we shall in no wise lose.

Yes, it is reward that Christ vouchsafes to call it, though earned, as we well know, by no work of ours, but by his allsufficient worth. Only, by often calling it reward, He would impress on us this salutary truth, that our lot in the future life; is in some sort closely dependent on our conduct in this: "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Gal. 6. 7. More indeed, inestimably greater in amount, whether of glory, or of perdition; greater and more important, as are things eternal than things temporal. Yet shall every man receive "according to his deeds." Rom. 2. 6. And so carefully kept is the account, that where but "a cup of cold water" is given in true Christian love, our Lord has here declared of the giver, "he shall in no wise lose his reward." The more deeply we lay to heart this promise of a recompense, as our encouragement in Christian practice, the more frequently will our manifold frailties throw us back on the divine mercies, as they are assured to transgressors through the blood of Christ. And what can, on the other hand, more enliven our faith in his merits, and our sense of his love, than the hope that, through these, there is secured for service so faint, so frail as ours, a crown of eternal glory?

John sendeth his disciples to Christ.

1 And it came to pass, when Jesus had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.

2 ¹ Now when John had heard in the prison the works of Christ, he sent two of his disciples,

3 And said unto him, Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?

4 Jesus answered and said unto them, Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see :

5 ² The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and ³ the poor have the gospel preached to them.

6 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.

¹ Luke 7. 18.

² Is. 35. 6.

³ Is. 61. 1.

§ 37. The evidence of prophecy and of miracle.

How unwearied is our Lord in his labour of love ! “ When he had made an end of commanding his twelve disciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities.” He ceased not to work Himself, though He had others now commissioned to work for Him. Let those, who have others under them, learn hence, that they are not therefore excusable in a life of sloth, not therefore the less bound to labour in some useful employment. And let all of us here resolve to be “ not weary in well doing,” but diligent in whatever good we have in hand ; not doubting that, “ in due season, we shall reap, if we faint not.” Gal. 6. 9.

It was the office of John to prepare the minds of his disciples for believing in Christ. When therefore he was now in prison, and shortly about to die, he sends two of them, in order to inquire of Jesus, whether He were the Messiah or not. “ Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another ? ” This he is thought to have done for his disciples’ sake, who, after attending on his instructions, might probably have been inclined to prefer him for their master, to that Lord who was greater than he. For himself, he had plainly testified that Jesus was the Christ ; when he uttered that most full confession, “ Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.” John 1. 29. And yet we might not be surprised, if in the prison of Herod, he should himself have entertained some painful doubts, and applied to our Lord for satisfaction. The most eminent of God’s servants are not secure either from doubt or falling. Prosperity is the snare of some. Others faint under the rod of affliction. Can this be the Son of God who suffers me to be cast into prison ? is a misgiving which might very probably cross the mind of John the Baptist. It is such a one as has been many times suggested to the souls of afflicted Christians.

The answer is to be found in what follows : “ Go and shew John again those things which ye do hear and see.” The miracles of our Lord appeal to the plain senses of mankind. The disciples, if they could but hear and see, might know Him to be commissioned from on high. For no one, they might be sure, could do what He did, except God were with him. See John 3. 2. And further they might know Him to be no other prophet than the very Christ Himself, by reason of the prophecies which thus described the mighty works of the Messiah : “ The eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing.” Isai. 35. 5, 6. Thus are we directed, with the disciples of St. John, to consider prophecy and miracles, as the two main pillars of the Gospel revelation ; as the two most sure proofs that Jesus was the Christ. Whereof, prophecy may convince us, that He was concerned in it who knoweth all things ; and miracles, that He brought it to pass, to whose power all things are subject. Whilst both in this instance establish the fact, that Jesus of Nazareth was the Saviour of mankind, the promised Seed, even He that should come into the world.

Let us then take to ourselves his words which follow : “ Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.” Blessed is that man, who shall not, by the perversity of his own disposition, be hindered from believing in Christ. Blessed is he, the hardness of whose heart shall yield to the grace and truth of God ; and who, instead of being offended, that is stumbling, at the Gospel, shall receive it gladly, and be moved, by the receiving of it, unto newness of life. We, who live so long after our Lord’s coming, cannot enjoy, in the same manner, the benefit of those wonders, which at the first proved Him to be the Christ. We cannot see with our own eyes those miracles by Him performed, or those prophecies in Him fulfilled. But many prophecies there are in our own times fulfilling, of which we may plainly know, that they were recorded hundreds of years ago. Wonders, too, though not miracles, wonders scarce less strange, wrought by the same Lord, by his grace in man’s heart, these we may at the present time experience in ourselves. When we are made, through faith, to know things that are invisible ; is not this for the blind to see ? When they, whose feet are prone to evil, are enabled to live uprightly before God ; is not this for the lame to walk ? * Are not the lepers cleansed, when our sins, which were as scarlet, become white as snow ? And, when the heart, which was insensible to God’s goodness, is quickened to the fear and to the love of Him ; are not the very dead raised up ? The poor too have now the Gospel preached unto them. The tidings of salvation are now made known, with no less fulness, to the lowliest in the land, than to the monarch on his throne. Blessed therefore, now also, is he, whosoever shall not be offended in Christ. Blessed are they who shall profit by these means of conviction, not neglecting them to their own greater condemnation, but improving them, to their growth in grace !

Testimony of Christ concerning John.

7 And as they departed, Jesus began to say unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness to see? A reed shaken with the wind?

8 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft clothing are in kings' houses.

9 But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet.

10 For this is he, of whom it is written, ¹ Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

¹ Mal. 3. 1.

² Luke 16. 16.

|| Or, is gotten by force, and they that thrust men.

³ Mal. 4. 5.

11 Verily I say unto you, Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist: notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he.

12 ² And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven || suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.

13 For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John.

14 And if ye will receive it, this is ³ Elias, which was for to come.

15 He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

§ 38. How the kingdom of heaven is taken by violence.

Our Lord, in what went before, had corrected the views held in regard to Himself by St. John's disciples. He now sets right his own followers in their notions relating to the Baptist. St. John was by no means, as some perhaps thought, "a reed shaken with the wind," a man wavering in the doctrine he taught; but one whose preaching, rightly understood, uniformly testified that Jesus was the Christ. He was not, as some probably expected, a man clothed in soft raiment, habited like the messenger of them that rule in this world. His plain dress, as well as his sparing food, betokened rather the nature of that kingdom which he proclaimed, the reign of repentance, and self denial, and humility. Nor was he a prophet only. For besides foretelling, in his preaching, the kingdom of heaven, he was in his own person also a sign of its being come, his appearance being, according to former prophecy, appointed to prepare the way for Christ. Therefore was it his high commendation that "among them that are born of women," among all who up to that time had, in the ordinary way, descended from our first parents, "there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." And this high character we should observe, Christ gives him at the very time when he lay helpless in the prison of Herod. So many times are they, whom the world reckons most forlorn, esteemed the most highly in God's sight! So readily ought we also to own, and to speak well of, those whom we count for our brethren in Christ, at the very season when they are most in trouble, dishonour, or distress!

"Notwithstanding he that is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he." These latter words our Lord speaks, either of his apostles, or of Himself. And his meaning seems to be this: Though I thus highly praise John, and though the world reckons so little of my followers, and of Me, yet you should be aware, that I being the very person he foreshewed, I am greater than he; and you, as being my apostles, are greater also. For greater are the mysteries you have to reveal, more heavenly the doctrines, the motives, and the practice, you have to preach. Greater also is the sanction that will be given to your ministry, by miracles; the Lord, as St. Mark 16. 20, afterwards related, "confirming the word with signs following." And not you only, but my one even the least of my disciples, however low his rank and station in the flock, is in this sense greater than St. John, that he is a member of the new kingdom of heaven. For now is that kingdom being taken by force; now is it in the power of the earnest, the zealous, the persevering, however low their birth, or lowly their station, to become children, through faith, of God most high. No one therefore that lived before this time can be equal to those who enjoy these privileges. "Many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them." Ch. 13. 17.

And here let us note the temper by means of which the kingdom of heaven is said to be entered. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." This does not of course imply that any violence amongst each other is allowable in Christians; but that, whilst they are to be meek, and gentle, and peaceable, they must be strong, also in faith, and zeal, firm, and undaunted, in their efforts to attain unto everlasting life. Heaven, as we are elsewhere told, is to be approached only by a narrow way, only by a strait gate. Here we have the same notion enforced under a different figure. It is as a city fortified, which can be entered only by force. It is a house barred up, and fenced in, which none but the violent can break open. Let not us then be content to live at ease. Let us take some pains that may be compared with violence, towards entering the kingdom of heaven. If we are making no advance in holiness, if we do no violence to our own evil passions, if we resist not the devil, if we do not daily feel more and more the sinfulness of many things we do, and more and more, daily endeavour to do many things we have hitherto left undone; how can we be counted to have fought a good fight? how expect to enter with triumph into the heavenly city? Greater are our privileges, than those of prophets and kings, who lived before the manifestation of Christ. Greater in proportion should be our zeal; greater our exertion also.

May He, who hath set before us a crown so glorious, give us grace to desire it more earnestly, to contend for it more faithfully, and finally to attain unto its enjoyment, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

The waywardness of the Jews; and the sentence of Chorazin.

16 ¹ But whereunto shall I liken this generation? It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, 17 And saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented.

18 For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they say, He hath a devil.

19 The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they say, Behold a man gluttonous, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. But wisdom is justified of her children.

20 ² Then began he to upbraid the cities wherein most of his mighty works were done, because they repented not:

21 Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.

22 But I say unto you, it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you.

23 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works, which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day.

24 But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment, than for thee.

¹ Luke 7. 31.

² Luke 10. 13.

§ 39. The peril of knowing God's will without doing it.

The very same hearers found fault with John for his fastings, and with Jesus for his eating and drinking. By reason of this waywardness and folly, they are here likened to children, who, as they change rapidly their several sports, find fault, one party with another, for not changing as readily as themselves. So is it not unfrequently the case with those unhappy persons, who are bent against admitting the truth of God's revelation. Their several objections are inconsistent with each other; and prove only the perversity of their own will, only their determination at all events to disbelieve. So also, it is not uncommon for professed believers to find over some fault in their spiritual teachers. One they reckon too austere, another they call over indulgent; instead of aiming to profit, by the thankful use of whatever means of edification they have within their reach. So also, in the other duties we have each of us to do, how commonly do we plead excuses the most inconsistent, for the neglect of God's commands! When called upon to give, then we bethink ourselves of frugality. When it is a time to be frugal, then we are inclined to spend. When we ought not so much as to think evil of our brother, oh, how apt is the tongue to reproach and to complain! And when it would be true charity to tell him of his fault, oh, how reluctant are our lips, to hurt, either his feelings, or our own!

"But wisdom is justified of her children." That is to say, in spite of this prevailing perversity of mankind, though many thus derive no benefit from the counsel of God for their salvation; yet are there many who use it effectually; yet are there enough convinced, converted, and confirmed in holiness, to justify all the pains that have been taken for that end. How large must be the value of each single soul! and how great the joy and glory of its saving! if even the few that shall be chosen are enough to justify the whole economy of grace, if these few, how few we know not, are worth all the provision of prophecy, the interference of miracles, the incarnation of Christ, and, above all, the shedding of his blood! And how should it animate our faint exertions, and quicken our dead affections towards heaven, to think that we have within us a charge so precious; souls, that by a true faith in the Gospel of Christ, may justify its wisdom to the world!

Or let us lay to heart, on the other hand, the sentence recorded, in what follows, against a wilful unbelief. "Woe unto thee, Chorazin!" saith our Lord, "woe unto thee, Bethsaida!" cities these wherein many of his miracles had been wrought; "for if the mighty works which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes," they would have believed in earnest, so as to change their hearts and lives. "But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you." Hence it appears, that the future Judge of all can measure, even in those who never heard the Gospel, how far, had they heard it, they would have obeyed it. And with such persons, He will weigh, in the balance of equity, those who have seen, and heard, without conviction. What a fearful thought is this to us, who are enjoying, in so full degree, the light of the Gospel of Christ! Far more we know of our Lord, and of his mighty works, than did they of Chorazin and Bethsaida. We know that for us He died on the cross. We know that for us He arose from the dead. We know that He ascended also into heaven, in order that where He is, there we might be also. See John 14. 3. Are then our hearts already there? Does our knowledge affect our intentions, our desires, our exertions towards holiness and heaven! Does it work in us that repentance and faith, that amendment of life, and devotion of soul, which it would have wrought, as our Saviour tells us, in the most profligate of the heathen? If not, if we know without practice, if, whilst we take pride in our knowledge of Christianity, we are all the while "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God," 2 Tim. 3. 4; our sentence is here plainly set down, "It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you."

Christ calleth to Him all who labour and are heavy laden.

25 ¹ At that time Jesus answered and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes.

26 Even so, Father: for so it seemed good in thy sight.

27 ² All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; ³ neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

28 Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

29 Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

30 ⁴ For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.

¹ Luke 10. 21.

² John 3. 35.

³ John 6. 46.

⁴ Jer. 6. 16.

⁵ 1 John 5. 3.

§ 40. That the yoke of Christ is rest to the weary soul.

It was not for hiding the Gospel from the wise, but for revealing it to the simple, that our Lord here offers thanks unto the Father. The expression is like that of St. Paul to the Romans, 6. 17. "God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you." In both cases it is implied that the blessing spoken of, when compared with the evil referred to, is so much the more worthy of especial thanks. That they who, in the estimation of the world, are wise and prudent, should often fall short of the knowledge of Christ, is indeed most deeply to be lamented. But so much the more ought we to rejoice, that these things are revealed to all, who have the simplicity and willingness of babes. Herein we see one great excellence of the Christian dispensation, that it requires for a saving knowledge, not that learning which only few can attain, but that honesty of purpose, which is in the reach of all. The Gospel is revealed unto babes. It is revealed not by human wisdom, but by the "Lord of heaven and earth;" and by Him it is applied as easily to the most plain, as to the most enlightened, understanding; to the hearts of children, as of full grown men.

That Son to whom all things are delivered, and who alone can reveal to us the Father, hath so also Himself ordained it; offering rest to all without distinction, who labour and are heavy laden with the burden of sin. "Take my yoke upon you," saith He, "and learn of me." Work not, that is to say, on your own plan, but under my yoke, under my guidance. Be not in your own conceit wise and prudent, but "learn of me;" apply to Me; and, as children to a parent or a master, so commit your minds to my instruction. "For I am meek and lowly in heart." In my own conduct you may find a pattern of the humility I require. I, even the Son, I who alone can reveal the Father, even I am meek, and lowly in heart. Much more then does it become you to be so. "And ye shall find rest unto your souls." Ye shall enjoy that inward peace, which no wisdom, power, or wealth of this world, can bestow. "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Ye shall be relieved from the yoke of the Law. The authority I exercise, and the service I require, will redound to your comfort here, as well as to your happiness in heaven.

It is true we are in other passages bidden earnestly to "strive," Luke 13. 24; told to exert ourselves as the "violent," ch. 11. 12; and warned that we must run, as in a race, if we would hope to win the prize. See 1 Cor. 9. 24. And, at first sight, this may seem hardly to agree with Christ's yoke being easy, and his burden light. But we may hence learn in what sense it is so; namely, not as allowing us in sin, but as altogether requiring of us to sin no more. Hard it may be to be holy; but it is harder to be wicked, and to be miserable for ever. Most difficult, even in this life, is the yoke of sin; most heavy the burden of an unchristian life. Instead of being meek, to be irritable, and unkind to each other. Instead of lowly in heart, to be proud, selfish, and easily offended. Ever to be full of care about the morrow of this world; ever to be full of remorse for the past. To have the feelings and the conscience, perpetually at variance. To have no peace in life, and no hope in death. This is the labour, this the heavy load, from which the yoke of Christ will give effectual rest. Light is that yoke compared with the weight of sin. Light, when He helps us Himself to bear it. Light, when He beareth our infirmities, and his strength is made perfect in our weakness. "Great are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of all." Psalm 34. 19. His worldly afflictions may be as heavy as those of other men. And besides them, he has a care the world knows nothing of, the care of his immortal soul; the working out his salvation with fear and trembling. Yet do all these things "work together for good to them that love God." Rom. 8. 28. The most irksome labour is made agreeable, and the most painful anxiety is relieved by love. The body may suffer, but the heart has joy. The flesh may be weary, but the soul is sure of rest.

God grant that, as each heart "knoweth his own bitterness," Prov. 14. 10, so each may seek for comfort to this source of sweetest joy! God turn the thoughts of them who know Him not, from the toil of indolent enjoyment, and from the pains of pleasurable sin, to the pure delights of holiness and hope! God raise up them that tremble at his word; strengthen the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees; revive the spirit of the humble, and revive the heart of the contrite ones! See Isai. 66. 5; 35. 3; 57. 15.

That the Son of man is Lord of the sabbath.

1 At that time ¹ Jesus went on the sabbath day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungred, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat.

2 But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto him, Behold, thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath day.

3 But he said unto them, Have ye not read ² what David did, when he was an hungred, and they that were with him;

4 How he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shewbread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, ³ but only for the priests?

5 Or have ye not read in the ⁴ law, how that on the sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the sabbath, and are blameless?

6 But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple.

7 But if ye had known what this meaneth, ⁵ I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless.

8 For the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath day.

9 ⁶ And when he was departed thence, he went into their synagogue.

¹ Mark 2. 23. Luke 6. 1. Deut. 23. 25.

² Numb. 28. 9.

³ 1 Sam. 21. 6.

⁴ Hos. 6. 6. ch. 9. 13.

⁵ Exod. 29. 32, 33. Lev. 8. 31. & 24. 9.

⁶ Mark 3. 1. Luke 6. 6.

§ 41. The rule of the Christian sabbath.

In the sermon on the mount we learn exactly how far the Gospel was designed to interfere with the elder revelation. "Think not," saith our Lord, "think not that I am come to destroy the Law, or the Prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." Chap. 5. 17. Part He had to fulfil by his life, and by his death, by the miracles He wrought, by the example He left, by the cross which He endured; and part by the doctrine He taught, by the more full revelation He made of the will of God. This declaration is followed up, in that divine discourse, by an enlarged and spiritual application of some of the most important commandments of the Law. Here we have the law of the sabbath thus fulfilled, thus enlarged, that is, enforced and applied in its true spiritual sense, to the conscience of the Christian.

The disciples, it seems, plucked some corn, in order to satisfy their hunger as they went through the fields. This, as we learn in Deuteronomy 23. 25, was strictly according to the letter of the law: "When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand, but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn." The disciples however had done this on the sabbath day. And the Pharisees, who exacted a most rigid observance of the letter of the fourth commandment, found herein new ground of complaint. "Behold, thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the sabbath day. But he said unto them, 'Have ye not read what David did?'" He first reminds them of an instance in their own history, how David and his company satisfied their hunger with the shewbread, see 1 Sam. 21. 6, which, according to the Law, should have been eaten only by the priests; whatever remained over being appointed to be burnt. See Exod. 29. 32, 33. This action, therefore, of David proved thus much, that urgent hunger was a case of such necessity, as to justify a violation of the Law.

But further our Lord argues, "the priests in the temple profane the sabbath," that is, they violate the entire rest of it, by their offering of burnt sacrifice, see Num. 28. 9. "and are blameless." For the Law itself enjoined them so to do. "But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple." If, that is to say, the necessary services of the temple justify the priests in what they do on the sabbath, much more may my disciples, deprived by their attendance upon Me of their former livelihood, pluck and eat on this day these ears of corn.

And besides all this, He reminds them of passages in the Jewish Scriptures, which point to a more spiritual method of interpreting all the commandments of God. Such was that of Hosea 6. 6. "I desired mercy, and not sacrifice." Sacrifice was one of the chief things appointed by the Law. And yet the Jews were here plainly told, that it must never interfere with that heavenly temper, which it was the object of the Law to produce. So also would it be a gross mistake to enforce the observation of the sabbath, by any harsh or uncharitable censure of those who neglect it. "For the Son of man is Lord even of the sabbath day." And his apostles were fully justified by his sanction. And the Pharisees, therefore, in finding fault with them, had "condemned the guiltless."

The sovereignty of the Son of man over the sabbath day has been made manifest, by the ordinance having been observed, since his time, on what, according to the Jews' reckoning, is the first, instead of on the last day of the week. Our sabbath is the day on which He arose from the dead, and became the first fruits of that new creation, which comprehends all those who die in the Lord. That day then let us take care to spend, not in mere ceasing from worldly work, much less in the enjoyment of mere worldly pleasures; but in labouring for that meat which endureth unto eternal life. Hungering and thirsting after righteousness, let us pluck, and eat, the ears of that good seed, which will spring up in us unto everlasting life. The harvest is ready. The Lord of the harvest invites. His word proclaims to all who are in need, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat." Isai. 55. 1. The sabbath is of all others the great day for this work of spiritual improvement. Let us seek to enjoy its benefit, not by the formal indolent use of outward ordinances, but by such diligent and faithful attendance on them, as may nourish the soul, against the life that is to come.

The withered hand healed on the sabbath day.

10 And, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath days? that they might accuse him.

11 And he said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out?

12 How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the sabbath days.

13 Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.

14 Then the Pharisees went out, and held a council against him, how they might destroy him.

15 But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence; and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all;

16 And charged them that they should not make him known:

17 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying,

18 Behold my servant, whom I have chosen; my beloved, in whom my soul is well pleased: I will put my spirit upon him, and he shall shew judgment to the Gentiles.

19 He shall not strive, nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets.

20 A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench, till he send forth judgment unto victory.

21 And in his name shall the Gentiles trust.

|| Or, took counsel.

¹ Is. 42. 1.

§ 42. The use and limit of publicity in doing good.

The Pharisees, in finding fault with the disciples, for plucking the ears of corn on the sabbath, were convicted by our Lord of condemning the guiltless. Yet they were not the less anxious, immediately afterwards, to find ground for accusing in like manner our Lord Himself. Let us beware lest, if like them we once begin to find fault wrongfully, we should be tempted to add sin to sin, till like them we come to shame, and confusion of face.

“And, behold, there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath days? that they might accuse him.” Jesus first appeals to their own ordinary practice. They were ready, on the sabbath, to rescue any animal that had fallen into danger. Hence He argues, from their own admission, that it is lawful on the sabbath days to do well; that is, to do any act of charity or kindness, if to a dumb animal, much more to our fellow creatures. “Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand.” This we may reckon the second point in our Lord’s answer to the Pharisees. For as none other than God could fulfil these words of power, their fulfilment proved the lawfulness of healing the man on the sabbath. “And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other.” Thus did Christ silence his gainsayers, at once by the force of reason, and by the evidence of their senses. Would that Christians in like manner sought to convince the world, not by words only, and by arguments, but by actions of Christianity! Would that, by bounty more enlarged, by honesty more strict, by diligence more disinterested, than that of the rest of mankind, they would stretch forth the withered hand, and make manifest the power of God’s grace.

The Pharisees, though put to silence, were none the nearer to being converted, but “went out, and held a council against him, how they might destroy him. But when Jesus knew it, he withdrew himself from thence.” This He did that He might avoid raising any public disturbance. And for the same reason, though He healed all among the multitudes which followed Him, He “charged them that they should not make him known.” In this conduct we find fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, in which the Messiah is described as the chosen of God, the beloved in whom He is well pleased. Isai. 42. 1, 2, 3. “I have put my spirit upon him;” meaning, on Him shall the Holy Ghost descend. “And he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles;” through Him, that is, shall the way of righteousness be revealed to all mankind. “He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.” He shall be meek, gentle, and peaceable, in the method of his ministration upon earth. “A bruised reed shall he not break.” He will not bear hard on the spirit that is already contrite. “And the smoking flax shall he not quench.” Nor extinguish by severity the slightest embers of repentance and faith. “He shall bring forth judgment unto truth.” This forbearance He shall continue to shew till He bring forth “judgment unto victory,” till the time when man’s trial shall cease, the judgment take place, and the triumph of holiness over sin be signalized, by the reward of the one, and by the punishment of the other.

This prophecy did our Saviour now plainly fulfil by the meekness with which He withdrew from his enemies, and by the privacy which He enjoined on those whom He had healed. Yet was He ready, as we find elsewhere, to avow Himself openly; whenever, by so doing, He could promote the good of the people, or the glory of God. Hence we may learn both how to encounter evil, and how to be doing good. Openly we ought to give our alms, and firmly to brave scorn and malice, whenever we may thus best encourage others in their duty. Yet should we withdraw from the view, and avoid the observation of them that would revile our religion, when we can do so without dishonour to God. And when, without discouragement of others’ charity, we can conceal our own bounty, then should we not so much as let the left hand know what the right hand doeth. See Matt. 6. 3.

Christ healeth one who was both blind and dumb.

22 ¹ Then was brought unto him one possessed with a devil, blind, and dumb: and he healed him, insomuch that the blind and dumb both spake and saw.

23 And all the people were amazed, and said, Is not this the son of David?

24 ² But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils.

25 And Jesus knew their thoughts, and said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and every city or house divided against itself shall not stand:

26 And if Satan cast out Satan, he is divided against himself; how shall then his kingdom stand?

27 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your judges.

28 But if I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you.

29 Or else how can one enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he first bind the strong man? and then he will spoil his house.

30 He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad.

¹ Luke 11. 14.

² Ch. 9. 34.

§ 43. That Christ doth not cast out devils by Beelzebub.

That he, who was blind and dumb, should both speak and see, that the man should be healed, and the evil spirit cast out by Jesus, these things made the people ask in their amazement, "Is not this the Son of David?" "But when the Pharisees heard it, they said, This fellow doth not cast out devils, but by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils." They did not, like some later unbelievers, question the fact of our Lord's miracles. Or rather they could not possibly do this, whilst the miracles were being daily performed by Christ. They ascribed therefore his mighty works to the agency of the evil spirits, to the very power which He assailed and subdued. The absurdity of this notion is here exposed, by four distinct considerations.

First, it amounts to supposing that Satan would cast out Satan, would himself frustrate his own malice, divide against itself his own kingdom. Hence we may infer the folly of ascribing, as the world is apt to do, any conduct which bears the marks of Christian excellence, to selfish, unworthy motives, to false enthusiasm, or yet more false hypocrisy. Satan doth not cast out Satan. Christian conduct flows only from Christian grace. And wherever we see the one, we are justified by reason to presume, as well as bound in charity to hope, the other.

Secondly, our Lord argues, "If I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your children cast them out?" Your children, that is, the apostles, themselves children of Israel, who had lately been commissioned to cast out devils, who had already done so, and against whom the Pharisees brought no such objection. "Therefore shall they be your judges." They, being of your own family, have through Me been enabled to do this very thing, which, in Me ye object to, though ye allow it in them. They have been convinced by my miracles that the kingdom of God is come. They have proved their faith by their success in this very work. They then, as having had no better means of conviction than yourselves, they shall be your judges; they shall rise up in the judgment against you, and shall condemn you. Have then we ourselves in common many means of knowledge and of grace? And is there any one who falls short in the use of them? Let him remember that the very children of the same family, the other members of the same household, who profit by the privileges which he enjoys in vain, let him remember, these shall be his judges.

Thirdly, not only do I not work through the aid of Satan, in casting out his subject spirits, but I must needs have first bound the strong man, ere I could thus spoil his house. My healing the possessed of devils is thus a sign, not of my working with him, or through him, but of my having taken him captive. Strong though he be, strong as against man's frailty, yet is he weak before my power. Let us then, in all our spiritual conflicts, encourage ourselves with reflecting, that He, whom we serve, He, who is on our side, has bound the strong man; and will enable us, if only we quit ourselves as men, see 1 Cor. 16. 13, to share also in spoiling his house.

Fourthly, "He that is not with me is against me." My object is to do good. His to do evil to the souls of men. How can it then be that he, whose main design is so opposite to mine, should in any respect work with Me? Nay, how can he fail to work against Me? Here we see how watchful we ought to be against every thought, connexion, or pursuit, which helps us not forward in our Christian course. Either it is with Christ, or against Him. If it forms no part of our duty; if it tends not to make us more holy, more heavenly minded, more helpful to man our brother, or more serviceable to our master Christ; then, we may be sure, it is against us, it is against our souls, for it is a hindrance to their salvation.

Thus false is shewn to be the conclusion of the Pharisees against our Lord. Let us rather infer, with the people, that He was the son of David. Let us as faithful subjects obey his word. And kneeling down in reverence at his footstool, let us beseech Him to cast out of ourselves all evil spirits, all blindness of mind, all deafness, all dumbness of heart, that would render us unfit for his service. That we may thus better see his truth, and hear his word, and sound his praise. And that there may be in us, no divided empire, but only the kingdom of God through Christ.

Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven.

31 Wherefore I say unto you, ¹ All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men: but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men.

32 And whosoever speaketh a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him: but whosoever speaketh against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come.

33 Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or else make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit.

¹ Mark 3. 28. Luke 12. 10. 1 John 5. 16.

34 O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, speak good things? ² for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.

35 A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things.

36 But I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.

37 For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words*thou shalt be condemned.

² Luke 6. 45.

§ 44. How we shall be justified or condemned by our words.

To speak a word against the Son of man, means, to express a doubt as to whether He were the Christ. This our Lord allows to be comparatively pardonable in his hearers; meaning, especially whilst He appeared to them as “a man of sorrows,” Isai. 53. 3, in a form and character so different from what they ignorantly expected. But to speak against the Holy Ghost was to speak against that Spirit with which in their own Scriptures they were familiar. And to ascribe the miracles which that Spirit had foretold, and now very plainly fulfilled, to ascribe these out of mere perversity to Beelzebub, this was an offence, comparatively, if not absolutely, unpardonable. As “the tree is known by his fruit,” so might the Jews plainly know, that the casting out of devils, being a good work, could not come of an evil spirit, but of the good Spirit. To ascribe it to the corrupt tree, to account for it by the agency of Beelzebub, was wilful blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

And here we should observe for our comfort, that whereas many persons have suffered painful apprehension lest they should fall into this unpardonable sin, and have been perplexed to understand what sin it is; we should observe, it is no where called in Scripture the sin against the Holy Ghost, but always “blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.” So that we may know certainly it is an offence of the lips; rooted indeed in an evil heart of unbelief, but expressed in a daring denial of the Spirit, in ascribing his work to devils.

Our Lord, in acts of contumely against Himself, returned always good for evil; graciously bearing with the contradiction of those, who, even in his humiliation, had full means to know Him. He now threatens, however, with endless punishment, such wanton words as blaspheme the Holy Ghost. And He reproves severely the Pharisees, as being guilty, or at least in danger, of this grievous offence. “O generation of vipers.” He allows them not for children of Abraham, but refers them to fit parents for malice so venomous. “How can ye, being evil, speak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh.” No wonder ye thus utter blasphemy, for in your hearts ye cherish evil unbelief. And according to whatsoever in the heart is felt, does the mind imagine, and the tongue express. And since the words of the mouth are so sure a sign of the state of the heart, therefore, our Lord adds, “I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.” Not only against wilful and extreme blasphemy, is punishment ordained for ever; but for all offences of the lips, for all words whatsoever, even for those which are spoken with least consciousness, or thought, shall men have to answer hereafter.

Thus by our words we shall be justified, or by our words we shall be condemned; accounted either to be, or not to be, justified, through faith in Christ. Our words will be taken for a fruit of faith, or a proof of faithlessness, no less sure, and sufficient, than our actions. It is not enough that we speak habitually the truth, that we avoid slander, censure, ill language, oaths, and corrupt communication. Our conversation must be holy; even such as flows from holiness in the heart. It must imply ever, if not express, a love, and reverence for God. It must prove that we are not ashamed of Christ, and of his words, in the midst of “an evil and adulterous generation.” Ver. 39. Let us not then deem it too much to watch each idle word we utter. For Christ has here plainly told us, they will not be too much for Him to judge. Those, which are the most lightly spoken, have often the most weight of sin. And those, of which we take least heed run most risk to be noted for our condemnation. With horror let us avoid all approach to blasphemy, as to a sin, that least of any, admits of pardon. Carefully too let us guard against all other offences of the lips. Nor let us be content to be only not condemned by our words. Let us endeavour also in this sense to be justified by them. Let us speak ever with an eye to God's glory, and follow after those things wherewith one may edify another. See 1 Thess. 5. 11. Let us seek frequent opportunity to inform and exhort our brethren for good. And let us make occasion, where we cannot find it, by shewing forth, in all we say, at any time, a spirit of forbearance, gentleness, and love.

Christ rebuketh them who ask for a sign.

38 ¹ Then certain of the scribes and of the Pharisees answered, saying, Master, we would see a sign from thee.

39 But he answered and said unto them, An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it but the sign of the prophet Jonas:

40 ² For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

41 The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: ³ because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and, behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

42 ⁴ The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it: for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

43 ⁵ When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest, and findeth none.

44 Then he saith, I will return into my house from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, swept, and garnished.

45 Then goeth he, and taketh with himself seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: ⁶ and the last state of that man is worse than the first. Even so shall it be also unto this wicked generation.

¹ Ch. 16. 1. Luke 11. 29. 1 Cor. 1. 22

² Luke 11. 24.

³ Jonah 1. 17.

⁴ Jonah 3. 5.

⁵ 1 Kings 10. 1.

⁶ Heb. 6. 4. and 10. 26. 2 Pet. 2. 20.

§ 45. How we may be the worse for privileges, if we abuse them.

The Pharisees here try a new method of ensnaring the divine Teacher. They come to Him with plausible words, calling Him by the name of "Master," and expressing their readiness to believe, if He would but give them some certain sign. To their more provoking questions He had before answered meekly; He now proves his knowledge of their purpose, and his aversion to their flattery, by a more severe reply. "An evil and adulterous generation," degenerate from their fathers, and themselves guilty of all manner of evil, "seeketh after a sign;" would fain have some evidence more forcible than what God offers, and demand for their believing, demonstrations so plain, as would leave no room for belief at all. "There shall no sign be given it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas." The evidences of prophecy and miracle are enough. And bath does the case of Jonas afford: prophecy, in that the Son of man shall fulfil what Jonas had in the whale foreshewn; and miracle, in that He shall do so, by raising Himself, after having been three days dead, from the bowels of the earth. The Ninevites we know repented, but the Jews did not. And yet Jonas was a stranger, and Christ preached to his own, to a people prepared for his ministration. Jonas wrought no miracle, and Christ many. Jonas preached once only, Christ continually. Therefore might He well say, that they, who repented at the preaching of Jonas, should rise in the judgment with that generation, and condemn it. Their conversion proves that God gave by his prophets, much more by his Son, sufficient signs for faith. And it must aggravate therefore the condemnation of all those who nevertheless refuse to believe. And much more shall they be condemned by the queen of the south, who not waiting to be called or preached to, came herself, "from the uttermost parts of the earth, to hear the wisdom of Solomon. And, behold, a greater than Solomon is here." So that instead of demanding any further sign, ye ought yourselves, our Lord means, to press forward for that heaven which I now proclaim; ye ought to repent at the preaching of that Messiah, of whom Jonas and Solomon were but prophets and types.

To these reproofs our Lord here adds one other fearful consideration, which we may do well to attend to as most important to ourselves. It is this; that to neglect opportunities of knowledge, to fall away from grace given, renders a man, so much the more utterly, the victim of sinful passions, and of evil spirits. Ever are these malicious enemies on the watch for our destruction. And though one should be for a time cast out, yet only so much the more is he dissatisfied, till he can regain possession of the soul he once has counted for his own. How watchful ought this thought to make us! how anxious to increase daily in the knowledge of Christ, and not in the knowing only, but in the doing also of Christ's will! For what though the soul be swept and garnished, that is, cleared of ignorance, furnished with better means to do right; yet, if the evil spirit find it empty also, if it have not profited by its knowledge, and improved its opportunities of good, but is still unoccupied by the Spirit of God, untenanted by the graces of the Christian covenant; then taketh he "seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter in and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first." His passions are more confirmed in the mastery, his heart more hardened in sin, his repentance more hopeless, his condemnation more severe.

So was it with the wicked generation of the Jews. So will it be with those also, who, in our favoured eminence of religious knowledge, attain not a due proportion of Christian grace. To be empty is not safety. Either we must be filled with faith and holiness; or, our last state, as we learn here, will be worse than the first. Else will the men of Nineveh, and the queen of the south, rise up in the judgment against us also, and condemn us. Else will spirits worse than that of ignorance, even those of an unthankful and a hardened heart, enter in, and dwell with us for ever.

The mother and brethren of Christ desire to speak with Him.

46 While he yet talked to the people, ¹ behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him.

47 Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee.

48 But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren?

49 And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren!

50 For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother.

¹ Mark 3. 31. Luke 8. 20.

§ 46. To be the brethren of Christ is the most true nobility.

The mother and brethren of Jesus became naturally of great importance in the eyes of the disciples. So great indeed, that in after times Christians fell into the gross error of dividing to them the honour due to Christ alone. Against any such sinful practice this passage affords an useful warning. For though our Lord on due occasions treated ever with most kind attention his earthly parent, we see here that He considered her to be no more exempt from human frailty, no less subject to his divine admonitions, than any other of his hearers. "While he yet talked to the people," He was interrupted by the tidings, that his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with Him. What message they sent to that effect is not here set down. But it appears as if they reckoned too highly on their claim of kindred, in asking the exclusive attention of Christ, whilst He was engaged in preaching the Gospel. The remark which followed, from the divine Teacher, was calculated to check in the many undue presumption in their special privileges. "Who," saith He, "is my mother? and who are my brethren?" And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother."

Hence we learn how groundless a superstition it is, to offer, unto the mother of our Lord, any reverence approaching to divine worship. Deeply we ought to respect the memory of one who was so "highly favoured." Luke 1. 28. And greatly we ought to profit by the example of all God's departed saints. But we must observe, in regard to divine honours, one exclusive rule: "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." Ch. 4. 10.

Here also we see the folly of being proud, as many among mankind are, of their high extraction, or great relations. If to be so near akin to Christ Himself conferred no exclusive dignity, how much less should any one be elated by relationship to the most noble of his fellow creatures, to the most wealthy, or even to the best! The eminence, or the graces of our ancestors and kindred, are matters that should move us to exertion, not encourage us in that vanity which leads commonly to sloth. The more they have done, the more we ought to try to do, lest we be found to fall short. And specially the more of service to our heavenly Lord should we therefore aim to perform; running herein a race, in all humility, but with all zeal and hope, striving to win the prize. For here we have set before us the fountain of true nobility; even to do the will of God above. Here is proposed to all, that through faith and obedience, they may each severally be reckoned for brother and sister by Christ Himself. At what higher distinction can the most ambitious aim? To what kindred more exalted can the most noble pretend? And to all is this most graciously extended; even to all, who honestly and earnestly endeavour to be Christians indeed, to all who walk watchfully in Christian holiness, through faith in Christ our Saviour.

Let us then be content with no less than this, to be counted of that blessed family whereof Christ is the head; to be in the number of those brethren whereof He is the elder. And for this end let us remember we must do more than stand without, desiring to speak with Him. We must do more than wait for Him. We must wait on Him, with prayer, and earnest supplication, that He will speak, with us, and to us, to our souls. We must do the brother's part, taking up always his cause as our own, forwarding any work in which his honour is concerned, and fearlessly confessing his name before a sinful and scornful generation. Then shall we find it in this life a relationship most fruitful in every good gift. Are we poor? we have a Brother who can make us rich. Are we weak? He can make us strong; strong in faith, and rich in grace. In our doubts, He will give us counsel; in our sorrow, consolation; in our joy, discretion and sobriety. But what are the sorrows, or the joys, of this world, in comparison with those of eternity? There, and in that hour when most we fear, when most our trembling hope shrinks from the presence of the Almighty God; then, if we have been here true brethren of Christ, then shall we have stretched forth to us his gracious hand, and hear in our favour his voice proclaim, "Behold my mother and my brethren!"

May our heavenly King confer on us the true nobility to be sons of Him, brethren of Christ! brethren, who dwell together in unity of faith and love! sons, who though what they shall be doth not yet appear, know that when He shall appear they shall be like Him. See 1 John 3. 2.

The parable of the sower and the seed.

1 The same day went Jesus out of the house, ¹ and sat by the sea side.

2 And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, so that he went into a ship, and sat; and the whole multitude stood on the shore.

3 And he spake many things unto them in parables, saying, ¹ Behold, a sower went forth to sow;

4 And when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way side, and the fowls came and devoured them up:

5 Some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth:

6 And when the sun was up, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up, and choked them:

8 But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, some an hundredfold, some sixtyfold, some thirtyfold.

9 Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

¹ Mark 4. 1.

² Luke 8. 5.

§ 47. The time and place and manner of hearing.

The parable of the sower is explained in what follows by our Lord Himself. We shall now therefore consider the time, and place, at which He delivered it; and the manner in which He exhorted his disciples to hear it. "The same day went Jesus out of the house." "And he spake many things unto them in parables." It was the day during which He had already been for a long time, as appears in the last chapter, speaking to the people. And there is reason to suppose that it was on a sabbath day. Whence we may take occasion to infer, both, the duty incumbent on those who teach to labour on that day more abundantly; and also the privilege to be on that day more largely enjoyed by those who have the benefit of divine instruction. Let us then rejoice in the many opportunities, we have offered us, to hear on the Lord's day the word of God. At home, and at church, in the public service, and in private devotion, let us be as desirous on our parts, to pray and to learn, as Christ was, we see, willing to teach, and as God is, we know, willing to hear.

Secondly as to the place of teaching, Jesus "went out of the house, and sat by the sea side. And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, so that he went into a ship, and sat; and the whole multitude stood on the shore." We read many times of our Lord's entering into a synagogue; and many times also of his teaching, as here, in the open air. And hence some have sought to justify that irregular kind of preaching which takes place amongst ourselves, either in the open air, or in any building not set apart for sacred uses. As if the case of a Christian country, abounding with Christian churches, and admitting of their being built to any desirable extent, were to be compared with Judæa, and with the Jews, at the first preaching of the Gospel! As if any human minister might claim the same right, of dispensing with all outward ordinances, as He did, who was Lord not of the sabbath only, but of the synagogue and of the temple, of the mountains and of the sea, of the earth and of the heavens! Well it might become Him to teach, with heaven for the ceiling of his church, and the waves of the sea for his footstool. And yet for us, who have houses set apart for God's service, and ordinances which require us to use them, it would be no less irreverent, than irregular, to desert them for the fields and highways. Nor let any one be perplexed by the reflection here likely to arise, that much good may have come of such proceedings, many sinners have been awakened to a lively sense of the necessity of caring for the soul. No doubt much good has been brought about, by God, from every evil thing that man has been allowed to do. But evil is not the less evil, nor is it any the less by us to be avoided, though good may be known to have come of it. Heartily we may thank God that sinners are by grace brought near to Christ. Heartily we may rejoice, as did St. Paul, see Phil. 1. 18, at Christ having been preached, though of envy, and strife, and contention, though, at the expence of reverence, unity, and peace. We may rejoice that men have been converted by the preaching; but we must neither rejoice in, nor take part with, nor countenance, those who so preach.

To this subject we may, in conclusion, apply the words of our Lord at the end of the parable before us. "Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." Whosoever hath opportunities of knowledge and grace, let him use them to the uttermost for good. Whosoever hath provided for him, as all have, or ought to have, in a land like ours, whosoever hath provided for him a faithful ministry, a decent house of prayer, and ordinances effectual to edification; let him resort to them diligently, punctually, regularly. Let him seek to no other. Let him extend these and their use as far as in him lies to all around him. Let him desire, and pray, and endeavour, that all may be of this same mind. And let him study to win others to it, by proving, in the continual amendment of his life, that he himself hears to the purpose.

Grant, Lord, to thy people, grace, to hear with faith the preaching of thy word; with reverence to frequent thy house of prayer; and to follow, with humility, those true shepherds whom Thou hast appointed to feed thy flock!

Christ answereth why He used to speak in parables.

10 And the disciples came, and said unto him, Why speakest thou unto them in parables?

11 He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given.

12 ¹ For whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

13 Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand.

14 And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, ² By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive:

15 For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them.

16 But blessed are your eyes, for they see: and your ears, for they hear.

17 For verily I say unto you, ³ That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

¹ Ch. 25. 29.

² Is. 6. 9. Mark. 4. 12. Luke 8. 10. John 12. 40. Acts 28. 26. Rom. 11. 8.

³ Luke 10. 24.

§ 48. The blessing of knowing and believing in Christ.

At the end of the parable of the sower, our Lord, before He has explained it, is asked by the disciples, "Why speakest thou unto them in parables?" "Because," saith He, "it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." Parables, that is, were well suited for a sort of hearers, of whom one portion was willing to receive, and the other determined to reject, what was said for the benefit of all. For their obscurity excites the attention of the one, and is made an excuse for ignorance by the other. And it affords not an excuse only, but also a punishment; preventing them from knowing without painful attention, that which they will take no pains to learn.

And further, lest we should suppose that knowledge is given to one, and withheld from another, without ground of reason; it is added, that "whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath." To you who are duly disposed, shall more zeal, more knowledge, be imparted, by the very same teaching, which bewilders those who desire not to learn, and takes away what little knowledge they have. "Therefore speak I to them in parables, because they seeing see not." Not simply because they see not, for this might have been no fault of theirs. But because "they seeing see not;" that is, having sight, use it not, having the power to see, are blind wilfully. And so also "hearing;" having the power to hear and understand, they wilfully hear not, and understand not. Wherewith we see fulfilled the prophecy of Isaiah, see Isai. 6. 9, 10, that they had closed their eyes on purpose, lest they should see with them, and lest they should be converted, and lest God should heal them. Thence our Lord, comparing his disciples with these unbelieving Jews, pronounces their eyes blessed, because they not only have power, but inclination also, to see; and their ears, in like manner, because they hear. And not so only; not only were they blest as compared with such as were unwilling to believe, but in preference also to those holy men of old, who had the desire to see, and hear, the things they saw and heard, but had desired in vain. Their faith in a Saviour to come might indeed be counted to them for righteousness: but much less correct must have been their views of holiness, much less bright their hope of heaven, much less distinct their notions of a Saviour, than those which might be enjoyed by the disciples of Christ Himself.

Great as was this privilege, great the blessing of thus enjoying the presence of Christ, yet, if we rightly view our own condition, we shall find it scarce less worthy of our devout thankfulness. Nor does it demand less urgently our most earnest exertion. We see not indeed what they saw. But notwithstanding we have in our hands, before our eyes, and addressed continually to our ears by the church, the very words of Christ's teaching, the very parables He spake. We may know, as certainly as if we had seen and heard, the things which our Saviour either said or did, so many of them, at least, as He has judged it necessary for our use to have recorded. We may know them as certainly, nay, in some respects, more profitably, than the multitudes to whom they were first addressed. For we have the advantage of the writings of the apostles, and the experience of the whole Christian church, and above all the gift of the Holy Spirit of God, to guide us to a right understanding of his will. Thus we may both know better, and believe more. Thus we may be blest with a more right apprehension of truth in the mind, and a more devout love of it in the heart.

Let us then be ever on our guard, lest we seeing see not, or hearing hear not. Let us be aware, that our own attention, and willingness, depends the degree of profit we shall derive from his word. Let us apply all we see, and all we hear, to the case of our own conscience, and the nourishment of our own souls. Let us pray ever unto Him who alone can give it, that to us it may be given to know, to our eternal benefit, the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. And above all let us hear with faith. That the word, being "mixed with faith," Heb. 4. 2, may spring up in our hearts unto everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Christ explains the parable of the sower.

18 Hear ye therefore the parable of the sower.

19 When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. This is he which received seed by the way side.

20 But he that received the seed into stony places, the same is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it;

21 Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by and by he is offended.

22 He also that received seed among the thorns is he that heareth the word; and the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful.

23 But he that received seed into the good ground is he that heareth the word, and understandeth it; which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, some an hundredfold, some sixty, some thirty.

§ 49. The bounty of the heavenly sower.

The seed here sown is the Gospel, "the word of the kingdom." The sower is our blessed Saviour; who by Himself, and by his ministers, deals it forth with unsparring hand to men of every variety of disposition. If then much of it be wasted, the fault is not in his bounty, but in the perversity of those on whose hard hearts it falls. Some receive it as by the way side; that is, on a beaten or trodden roadway, where there is no prospect for it to root, but rather for it to be picked up and devoured. These are they, whose thoughts are so trained in the ways of the world, and their hearts so hardened by pride, or any other deadly sin, that though the most urgent appeal of the Gospel be made to them, it finds no entrance to the soul, but is caught away by the wicked one, who there seeks his prey.

Some receive the word as in stony places; that is to say, in a situation where some little soil is found, amongst a profusion of stones and rubbish. These are they who have some faint and feeble good purposes, with an excess of such as are vain and sinful. At the moment of hearing the word of the kingdom, they are moved with a feeling of concern, and renew their resolutions of a more holy life. But the slight growth thus rapidly engendered soon ceases for want of soil. The heart is not deeply affected, is not converted truly unto God. Their resolutions therefore fail in the trial. The sunshine of prosperity, or the storm of affliction, easily make to wither their short lived proficiency.

Some receive the seed as among thorns; that is, among evil habits, which like thorns, or other pernicious weeds, exhaust the strength and fertility that should be employed in bearing good fruit. Such thorns, such weeds, are the care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches. And observe, Christ says not "riches," but "the deceitfulness of riches." Men may have them, without being deceived by them into loving them. So also He says not this world merely, but "the care of this world;" that too fond anxiety for the good things of it, that too busy thought for the morrow of it, which are apt to engross our attention. These are weeds, which though for a time they seem subdued under religious conviction, yet grow up again and choke the word, ere it bring forth fruit unto perfection. Not that they do always prevail; not that the stony ground is always barred; not that the beaten road is never made to flourish. With man these things are impossible. And not more folly would it be for us to cast seed on such spots as these, than, by any skill or effort of our own, to aim at recovering such disorders of the soul. But the heavenly Sower can soften even the stony heart, can cleanse the conscience that is else most foul, and can restore to its first simplicity the soul that is most backneyed in guile and sin. Even these can He make fruitful. Even to them therefore is the good seed by Him imparted. Even to all, in nations favoured, like our own, with the full light of the Gospel, even to all is it given to know his will, and to bear, if it be not their own fault, fruit unto perfection.

But above all to the good ground is it given, to those who hear the word, and understand it, and obey it, and, according to the measure of their grace and ability, bring forth their fruit in due season. Here we ought to note the importance of understanding aright that word which we have the happiness to hear. And thankful we ought to be that God deigns to accept not those only who bring forth an hundredfold, but sixtyfold also, and even thirtyfold. Let not us despond then, though we fall short of many, whose higher proficiency we hear of, or behold. It is for each to do what each is able. The heavenly Sower is no hard master. He knows how much every one is capable of; and will look for fruit accordingly. Less than this let us not think to offer. And specially let us beware of excusing ourselves, in any single point of negligence, by the plea, that though our practice be faulty, at least our heart is sincere. As the good ground is that which bringeth forth good fruit, so is that heart only reckoned right with God, which is moved to obey through faith in Christ. If the practice be sinful, the heart is much more sinful. And if it be so, we do but aggravate our sin, by presuming to consider it as good. Let us confess rather to a heart of stone, and pray God to soften it; to a heart corrupt and treacherous, and pray Him to make it true, and pure, and good.

The parables of the tares among the wheat, grain of mustard seed, and leaven.

24 Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field:

25 But while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way.

26 But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also.

27 So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares?

28 He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up?

29 But he said, Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them.

30 Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares, and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn.

31 Another parable put he forth unto them, saying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and sowed in his field:

32 Which indeed is the least of all seeds: but when it is grown, it is the greatest among herbs, and becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

33 Another parable spake he unto them; The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took, and hid in three † measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

34 All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them:

35 That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world.

¹ Mark 4. 30. Luke 13. 19.
wanting a little more than a pint.

² Luke 13. 20.
³ Mark 4. 33.

† The word in the Greek is, a measure containing about a peck and a half,
⁴ Ps. 78. 2.

§ 50. The growth and wide influence of a holy life.

The parable of the tares being explained in what follows, we will consider now the comparison of the kingdom of heaven to a grain of mustard seed. This is said to be "the least of all seeds," that is to say, a very small seed. "But when it is grown up, it is the greatest among herbs," that is, a very great herb; as it is still found to be in the east, where these words were spoken. "And becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof." Such has been the church of Christ, which is here meant by "the kingdom of heaven." The professed disciples of Christ were, for a while, fewer in number than the members of any one of the false religions, then prevalent in the world. Yet from this small beginning did there grow, as was here foretold, what might be compared to a lofty tree, a place of shelter and repose for multitudes. Would we then find rest unto our souls, in the midst of this world's vanity and cares? Let us seek it in that church of Christ which is invisible. Let us join ourselves, in heart and mind, to that secret company of faithful men, who form the body whereof He is the head, see Col. 1. 18, the tree of which He is the root. See Isai. 11. 10. Few though they may be, and slight the comfort which their society may be thought to afford; they are in the sight of God as the greatest among herbs, the chief among the children of men. And the faith they live by, though at first it take up but small space in the heart, displaces in the end all other motives, and spreads itself entirely throughout the soul.

The same notion is next set forth under an image still more familiar. If "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump," Gal. 5. 9; if so small a portion, as we know suffices, put into three measures of meal, that hide and bury it, has yet a secret power to make the whole ferment like itself; in like manner, argues our Lord to his disciples, shall the word which you preach, and which you are bound to adorn by holiness of life, bring over to the same heavenly condition the whole mass of mankind. Thus are the preachers and professors of the Gospel encouraged to go on unto perfection. Whilst they, who would oppose and gainsay it, are warned, that it is sure notwithstanding to succeed.

According to this account of the progress of Christianity, how important is the conduct of each single Christian, to the edification of his neighbour, and of all mankind. As the virtue of the leaven is communicated by degrees, from one particle of the meal to another; so was the knowledge of Christ at the first spread abroad; so must we now maintain, and promote amongst each other, true faith in Him, and devotion to his service. As each portion of the mass serves, when good, to assist in the working, or, when bad, to prevent its success; so may each individual amongst ourselves, if faithless, hinder the zeal of the rest, or if devout, help forward their proficiency. First we act on those most near to us; on those we live with and love most intimately. Through them we have influence on their friends, and again through them on theirs. Our sins then never come single. Besides offending God, we hurt also our neighbour. We do, as far as in us lies, by every act of transgression, hinder the salvation of them that witness it. Besides sinning ourselves, we encourage them to sin. Besides perishing, we lead them to perish.

Let us on the contrary endeavour to be as good leaven. Let us aim to spread abroad the love of Christ, by feeling it more deeply, and shewing it forth more faithfully, ourselves. And each occasion we have, to say, or to do, any thing that is good, any thing we may know to be his will, let us rejoice to think, that in obeying it, we shall provoke unto good works, see Heb. 10. 24, in our several degrees, not our friends only, and neighbours, but all mankind.

Christ explains the parable of the tares.

36 Then Jesus sent the multitude away, and went into the house: and his disciples came unto him, saying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field.

37 He answered and said unto them, He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man;

38 The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one;

39 The enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels.

40 As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world.

41 The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity;

42 And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

43 Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

¹ Joel 3. 13. Rev. 14. 15.

|| Or, scandals.

² Dan. 12. 3.

§ 51. That God permits evil in order to greater good.

In the parable of the sower, "the seed is the word of God." Luke 8. 11. Here we read "the good seed are the children of the kingdom." In one case the seed means that which is sown. In the other it means that which comes up. It is the Gospel that is sown. Faithful and good Christians are what spring up from it. "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man." He both sendeth forth his word, and sendeth grace into the hearts of them who hear, that they may grow therein. Thus it is that Christ soweth. Satan meantime is sowing bad seed. And thence grow up "the children of the wicked one." Thence grow up all kinds of vain religion, all idolatry, and heresy, and schism, all corrupt will worship, all spiritual ignorance, all spiritual pride, with which the world, and even the church, has been overrun. This is described as being done "while men slept;" that is to say, through their own fault, for want of pains, and diligence, and watchfulness. For since, by means of the prophets and apostles, all mankind might have retained, or renewed, the knowledge of the true God, and of his Son our Saviour Christ; it follows, that their falling away into so grievous error must be set down to their own perversity or neglect. Much more among Christians, for such as know Christ, and profess to serve Him, for these, by the indulgence of any wilful sin, to become children of the wicked one, is sure proof that they are little on their guard, that they are spiritually asleep. Let us then take care, that, when awake, we sleep not; cease not to watch against Satan, and against sin. And whereinsoever we have been overtaken by this fatal slumber, let us listen to the voice that still graciously proclaims, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Ephes. 5. 14.

"When the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also." The abominations of infidelity and sin continue even in the prevalence of the Gospel, and are by its very excellency made more evident. The servants of the householder are surprised at the appearance of the tares. And when informed that it was done by an enemy, they eagerly propose to go and gather them up. They receive for answer, first, that this would be bad for the wheat: "Nay; lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them." And in the next place, it is signified, that if only they wait patiently for the harvest, the tares will then be sure to be gathered up and burnt. "The harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels;" who shall gather out of Christ's kingdom "all things that offend." And "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Now from all this we may do well to learn, first, that evil, though permitted by God, is never actually done by Him. Whatsoever then of evil we behold around us, let us remember always, it is "an enemy hath done this;" an enemy, who might have been prevented, but who is allowed, by divine wisdom, to work for a time. Further, let us learn hence, that evil is permitted for the sake of good. It is better for the wheat that the tares should for the present remain. What indeed should more excite our zeal than the consciousness that there are gainsayers of our faith, ready rashly to censure it for our faults, or to be converted, it may be, through our piety and prayers. And so it is with the other evils we have around us. How could we be temperate, if never tempted to exceed? How forgiving, if never tried by injury? How, if never afflicted, "patient in tribulations?" Rom. 12. 12. How, if all alike were worthy of our regard, could we, in our conduct, imitate that heavenly love, which maketh the sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust. See Matt. 5. 45. Thus may we often see, how good is, in this world, brought to pass from evil. Though the evil, all the while, we should remember, is not the less evil, because some good, or much good, may come of it. The tares are not the less tares, nor the less devoted to be burnt, though it be good for the wheat that they grow together for a time. For here we learn, that as "the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world." Then shall the separation be made for ever. Then shall it be no longer good for the wheat to dwell with the tares. But whilst "the wicked shall be turned into hell," Ps. 9. 17, "the righteous," that is, they who through faith have "wrought righteousness," Heb. 11. 33, "shall shine forth as the sun," through the merits of Christ, "in the kingdom of their Father."

The parables of the treasure, the pearl, and the net.

44 Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

45 Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man, seeking goodly pearls:

46 Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it.

47 Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind:

48 Which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away.

49 So shall it be at the end of the world: the angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from among the just,

50 And shall cast them into the furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

51 Jesus saith unto them, Have ye understood all these things? They say unto him, Yea, Lord.

52 Then said he unto them, Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old.

§ 52. How much we must both sacrifice and do for Christ's sake.

Here we have three more parables, designed yet farther to make clear to us the nature of the kingdom of heaven, or, in other words, of the Christian dispensation, of holiness here, of heaven hereafter. First it is precious as treasure, difficult to find "as treasure hid in a field." And so great should be our joy at meeting with it, even as of a man, who thus finding treasure, "goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field." Many times he may have passed near to it, and never thought of its being there. Many times, nay at all times, is the kingdom of heaven not far from every one of us that are Christians. See Luke 17. 21. But how often is it unheeded! How often lost for want of diligence and zeal in the search! Let us delay no longer. Let us seek it first, before all things. And having found it, let us sell all that we have, and buy that field. Let us readily count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord. See Phil. 3. 8.

And lest we should think, that, like hid treasure, it may be found by mere hazard, without any toil or pains of ours, we have next set before us the example of a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls. Like his must be our search, laborious, anxious, persevering. Like him, when we have discovered this pearl of great price, we must spare no cost, however great, to obtain it. In this indeed both the parables agree, that if we would enter into the kingdom of heaven, if we would have grace to serve Christ on earth, or hope to reign with Him in heaven, we must here grudge no price however high, no sacrifice however precious. Whatever be our besetting sin, that sin we must resolve to part with; and not resolve only, but strive, and wrestle, and pray; and through prayer, and grace, and patience in well doing, must perform what we resolve. We must make good the price we have to pay, however hard this may be to us, however worthless compared with what we pay it for; we must make good the price we have to pay, or how can we expect to possess the precious pearl of holiness, the hidden treasure of eternal life?

So worse than worthless is profession without practice, that the highest Gospel privileges will increase our condemnation, if our lives all the while continue evil. For, again, "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind." Under the Gospel, both wicked men and good are included, in the same visible church of Christ. The obedient, and the disobedient, are both as in the same net, having a community of doctrine and of ordinances, "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." Ephes. 4. 5. But observe the consequence. Better were it for the evil to have been never in the net, than to be caught, only to be thrown away. Better for the wicked to have been never called Christians, than to have borne the name, only to disgrace it; only to be, so much the more certainly, cast into the furnace of fire, where "there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." Let us never then be encouraged in any known sin, by the reflection that it is of common occurrence among those who are called Christians. Many are in this net now, whom the angels must hereafter sever "from among the just." And shall we venture to run the risk of this condemnation?

At the end of these parables, our Lord remarks how many things must be well understood, and remembered, by a competent minister of the Gospel; by "a scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven." Such an one is here said to be like a householder "which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." He should have the learning of past ages, and the knowledge of the present. He should know well the volume of the Old Testament, and the full meaning of all that is in the newer covenant. And these things he should be able to bring forth, that is, to express, to explain, to enforce. Who then, we may well ask with the apostle, "who is sufficient for these things?" 2 Cor. 2. 16. Certainly not they, who with no previous study, take to themselves the preacher's office. Let us be thankful that we are members of a church, in which pains are taken, that they who teach others, should be themselves instructed, though compassed with the like infirmities, yet instructed carefully unto the kingdom of heaven.

Christ is contemned of his own countrymen.

53 And it came to pass, that when Jesus had finished these parables, he departed thence.

54 ¹ And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their synagogue, insomuch that they were astonished, and said, Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works?

55 ² Is not this the carpenter's son? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas?

56 And his sisters, are they not all with us? Whence then hath this man all these things?

57 And they were offended in him. But Jesus said unto them, ³ A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house.

58 And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief.

¹ Mark 6. 1. Luke 4. 16.

² John 6. 42.

³ Mark 6. 4. Luke 4. 24. John 4. 44.

§ 53. The danger of familiarity with things sacred.

Nazareth is the place called our Lord's "own country," because here He had chiefly dwelt. * Here therefore He was known before the commencement of his ministry; and here we might expect He would be the more highly esteemed in its progress. The people of Nazareth were however no more than "astonished." They asked in scorn, as we may well do in reverence, "Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works?" How could it be that One, of birth so lowly, of education so mean, should confound the wisdom of the wise, and speak "as never man spake?" John 7. 46. How could He, were He merely the son of Joseph, thus cast out devils, make the blind to see, the deaf to hear, the dumb to speak, heal lepers, nay, and forgive sins also? Obvious it is to us, as it should have been to them, that He, who did these things, was the promised Messiah, the Saviour of mankind. But they of Nazareth argued from what they supposed of his parentage, against what they knew of his words and works. "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? And his brethren James, and Joses, and Simon, and Judas? And his sisters, are they not all with us?" Thus they were "offended," or led to stumble, "in him." Thus did their familiar acquaintance with his circumstances, and connexions, prove a hindrance to their receiving his testimony and truth. To them therefore He applied justly the reproachful proverb, "A prophet is not without honour, save in his own country, and in his own house." From them He justly withheld the benefit of his healing miracles; "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief."

Hence we learn the dangers that attend on a familiar acquaintance with sacred things. Familiarity is, we know, said commonly, to breed contempt. And so will it be found to do, unless we watch to the contrary, in our habitual acquaintance with things spiritual. Each time we hear or read God's word, if we read or hear without attention, we shall be so much the less likely, the next time, to use it with reverence or profit. Each time we kneel down to pray, if, whilst the lips repeat our prayers, the thoughts are wandering, and the heart insensible to any spiritual want, we shall find it so much the more difficult, the next time, to worship in spirit and in truth. Such is our great danger in the frequent use of religious ordinances. Yet if we use them not frequently, we are sure to be lost. We need to use them therefore with most careful watchfulness against this very thing. We need to use them, not less frequently, for that would itself be sin; but more devoutly, for so might we best hope to sin less. We cannot be too familiar with them; if only, as we know them better, we love them more; if we pray more heartily, and hear more anxiously the words of life, and cling more fondly to the hope of heaven, and trust more faithfully in the blood of Christ.

For it is not whether we know these things or not, but whether we believe in them or not, that makes the whole difference. No one knew better than the men of Nazareth, the words, and the works of Jesus. Yet none less believed in his being the Christ. None were more adverse to admit, that beneath his lowly form, was "the desire of all nations," Hag. 2. 7, the Saviour of the world. Let us observe then the consequence of their want of faith. "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." So will it be also with ourselves. If in our hearts faith be wanting, from Him will no virtue come forth to save. If we trust not in his power, and love not, in return for his surpassing love, no wonder that neither is our corruption healed, our blindness cured, nor our perverse lives conformed to his will. Nor can we expect either that in our death his arm will be held forth to help, or his voice in mercy say to us "Arise." If He do not in us now the mighty works of grace, neither will He do then those of mercy and salvation. Remember that in both cases the fault, if we fail, is entirely our own; it is because of unbelief.

God grant, that the more we know, the more we may be disposed to believe! God make us, in our prayers, and in the study of his word, to go from strength to strength; the more we learn, the more to reverence, and the more we reverence, the more to love!

John the Baptist beheaded by command of Herod.

1 At that time ¹ Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jesus.

2 And said unto his servants, This is John the Baptist; he is risen from the dead; and therefore mighty works \parallel do shew forth themselves in him.

3 ² For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife.

4 For John said unto him, ³ It is not lawful for thee to have her.

5 And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, 'because they counted him as a prophet.

6 But when Herod's birthday was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them, and pleased Herod.

7 Whereupon he promised with an oath, to give her whatsoever she would ask.

8 And she, being before instructed of her mother, said, Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger.

9 And the king was sorry: nevertheless for the oath's sake, and them which sat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her.

10 And he sent, and beheaded John in the prison.

11 And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damsel: and she brought it to her mother.

12 And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus.

¹ Mark 6. 14. Luke 9. 7.

\parallel Or, are wrought by him.

² Luke 3. 19.

³ Lev. 18. 16. & 20. 21.

⁴ Ch. 21. 26.

§ 54. That the progress of sin is rapid.

Herod has only now heard of the fame of Jesus, being among the last, as it should seem, in all his dominions, whom these great tidings reached. For high rank and station are in many things less favoured than the lot of poverty. And in this sense it is most true that the Gospel is preached to the poor, namely, that these have often a larger, usually at least an equal, opportunity, of knowing, and serving, and pleasing, God. In the remark of Herod to his servants we see the force of an evil conscience. "This is John the Baptist," John whom the guilty ruler had put to death, lives ever active in his memory. John is the name most ready on his lips, to account for any thing that is strange and awful. So is it of all whom men injure whilst on earth. Easily as they, at the time, forget the wrongs they inflict on each other, by slander, deceit, oppression, or neglect; the hour is not far distant, when they will rise up in the awakened imagination, and fill with horror each impenitent offender.

Herod had put John in prison, out of resentment for the righteous testimony of the Baptist, against his living with his brother's wife. He had, it is true, spared the life of his prisoner; but that, out of no regard to mercy, only because "he feared the multitude." In what followed, we see how easily such motives as the fear of man may induce us, not to spare, but to destroy life; may help us, not to obey, but to transgress God's will. On Herod's birthday, the daughter of the very woman in question, dancing according to the custom of the country before the company, pleased Herod so highly, that "he promised with an oath to give her whatsoever she would ask." How sinful was such a promise on such an occasion! especially in one, whose station made him master of the lives of others! How sinful such an oath to confirm a sinful promise! to be pleaded as the excuse of so sinful an act! "Give me here John Baptist's head in a charger," is the request of the daughter according to the previous instructions of Herodias. "And the king was sorry," not out of regard to John, for before "he would have put him to death," but sorry, as before, to offend the multitude. His worldly sorrow was, however, like his worldly fear, of no avail, against another worldly motive, false shame. Such was his deference to the company who heard him promise with an oath, that "he sent and beheaded John in the prison." As if Herod could be paying any true respect to the presence of his subjects, by putting one of them, without law, to death! As if he could be counted to honour God in keeping his oath, when he kept it by an act which was no less than murder!

In this history we should be careful to observe how rapid is the progress of iniquity; from wrong, to anger at being taxed with it; from anger to oppression, from oppression to murder. Let us beware then of all false pleas by which sin seeks to excuse itself in our eyes. Let us be persuaded that no sin is of small account. Let us set ourselves against the first beginnings of offence, under a wholesome dread of the like enormity in sin; remembering that, according to the Gospel we profess, "whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." 1 John 3. 15. And in the conduct of the daughter of Herodias, we have like warning of the lengths to which we may be drawn, if we once suffer ourselves to please men rather than God. St. Mark, 6. 25, observes, that "she came in straightway with haste;" being urged, probably, and overruled, as well as instructed, by her mother. But in no case is such urgency, however earnest, any excuse for our violating, in the slightest particular, the known will of God our Saviour. For herein too is our rule most plain, his law most full and comprehensive, "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." Matth. 10. 37.

God give us the grace to prefer, in our apprehension, the prison of John to the throne of Herod! God make us willing to suffer wrongfully, rather than do wrong! rather than take our brother's life, to lose our own!

Christ feedeth five thousand men with five loaves and two fishes.

13 ¹ When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by ship into a desert place apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities.

14 And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick.

15 ² And when it was evening, his disciples came to him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past; send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals.

16 But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat.

¹ Mark 6. 32. Luke 9. 10.

17 And they say unto him, We have here but five loaves, and two fishes.

18 He said, Bring them hither to me.

19 And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

20 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve baskets full.

21 And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, beside women and children.

² John 6. 5. Mark 6. 35.

§ 55. That God filleth the hungry with good things.

At the tidings of John's death Jesus departed from the place where He then was. He departed into a desert place; going by ship along the coast of the lake, in order the better to escape observation. Herein He set us an example of due prudence, in avoiding, when we may honestly and safely, any threatened persecution. The people, however, followed Him on foot; that is, as He advanced by water, they went after Him on the shore, "out of the cities." Our Lord, though desirous with all meekness to withdraw from persecution, was ready also to leave his retirement for the purpose of doing good. He went forth therefore from his solitude in the wilderness, and seeing the multitude, "healed their sick."

And next He works a miracle, of which the healthy also partake; willing, perhaps, that they, who witnessed his mercy in others, should share also in his bounty themselves. It was evening, and the multitude had no meal to partake of. The disciples therefore proposed to send them away, that they might go, and procure food in the surrounding villages. "But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat." This He said, both knowing how little food they had at hand, and trying whether they would notwithstanding obey his word. They answer, as though informing Him, what they might have been sure He well knew, Master, "we have here but five loaves, and two fishes." So little preparation had they made for themselves! So frugal was the fare with which our Lord and his disciples were content! "He said, Bring them hither to me." However small our store, however slight our means, we are none the less bound to offer them to Christ; to place them, by a due disposal, as in his hands, to be distributed to those who most need their use. "And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass." No further preparation was required of them, in the meal they had now to partake of, than to expect with faith, and to receive with humility. Such also is the most fitting disposition we can attain towards enjoying the bread of life. The multitude being thus prepared, He "took the five loaves, and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude." It was for Him to pronounce a blessing; it is for us devoutly to ask one, on the food we receive at his gracious hand. Let us henceforth ever when we eat, first look up to heaven, in prayer; that what we receive abundantly we may use temperately, and so improve by God's good gifts, at once in health of body and of soul. "And they did all eat, and were filled." All of the same meal, all of the same loaves and fishes. Let us learn hence to be content with such plainness of food, as makes least waste of God's creatures; that instead of spending our superfluity on ourselves, we may, by frugality and care, be enabled to distribute it more widely amongst others.

In this miracle, for further practical improvement, we should acknowledge the same Almighty Power which at the first made all things of nothing, which still giveth to the seed its increase, and to which it is alike easy, to feed with a few loaves so many thousands, or all living creatures with the fruits in their seasons. But chiefly, should we hence take occasion to observe, the ability and the readiness of God, to feed, and to fill, all those, who hunger and thirst after righteousness. In all that befalls us, in all we have to do, He distributes to the faithful this bread of life eternal. He filleth us with righteousness; with grace, to lead a holy life, nay with righteousness that is by faith of Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord. Let us neglect no occasion of this heavenly nourishment. Let us endeavour to derive it from all his dispensations, whether of abundance, or of want, whether of gifts bestowed, or for a time withheld. Let us ask for it in prayer, as for our daily bread; and partake of it habitually, in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, to the everlasting comfort of our souls.

Christ walketh on the sea to his disciples.

22 And straightway Jesus constrained his disciples to get into a ship, and to go before him unto the other side, while he sent the multitudes away.

23 'And when he had sent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone.

24 But the ship was now in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves: for the wind was contrary.

25 And in the fourth watch of the night Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea.

26 And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear.

27 But straightway Jesus spake unto them, saying, Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid.

28 And Peter answered him and said, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water.

29 And he said, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus.

30 But when he saw the wind || boisterous, he was afraid; and beginning to sink, he cried, saying, Lord, save me.

31 And immediately Jesus stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

32 And when they were come into the ship, the wind ceased.

33 Then they that were in the ship came and worshipped him, saying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God.

34 ³ And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Genesaret.

35 And when the men of that place had knowledge of him, they sent out unto all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diseased;

36 And besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment: and as many as touched were made perfectly whole.

¹ Mark 6. 46.

² John 6. 16.

|| Or, strong.

³ Mark 6. 53.

§ 56. That our safety through God's mercy depends upon our faith.

The disciples are constrained to get into a ship, and the multitudes are, at the same time, sent away, lest probably they should be too eager to thank the disciples, or the disciples too ready to accept their praise, for distributing the miraculous meal. Let us learn the less to regret, if oftentimes when we do good, we lose the praise of men. It is Christ who for our benefit withholds it, that we may set our whole affection on his praise; that we may ascribe unto Himself that good, which through Him we are enabled to do. Afterwards, we read, "he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone." Though engaged in the most active social duties, He found time, and He would have us find time, to go apart continually to pray, to commune with our own hearts as in the solitude of night.

Meanwhile the ship which carried his disciples, "was in the midst of the sea, tossed with waves." "And in the fourth watch," that is, in the last quarter, "of the night, Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea." And this we find set down in the book of Job, 9. 8, as a singular instance of divine power: "Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea." The disciples so little thought it possible of our Lord, that "they were troubled, saying, It is a spirit; and they cried out for fear." In this their terror He addressed them with his well-known voice, saying, "Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid." That voice let us in our spiritual dangers conceive as thus speaking to ourselves. Many times our night of trial may be dark, or the waves of our affliction high. But these things do no more than try our faith. And if only we believe, we have proof in these words of Christ, that He is at hand to help us. Let us then not merely be not afraid, but be also of good cheer. Let us persevere in well doing, with a lively persuasion that we shall have grace to continue to the end, and with a thankful sense of Christ's assistance, by whose strength alone we stand.

St. Peter, by his reply to these encouraging words, shews the eagerness of his temper and affection. "Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water." He comes down out of the ship, and walks on the water, to go to Jesus. "But when he saw the wind boisterous, he was afraid." Wherein we see represented, how feeble is our strongest faith, and how faint our utmost love! Though we set forward, as in earnest, to go to Christ; often, when storms threaten round our heads, we begin, like Peter, through fear to sink. And yet so close at this moment was our Lord to Peter, that "He stretched forth his hand, and caught him, and said unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?"

It was doubting then that made Peter sink. It is doubting that makes us sin. We are not duly persuaded that God will help us, or that his grace is sufficient for us. We doubt whether we shall stand; and because we doubt, we fall. Gracious is God, who, when we fall, again lifteth us up. Gracious is Christ, who, when we begin to sink, stretcheth forth his hand, to catch and save us. Let us join with faith, in the testimony of those who saw these marvels, "Of a truth thou art the Son of God." Let us endeavour too, with faith, like the men of Genesaret, to bring to the knowledge of his healing love, all whom we see around us to be in need of it. Nothing would so much inflame our desire to make others Christians, as for us to feel duly the high privilege of being so ourselves. It is when we perceive in what peril we have been, and how we have escaped; from what sin, and misery, and death eternal, we have been saved by the grace of Christ; then it is that by prayer, and precept, and above all by the force of good example, we try, most heartily, to win others to salvation.

The Pharisees reprove for their traditions.

1 Then ¹ came to Jesus scribes and Pharisees, which were of Jerusalem, saying,

2 Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread.

3 But he answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?

4 For God commanded, saying, ² Honour thy father and mother: and, ³ He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.

5 But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father, or his mother, ⁴ It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me;

6 And honour not his father or his mother, he shall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

7 Ye hypocrites, well did Esaias prophesy of you, saying,

8 ⁵ This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me.

9 But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

¹ Mark 7. 1.

² Exod. 20. 12. Deut. 5. 16.

³ Exod. 21. 17. Lev. 20. 9. Prov. 20. 20.

⁴ Mark 7. 11, 12.

⁵ Isaiah 29. 13.

§ 57. That no one duty may be pleaded for the neglect of any other.

The scribes were persons, who, at a time when there was no such thing as printing, wrote out copies of the Jewish Scriptures. Hence they came to set up for interpreters also of their meaning. These scribes, together with the Pharisees, used to teach the people to observe matters that were merely of man's invention, with no less care and diligence, than the law of Moses. Such were some exact rules they made about washing of hands at each meal. They complain therefore to our Lord that his disciples transgress these traditions. He replies, by shewing them that their traditions, not only had no divine authority, but were in some instances contradictory to God's most plain commands.

What duty, for instance, could be more clearly expressed than this, in God's law, "Honour thy father and mother?" Or what offence more plainly denounced than in these words, "He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death." Herein the will of God is evident, that children should in no wise neglect or dishonour their parents, but obey them, cherish them, and, as far as possible, repay the support once received at their hands. "But ye say, Whosoever shall say to his father or his mother, It is a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me." That is, Ye teach children, instead of assisting their parents, to pretend that they have dedicated their wealth or goods to God. If they have any thing that might be of service to father or mother; instead of giving it them, they may say, according to your teaching, "It is a gift," a gift consecrated to God; and so they need not honour, need not aid their parents, and so are free. "Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition."

Most evident to us all must be the falsehood of this plea, the vanity of this excuse. Let us take care then, and be on our guard, not only in this, but in all other matters, against the like self-deception. As the dedicating of our substance to God could not make up for our neglecting a parent's wants, so neither can the performance of any one duty whatsoever, excuse us in the wilful neglect of any other. Yet this we know both has been, and is, a very common case of sin. How many, in former times, and in a corrupt church, used to dedicate, as they thought, to God, for religious uses, the property which should have maintained their families and relations! How many parents now neglect the right training of their children, out of regard to other pursuits of far less deep obligation! How many children too do we see, forsaking their parents in old age, on pretence that they have families of their own to attend to, or that they must provide for their own decent dress and maintenance! Is not this like saying to them, "It is a gift," it is devoted to other and better uses, "by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me?"

Thus too in other duties, and in other sins, does the tempter suggest readily some plea of expediency, some more agreeable duty; by dint of which the sinner persuades himself, that he may, in what he less likes, be wanting; or do wrong. What else is it to tell a falsehood, as is many times done, rather than hurt the feelings, or divulge the faults, of a companion? What else is it to profane the sabbath, in order to please a friend or master? What else is it to be covetous, or dishonest, for one's family's sake? to defraud the wealthy, in order to have more to give to the poor, or, by way of edifying the soul, to encourage by our presence the preaching and practice of religious dissension? Whenever we are tempted thus to transgress, let us call to mind the prophecy here applied by Christ to the Pharisees, Isai. 29. 13, "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." The root of this disorder is in the heart. In the heart must be laid the principle of our recovery. Never have we any duties really conflicting. And in those which may sometimes seem to be so, we shall seldom have any difficulty in deciding, if only we do, in our hearts, in earnest desire to do the will of God.

Christ teacheth what doth defile a man.

10 ¹ And he called the multitude, and said unto them, Hear, and understand :

11 Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man ; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man.

12 Then came his disciples, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the Pharisees were offended, after they heard this saying ?

13 But he answered and said, ² Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up.

14 Let them alone : ³ they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

¹ Mark 7. 14.

² John 15. 2.

³ Luke 6. 39.

⁴ Mark 7. 17.

⁵ Gen. 6. 5. & 8. 21.

§ 58. That we should be clean before God in our hearts.

Jesus had before reprov'd the Pharisees for teaching, as divine "doctrines, the commandments of men." Ver. 9. He now explains more fully, to the multitude, his reasons, for rejecting this particular tradition about washing of the hands at meals. He bids them therefore "hear and understand : not that which goeth into the mouth," as meat for instance eaten with unwashen hands, "defileth a man ; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man." The disciples appear themselves not to have understood this explanation ; though they reported to Christ, that the Pharisees took offence at its meaning. Our Lord declares, in reply, that, whether they were offended or no, it was necessary to root out every plant which God had not planted, every precept which tradition, and not his law, had established. He bids the disciples therefore to let alone, that is, not to mind, the complaints of the Pharisees. He declares that their pretence to instruct the people was as though the blind should set up to be guides to the blind, which must needs end in the downfall of both.

The disciples however could not yet themselves understand the doctrine in question. That the thing which defiles a man is, not so much what goes into his mouth, as what comes out from his heart, this was a saying so opposed to all their Jewish prejudices, that St. Peter, asking to have it explained, even calls it a parable. Well might our Lord reprove them, asking, "Are ye also yet without understanding?" What indeed can be more clear to our own natural sense, than that the soul within is not defiled, either by the quality of the meat, or by its being eaten with unwashen hands. These washings, had they been, what they were not, of divine appointment, would have availed only to signify the purity of the heart, to express its devotion to God's will. And in any case, to substitute them for this inward service, would be most obvious and offensive hypocrisy. No ; they are the things that proceed out of the mouth, even those which come forth from the heart, these are they that defile a man. They are "evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies : these are the things which defile a man." They defile if done. They defile if uttered. They defile though unuttered, though undone, if cherished in the purposes of the heart. For there it is that the Gospel will have us to be pure, there to be charitable, there to be just. There it is, that Christ assures us, He surveys the condition of the soul ; and according to what there He sees, counts us for transgressors, or obedient to his will.

Do we then in our hearts entertain any evil thoughts, any hatred, any selfish lusts, any scheme of malice, falsehood, or deceit, any wish to enjoy what is not our own, or to enrich ourselves at our neighbour's cost ? If we do ; let us be aware, that no outward ceremony can avail to put away the defilement thus flowing from within. God, let us remember, seeth our inmost thoughts, more plainly, than we see each other's outward actions. Let us be assured that, according to these, He both now esteems us, and will judge us hereafter. Whensoever therefore, in the heart, we have purposed evil, let us repent straightway, no less bitterly, no less earnestly, than if we had actually done it. Our hearts have done it. Our souls are guilty of it. And, He, who will hereafter bring us to judgment, He is privy to it. Let us not turn our thoughts with satisfaction, to such things as we do decently, and respectably, such as man may see, and may approve ; but fix rather our attention on what God sees, on what He sees of evil in the heart. There let us check sin, in the outset. There let us repent of it, in its source. There let us serve God, with such fear and love, as no outward acts can signify, no words can adequately express. There let us be washed, not with water, but, through faith, in that blood of Christ, which alone can make us clean.

Christ healeth the daughter of a woman of Canaan.

21 ¹ Then Jesus went thence, and departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon.

22 And, behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the same coasts, and cried unto him, saying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou son of David; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil.

23 But he answered her not a word. And his disciples came and besought him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us.

24 But he answered and said, ² I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

25 Then came she and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me.

26 But he answered and said, It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs.

27 And she said, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their master's table.

28 Then Jesus answered and said unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

¹ Mark 7. 24.

² Ch. 10. 6.

§ 59. That we should pray with faith through Christ.

This woman living on the borders of Judæa had both studied the Jewish Scriptures, and become acquainted with the miracles of Christ. Her case is usually considered to have signified beforehand the call of the Gentiles to be the people of God. And it is remarkable that when that call was first proclaimed by Peter to Cornelius, it was introduced by a vision, which declared, that of meats none were common or unclean. See Acts 10. 28. So, here also it was after rejecting certain Jewish traditions about the manner of eating, that our Lord departed into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, and manifested his great power to a Gentile believer. A believer this woman might well be called; for her very first application to Jesus was both humble, and full of faith. She acknowledges Him for the Son of David. She tells Him of her daughter being vexed with a devil, as if fully persuaded that He was both able and willing to cast it out. "But he answered her not a word." Thus Joseph we know made himself strange unto his brethren, see Gen. 42. 17, even when he most purposed to treat them with the utmost kindness. And thus God speaks to the Israelites, see Dent. 8. 2, of having led them forty years in the wilderness, to humble them, and to prove them, and to know what was in their heart.

The disciples, not being aware of our Lord's purpose, "came and besought Him, saying, Send her away; for she crieth after us." Their intercession, it seems, arose, not out of concern for her need, but out of a wish to be rid of her importunity. Thus sometimes amongst ourselves alms are given, more in order to ease the giver, than to help the poor who get them; more to relieve our own selfish feelings, than their afflicting wants. May we learn to deny rather, like our Saviour, and withhold; whenever by so doing we are quite sure that we shall do more good to others, or to those who ask. For thus does He reply to his disciples, "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Meantime the poor woman came "and worshipped him, saying, Lord, help me." Yet once more, as it should seem, to prove her faith, and to make it further manifest to the disciples, He replies now distinctly to herself, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." For so did the Jews esteem, and call also, all other nations, as compared with themselves; themselves God's children, and all others no better than dogs. And this was well understood by this woman who lived on their borders; and who, whilst in humility she ranked herself among the dogs, yet begged also, with all faith, for the dogs' portion, "the crumbs which fall from their master's table." "O woman, great is thy faith," is the praise which followed on these words. And the blessing, hitherto withheld, is now graciously conferred; "Be it unto thee even as thou wilt."

In her then it was faith that paved the way for success. In her was eminently justified that saying of our Lord, see Matth. 11. 21, that, if his mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented at the sight. In her was the door opened to the Gentiles; and that way of repentance and faith laid down, by which we ourselves have been admitted to the promises of Abraham. Let us remember then how deep is our obligation, to imitate this signal pattern of true faithfulness. Let us imitate it especially in our prayers, in our application to Christ Jesus for his healing grace. However little at the first our petitions may avail, let us never relax in their urgent utterance. Let us never doubt but that the fault, if any, is with ourselves. Let us never fear but what God, if He for a time withhold, does so only that He may in the end more effectually bestow. Thus let us pray ever with that lively faith, which neither fails, nor faints, under the sense of refusal. Thus let us pray ever with the firm conviction, that though we are among the most unworthy of God's creatures, yet even for the dogs there are crumbs, even for the most unworthy there is mercy, through Christ, on their repentance and amendment of life.

Christ feedeth four thousand with seven loaves and a few fishes.

29 ¹ And Jesus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the sea of Galilee; and went up into a mountain, and sat down there.

30 ² And great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet; and he healed them:

31 Inasmuch that the multitude wondered, when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see: and they glorified the God of Israel.

32 ³ Then Jesus called his disciples unto him, and said, I have compassion on the multitude, because they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not send them away fasting, lest they faint in the way.

33 And his disciples say unto him, Whence should we have so much bread in the wilderness, as to fill so great a multitude?

34 And Jesus saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven, and a few little fishes.

35 And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the ground.

36 And he took the seven loaves and the fishes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude.

37 And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets full.

38 And they that did eat were four thousand men, beside women and children.

39 And he sent away the multitude, and took ship, and came into the coasts of Magdala.

¹ Mark 7. 31.

² Is. 35. 5.

³ Mark 8. 1.

§ 60. That notwithstanding all hinderances we should persevere in doing good.

Before, when the five thousand were fed with the five loaves and fishes, our Lord had first healed the sick amongst them. See ch. 14. 14. Here also they are made to wonder at witnessing "the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see; and they glorified the God of Israel." It is when we are most deeply impressed with God's great power, then it is that we are most fit objects of his surpassing goodness. It is when we are most sensible of his readiness to heal our infirmities, then also are we most meet to receive from Him our daily bread, the strength to lead a holy life. Now too, as before, they had been a long time waiting, even three whole days, attending on the divine Teacher; till at length they had nothing left to eat. Yet did they not complain of their hunger; but left it for Jesus first to say, "I have compassion on the multitude." Thus also if we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, taking no too anxious thought for this world's food, thus shall we ever find that God Himself thinketh of us, careth for us; and that, in such manner and measure as is most for our good, all these things will be added unto us. See ch. 6. 33.

The disciples are still backward in ministering to the wants of the multitude. They first plead that it is impossible to find "so much bread in the wilderness." They next state how very small is the stock they have with them of their own; "seven loaves, and a few little fishes." Thus do many, when invited to do good, plead, either their own inability in particular, or the general difficulty of success in well doing. Let us learn, from this example, to attempt, with good will, whatsoever Christ plainly bids us, and let us be content to leave the issue in the hands of Him, who has proved in these signal miracles, that He can "prepare a table in the wilderness." Ps. 78. 20. In the barren desert of this world's evil, He has means to work out good; to feed the hungry, to relieve the sick, the ignorant to instruct, and sinners to guide into the way of salvation. Let us rejoice to bear a share, however humble, however in our apprehension ineffectual, let us rejoice to take the part He gives us in works so excellent, towards ends so great. Let us come forward though but as with seven loaves, and a few little fishes, though with ever so small resources of our own in comparison, let us come forward, in our several stations, to relieve the misery that is in the world through sin. God it is who giveth the increase; even He, who out of no more provision than this, satisfied four thousand men, besides women and children; even He who hath assured us by his apostle, in regard to every good work we take in hand, that "in due season we shall reap if we faint not." Gal. 6. 9.

"And they took up of the broken meat that was left, seven baskets full;" one for each loaf that was broken. In the former miracle, twelve baskets of the fragments were collected, one for each apostle that ministered. These circumstances thus recorded, in proof of the abundance of the meal, may teach us also, in the first place, to avoid waste in all things. If they, who might have recourse to a power so boundless, as that which could thus multiply the loaves, if they were, notwithstanding, to be diligent in collecting the fragments; how much more should we, whose means are limited, who see around us want and wretchedness far beyond what we are able to alleviate, how much more should we take pains, that no crumb be wasted of the bread God giveth us, no trifle spent in vain enjoyment, out of the means He has intrusted to our stewardship! And secondly, we may be hence encouraged to give liberally, and cheerfully, on the ground, that what we so distribute will be largely restored. He that hath pity on the poor, is considered to be lending unto the Lord; and look, what he so layeth out, shall be paid him again. See Prov. 19. 17. The fragments shall be as much as, nay more than, the loaves. They shall be gathered for him against a time when he will more deeply need them. They shall be laid up for him in heaven for ever.

The Pharisees ask of Christ a sign from heaven.

1 The ¹ Pharisees also with the Sadducees came, and tempting desired him that he would shew them a sign from heaven.

2 He answered and said unto them, When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red.

3 And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day: for the sky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky; but can ye not discern the signs of the times?

4 A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. And he left them, and departed.

5 And when his disciples were come to the other side, they had forgotten to take bread.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

¹ Mark 8. 11. Luke 12. 54.

7 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is because we have taken no bread.

8 Which when Jesus perceived, he said unto them, O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread?

9 Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

10 Neither the seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?

11 How is it that ye do not understand that I spake it not to you concerning bread, that ye should beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees?

12 Then understood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees and of the Sadducees.

² Ch. 14. 17.

³ Ch. 15. 34.

§ 61. That we need not more signs, but more inclination to believe.

The Pharisees and the Sadducees were two sects most opposite to each other; but they agreed heartily, we see, in persecuting and tempting Christ. Would that they, who ought to work together for good, were as often, and as thoroughly of one mind, as are they who are in league for evil! Would that there were amongst honest men as much true honour, as there is of that which is false, amongst thieves! as much of unity amongst Christians with each other, and amongst members of the same church, as we find to our cost, amongst the enemies of both!

These tempters of Christ ask Him for a sign from heaven, for such a sensible manifestation of heavenly power, as should leave them no room to doubt. He reminds them, that they had already signs enough for conviction. For since, even in so uncertain a thing as the weather, they were accustomed, from the appearance of the evening sky, to say whether the morrow would be fair, or foul; they might certainly, from what they had now seen of Jesus, conclude whether He were the Christ or not. Hypocrites therefore He called them, because they pretended to ask a sign from heaven, to convince them; when in reality they did not choose to be convinced. One sign only He tells them they should have, not from heaven, but the sign of the prophet Jonas. This He had before proposed to them; ch. 12. 40; adding, that “as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale’s belly; so should the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.” Nor does He now any farther explain this sign; having said enough to prove to them, when He should have risen from the dead, that He now foreknew, what would then take place.

Having departed out of the way of the Pharisees and Sadducees, He took occasion to warn his disciples against their perverse disposition, bidding them beware of their “leaven.” Meantime they had forgotten to take with them a supply of bread. And from his mention of the word leaven, they hastily concluded that He referred to this neglect of provision for the body. So much more readily do the thoughts of men turn to things carnal, than to things spiritual! to the food of the body, than to the nourishment of the soul. How soon, as our Lord reminds them, how soon had they forgotten his two miracles, of feeding many thousands, on a few loaves and fishes! Never let us be guilty of the like forgetfulness! Never let us, in our too anxious provision for the flesh, fail to remember that God careth for us!

And let us beware of the doctrine of these Pharisees, of their hardened unbelief, and of the specious pleas they urged to justify themselves before Christ. No excuse can be more vain than to say, that we would believe better if we had signs more plain; than to imagine we should better obey, in some circumstances of more forcible conviction, than those which we here enjoy. These thoughts are a kind of leaven, which, if we once admit it into our hearts, will soon corrupt the whole practice of our lives. If we neglect any single duty, on the ground that we do not plainly enough know it; if we are content, instead of doing, to imagine what we would have done, if we had been taught just as ourselves could wish; how closely do we resemble those, who refused to believe, without a sign more manifest from heaven! how easily may we, in like manner, go on to allow ourselves, in whatsoever we have a mind, either to neglect or to transgress! Take heed then, and beware. Admit no such plea into your thoughts. Own that you have signs clear enough, and motives strong enough. And confess, that what is wanting is in your own inclination; not on the part of God, but in yourselves.

The people's opinion of Christ, and Peter's confession of Him.

13 When Jesus came into the coasts of Cæsarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, ' Whom do men say that I the Son of man am ?

14 And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist : some, Elias ; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets.

15 He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am ?

16 And Simon Peter answered and said, ' Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

17 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona : for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

18 And I say also unto thee, That ' thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church ; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

19 ' And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven : and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven : and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

20 Then charged he his disciples that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ.

¹ Mark 8. 27. Luke 9. 18.

² John 6. 69.

³ John 1. 42.

⁴ John 20. 23.

§ 62. By what rule we shall be bound or loosed hereafter.

We should observe here, that the true nature of our Lord was made known to the disciples only by degrees. At first they took Him for a distinguished Prophet. But when they had seen his many miracles, and heard his divine teaching, it was time they should be aware that He was the Messiah. Whilst some then took Him for John the Baptist, some for Elias, and some for Jeremias, or for some other prophet, St. Peter is enlightened to reply, in behalf of the apostles, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." And thus to Christians, as they grow up in years and grace, are new views of their Lord's character continually made clear. For a time they are apt chiefly to regard Him as a prophet, a teacher of God's will, a revealer of God's truth. But in the end they must know Him, and own Him, to be Himself the Son of the living God ; the Priest, who has once for all made atonement for their sin ; the Christ, the King, whom they must in all things obey.

Simon Peter was, for this confession of faith, very highly praised by our Lord. "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona ; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." He was blessed, because the Almighty Father had revealed to him this truth. For it is not for our own words, or works, or thoughts, that we are blest ; but for those which God reveals to us, and which, in us, are his. Our Lord next alludes to the name Peter, which signifies a rock, given to this apostle when Christ first beheld him. See John 1. 42. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church." Upon thee, confessing me to be Christ ; upon thee, and on the rest of the apostles, maintaining this same confession, I will raise the faith of my disciples ; whom St. Paul afterwards described as being "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2. 20. "And the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The enemy of man's salvation shall never prevent there being a succession of believers in this truth, to the end of the world. "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." Thou shalt open the door of faith by thy ministry ; as Peter we know did especially, both to the Jews and to the Gentiles. See Acts 10. 5, and 15. 7. "And whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." Whatsoever thou shalt pronounce lawful or unlawful, a duty or a matter of indifference in conformity to the will of God, shall be so esteemed at the day of judgment. Which power of binding and loosing, as well as the keys of the kingdom of heaven, our Lord here probably meant to extend, as He does afterwards, see ch. 18. 18, to the rest of the apostles, and through them to their successors for ever. Whence we learn that we should look to what they taught for instruction, as to what we are bound to do, or not to do ; for information, as to what will let us into the kingdom of heaven, or shut us out of it. "Then charged he his disciples, that they should tell no man that he was Jesus the Christ." And this, no doubt, He ordered them, lest the Jews, in their jealousy, should attempt to put him to death before his hour was come.

Many obscure and vain questions have been raised, as to what degree of authority St. Peter had here given him above the rest of the apostles. That he had no such supremacy, as is contended for by the Church of Rome, is sufficiently established by other passages of Scripture. For us it will be more profitable to observe, first, that the foundation of our religion, is a right faith in Christ, as the Son of the living God, as One able to atone for the sins of the whole world. And, secondly, we may here note, that, in order for us to be saved by his atonement, in order for us to be admitted into the kingdom of heaven, we must be influenced, whilst on earth, by that rule of life which his apostles have laid down for our direction. That rule they left on record in this New Testament on which we now daily meditate. That rule they appointed others to teach after them ; ministers, whose authority, according to their degree, all are bound to receive, and to respect. For according to what these enforce, agreeably to God's word, as either bounden or forbidden, will all mankind be bound or loosed, when Christ Himself shall come to judgment.

Christ foresheweth his death.

21 From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day.

22 Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, saying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee.

23 But he turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men.

24 ¹Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

25 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake shall find it.

26 For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

27 For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

28 Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

¹ Ch. 10. 38. Mark 3. 34.

² Psalm 62. 12. Rom. 2. 6.

³ Mark 9. 1. Luke 9. 27.

§ 63. The value of the soul.

No sooner were the apostles enlightened to know that Jesus was the Christ, than He put their faith to trial, by assuring them that He must at Jerusalem "suffer many things," and "be killed." They were labouring under the false notion that Christ was to give dominion, in this world, to the people of the Jews. And Peter accordingly comes forward, with the like zeal as before, but with far different judgment, taking upon him to say, "Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee." To this speech Jesus replies as though it had been uttered, as well as suggested, by Satan himself; adding, to Peter, that he was no longer, as before, under the influence of divine revelation, but savouring the things that were of men. And then, to prevent them from thus reckoning on temporal prosperity, He declares to his disciples: "If any man will come," that is, is willing to come, "after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." No words could more plainly express that his kingdom was not of this world. No language could more plainly forewarn his disciples to the end of time, that they should seek as their reward something further than the comfort or advantage which their faith and devotion may in this world yield.

Three things our Lord here requires of whosoever would come after Him. First, that he deny himself, that is, thwart his own inclinations, always when they are wrong, and often by way of exercise when they are comparatively right. The second is, that he take up his cross, that is, cheerfully undergo vexation and persecution, when he cannot without sin avoid it, purposely encounter inconvenience and pain, when he must else do less good, or attain less virtue. The third is, that he follow Christ; that is, walk in the steps of his example, in temperance and purity, in faith and devotedness, in meekness, and forgiveness of wrongs, in going about to the uttermost to do good, to neighbours and strangers, to friends and foes.

"For whosoever will save his life shall lose it." Whosoever grudges health, or strength, or life itself in my service, shall lose eternal life. "And whosoever will lose his life, for my sake, shall find it;" that is to say, for ever, in heaven. "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" So greatly does the value of the soul exceed all things this world contains. "Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" If the soul be lost, what has he to offer for its redemption? No earthly treasure can in its stead avail. No wealth the world contains can be counted for an equivalent. For all these things, however large, however valuable for a time, are doomed to come soon utterly to an end. Whilst the soul of each single human being will endure beyond the end of worlds, even for ever and ever.

"For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works." This it is which makes the soul of such supreme importance; there is to be a day of judgment. This it is that makes of trifling value all this world has to give; we shall receive hereafter, not according to what here we have, but according to what here we do. Herein will the sovereignty of Christ be exercised; herein the self-denial of his saints approved; the life they lose, be found; the cross, they bear, become a crown of glory. Oh, what, compared with bliss in heaven, what is life on earth! How vain its utmost satisfactions; how hard to gain, how swift to pass away, how soon to cease in death! And death, how bitter is its draught to drink, for them that have no hope in Christ! How sweet its taste, how welcome its arrival, to them that die in the Lord!

Let not, Lord, our thoughts savour of the things of men, but of the things of God! Let not us be ashamed of thy cross, or refuse to take it on ourselves! But deeply impressed, by thy words, with the necessity of caring for the soul, let us endeavour, and pray, above all things, that through Thee, it may live for ever!

The transfiguration of Christ.

1 And 'after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart,

2 And was transfigured before them: and his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light.

3 And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with him.

4 Then answered Peter, and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

5 ' While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him.

6 And when the disciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were sore afraid.

7 And Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid.

8 And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them, saying, Tell the vision to no man, until the Son of man be risen again from the dead.

¹ Mark 9. 2. Luke 9. 28.

² 2 Pet. 1. 17.

§ 64. That the glory of heaven is not far from every one of us.

Our Saviour, in the last chapter, forbade his disciples to be expecting through his means any earthly dominion; and He promised them, at the same time, that some standing there should not taste of death, till they had seen the Son of man coming in his kingdom. This promise He is considered to have fulfilled in what is called his transfiguration. And herein He gave them also, it should seem, some intimation of what it was He meant by "his kingdom." Ver. 28. For in his transfiguration there was an outward sensible change, of that natural body which He had as the Son of man, to a glorified body, such as the Son of man now has, such as will hereafter be the form of "just men made perfect." Heb. 12. 23. In so much of this glory as mortal eyes might see, did He for a time appear, to Peter and James and John, on mount Tabor. And with Him were seen Moses and Elias; representing to the apprehension of the Jews the connexion of the Law, and the Prophets, with Christ.

This heavenly sight afforded to the chosen apostles an earnest of the glorified state to which they should themselves aspire. And Peter, forgetting what was yet first to be suffered in Jerusalem, exclaimed, in the eagerness of his zeal, "It is good for us to be here." Fain would he have set up his rest at once, in the enjoyment of that heavenly vision. His answer comes not from Jesus Himself, but from a voice, such as on some other occasions, had communicated, under the dispensation of the Law, the will of God to man. "While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." In which injunction, the apostles were instructed to acquiesce cheerfully in what our Lord said of his sufferings. And we also, as well as they, are here plainly taught, both that Jesus is the Son of God, and that it is God's will we should in all things hear Him. This instruction having been given, the whole vision ceased. "Jesus came and touched them, and said, Arise, and be not afraid. And when they had lifted up their eyes, they saw no man, save Jesus only." They are then charged to tell no man what they had seen; and this was ordered lest the multitude, on hearing of so great glory, should be the more confirmed in their false notions about the kingdom of Christ, and be the more offended in the shame of the cross.

The whole history should serve to make us aware how real are spiritual beings, how much nearer to ourselves than we are apt in our faint faith to imagine. Our senses, whilst they serve to discern this world's objects, form a thick veil against the perceiving things heavenly. It needs but for this veil to be withdrawn for a moment, and we too should with the prophet behold the chariots of fire, see 2 Kings 2. 11, which wait to protect the servants of the Most High; we might be conscious of the presence of Moses and of Elias, of Peter and James and John, and above all, of Christ Himself. With face shining as the sun, and raiment white as the light, we might see Him conversing, in love, with the hallowed forms of his prophets and apostles. We might hear the heavenly voice proclaim, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him." To all this we might in one moment be brought; for to all this, and to much more than this, death might as in one moment bring us.

Let us then, whilst life and sense continue, strive to feel these things by faith. Let us, by all we read and hear, try to make that faith more lively, more effectual. Let us design for ourselves no tabernacle, no resting place, on earth; but set our whole affection on that which is beyond our sight, and beyond our very heart's conception, eternal in the heavens. And especially, for the exercise and proof of our faith, let us make earth like to heaven in the holiness of our lives. Let us live, as He would have us, who is in heaven. As his holy Spirit here would guide us, so let us follow into all truth, and all good. Let us listen, though we hear no voice, let us listen as though we heard it, let us listen, in all we say, and do, and think, to the voice of God's beloved Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Christ speaketh of John Baptist as Elias ; healeth the lunatic.

10 And his disciples asked him, saying, ¹ Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?

11 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things.

12 But I say unto you, That Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Likewise shall also the Son of man suffer of them.

13 Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.

14 ² And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man, kneeling down to him, and saying,

15 Lord, have mercy on my son: for he is lunatick, and sore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water.

16 And I brought him to thy disciples, and they could not cure him.

17 Then Jesus answered and said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him hither to me.

18 And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour.

19 Then came the disciples to Jesus apart, and said, Why could not we cast him out?

20 And Jesus said unto them, Because of your unbelief: for verily I say unto you, ³ If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you.

21 Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting.

¹ Ch. 11. 14. Mark 9. 11.

² Mark 9. 17. Luke 9. 38.

³ Luke 17. 6.

§ 65. That faith is most effectual to success in the Christian life.

The disciples appear to have been now near to being convinced that their Master was "very Christ." Acts 9. 22. For they ask Him how that could be, before Elias appeared again openly in the world. "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?" This saying of the scribes was founded on the prophecy of Malachi 4. 5: "Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord." And this expectation our Lord here in some measure confirms, saying "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things." Which words may seem to signify, that either Elias, or some one of his spirit and power, shall, in some way unknown to us, prepare the chosen people, for the second coming of the Lord in his great and dreadful day. Meantime our Lord tells us, that "Elias is come already," meaning John the Baptist, who, as the angel described him to Zacharias, went before the Lord their God in the spirit and power of Elias. See Luke 1. 17. "And they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed;" that is, have used him with what cruelty they pleased. By which last words, the disciples understood that he spake of John the Baptist, of whom He had indeed previously said, "This is John the Baptist which was for to come." Ch. 11. 14.

All things then which the Scriptures had said beforehand of Christ's coming, were fulfilled in the dispensation of the Gospel. All things which are set down as hereafter to happen, will in like manner be fulfilled, when He shall come again to judgment. This is the chief practical use we should make of prophecy already accomplished. We should take it for an earnest of the certainty of what has yet to take effect. Surely as John the Baptist preached, and was followed by the manifestation of Jesus of Nazareth, so surely will the first coming of our Lord, to save the world, be followed by his second coming, to judge the quick and the dead. Let us therefore lay to heart the certainty of that great and dreadful day. Let us set before our eyes the fear of it, for a guard against the deceitfulness of sin. And for this end, let us endeavour always to regard it with such faith as is described in the passage which ensues.

The disciples had in vain tried to cure a lunatic; one, who, as it appears both from this passage and from St. Luke's account of the matter, see Luke 9. 39, was afflicted at certain seasons of the moon with the falling sickness. Their failure arose from this, that both in themselves, and in the friends of the person afflicted, there was a want of faith. "O faithless and perverse generation," is a reproof which seems to have been addressed to both parties. And to the disciples, who asked privately, "Why could not we cast him out?" Jesus answered, "Because of your unbelief." He then assures them, that if they had faith as a grain of mustard seed, that is, ever so small a degree of real lively faith, they should be able to remove mountains, or in other words, to do miracles as marvellous as the moving of mountains; for nothing should be impossible to them. He adds, however, that for working signs and wonders so great, they had peculiar need of fasting and of prayer. In the times when miracles were vouchsafed, the faith required, in those who wrought them, was a firm conviction that they should be able so to do. Ours is a work scarcely less wondrous, to deny the flesh, to renounce the world, to resist the devil. And for success, we have like need of a firm persuasion, that we have power from on high to succeed. A lively assurance to this effect, founded on a right view of the promises of God, is genuine Christian faith. Let us then believe that we have grace to conquer, and behold, we through grace are conquerors. Let us believe; but let our belief be no vain presumption. Let it be sought diligently with fasting and with prayer; with a studied watchfulness, denying ourselves such things as we have a mind to, with frequent and fervent petitions for such strength as we have none of in ourselves. So shall we in our faith be humble; in our failings hope for pardon; and in our best success, ascribe to God, the glory of that work, which is not ours but his. *

Christ payeth tribute by a miracle.

22 ¹ And while they abode in Galilee, Jesus said unto them, The Son of man shall be betrayed into the hands of men:

23 And they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again. And they were exceeding sorry.

24 And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received ||tribute money came to Peter, and said, Doth not your master pay tribute?

25 He saith, Yes. And when he was come into the house, Jesus prevented him, saying, What thinkest thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take custom or tribute? of their own children, or of strangers?

26 Peter saith unto him, Of strangers. Jesus saith unto him, Then are the children free.

27 Notwithstanding, lest we should offend them, go thou to the sea, and cast an hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up; and when thou hast opened his mouth, thou shalt find † a piece of money: that take, and give unto them for me and thee.

¹ Ch. 20. 17. Mark 9. 31. Luke 9. 44.

|| Called in the original didrachma, being in value fifteen pence.

† Or, a stater. It is half an ounce of silver, in value two shillings and sixpence, after five shillings the ounce.

§ 66. The rule of Christian payment.

Again and again does our Lord remind his disciples, that He must be "betrayed into the hands of men, and they shall kill him, and the third day he shall be raised again." There was no point which they were so reluctant to believe, as that He should suffer, and none which He was more anxious to impress upon their minds. "And they were exceeding sorry." They were grieved for Christ's sake. And as they understood not how, by his death, He would for them secure life eternal; they were grieved further, at having their expectations of glory in the present life thus completely overthrown. Let us take warning, lest, even in our religion, we look too much at "the things which are seen," 2 Cor. 4. 18, at the advantages it confers in this present world, instead of at the prospects it affords for the next. Let us remember that we must suffer with Christ, if we would "be also glorified together." Rom. 8. 17. Providence does no doubt, in many things, allot prosperity to the righteous. But who shall say that he deserves this title? Who dare murmur, though the most severe dispensations of wrath were to befall himself? He, in whom was found no guile, was "a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief." Isaiah 53. 3. Much more may we reasonably expect to be chastised with pain on earth, before we are raised up to joy. Let not us then be "exceeding sorry," but rather "glory in tribulations." Rom. 5. 3. Let us be glad of all the ills which God thinks fit to deal to us; trusting that through his grace they will work together for our good, and striving that they may do so, by our "patient continuance in well doing." Rom. 2. 7.

"And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received the tribute money came to Peter, and said, Doth not your master pay tribute?" This was a sum collected for the service of the temple. And from this question, our Lord first took occasion to intimate that He was the Son of God; reasoning, that as earthly kings take not tribute of their own children, so neither ought He to be asked for tribute towards the service of his heavenly Father. And in the second place, He wrought a miracle, and paid the demand; that He might give the Jews no needless cause of stumbling, or offence. The apostles, who now knew that He was the Son of God, would have known Him to be justified in withholding the tribute. The Jews, who were ignorant of this truth, if He had refused, would have ascribed his refusal to treason against the Most High.

And here observe, that the Saviour of the world, and his chosen followers, had not wherewith to pay this small demand, without recourse to a miraculous supply. Whence we should learn to attach less importance, than we are apt to do, to the possession of this world's wealth. We cannot indeed, like our Lord and his apostles, be independent of the means which wealth affords. We cannot, like the primitive Christians, practise such community of goods, or meet with such universal hospitality, as with them rendered money next to needless. But we should take care not to overrate its importance. We should "take heed and beware of covetousness." Luke 12. 15. We should check in ourselves a taste for such conveniences, as, requiring more expense than we can properly afford, render us too anxious to increase our store, too ready to sacrifice to considerations of income, the principles of faith and duty.

And however small our means may be, we should learn from the instance set before us, always to discharge all just demands, and sometimes to satisfy even those which are not strictly due. This latter we should do, when it may be done without injustice to others, rather than cause scandal to a fellow creature; rather than excite anger and enmity, rather than bring disparagement on the Gospel we profess. How much more should we pay all just debts! how much more "owe no man any thing;" Rom. 13. 8; how much more incur no debt, which we have not the ability to pay, and withhold no payment a single day beyond the time when it is due and asked for!

God grant that they, who profess the faith of Christ, may by no eager haste to gain, no backwardness to pay, no grudging when constrained to lose, offend the gainsayers of the truth! God move our hearts to give to him that asketh, and from him that would borrow not to turn away! rather than wrong, to suffer wrongfully, rather than rob, to starve!

Christ teacheth to be humble, and to avoid offences.

1 ¹ At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

2 And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them,

3 And said, Verily I say unto you, ² Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4 Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

5 And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me.

6 ³ But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea.

7 Woe unto the world because of offences! for it must needs be that offences come; but woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!

8 ⁴ Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and cast them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet to be cast into everlasting fire.

9 And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee! it is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.

¹ Mark 9. 33. Luke 9. 46.

² Ch. 19. 14. 1 Cor. 14. 20.

³ Mark 9. 42. Luke 17. 1, 2.

⁴ Ch. 5. 30. Mark 9. 45.

§ 67. The pattern of Christian humility.

The question, as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven, shews that the disciples, under that name, were still reckoning on dominion and authority, such as prevails in this world. But Christ meant, by that kingdom, the reign of grace and holiness in the heart, the reign of righteousness, that should begin on earth, and endure in heaven for ever. In order further to make this clear, and at the same time to shew the vanity of the question proposed, He "called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them." He then solemnly declared it necessary, for us to be so changed, as to become like little children, ere we can enter into the kingdom of heaven at all; and added that he should be therein deemed greatest, who should here most humble himself like that little child.

It was of precedency in the kingdom of heaven that the apostles disputed. We ask perhaps more commonly, who is greatest in the kingdom of earth? We inquire, who is most wealthy, most exalted in rank? We desire to have the preeminence over each other, in honour, or place, or condition. Even to such questionings as these, we may apply the answer of Christ. We may learn from it the vanity of all earthly ambition. We may see in it that pride, be the matter what it may we would be proud of, does but degrade us in the true judgment of God, and that "before honour is humility." Prov. 18. 12.

But chiefly is this true in regard to spiritual attainments, in regard to the kingdom of heaven, in regard to faith, and hope, and charity, in regard to that crown of glory, and those many mansions in our Father's house, which are provided for them that love Him. Of these things, we must with shame confess, it is not uncommon for Christians to be proud. In these things it is indeed well that we desire to be the first. But, let us remember, if we would really be so, we must here deem ourselves, behave ourselves, as the last. A little child must be our pattern. To be converted, and to become as little children, must be our rule. Has an infant wealth? He is unaware of its value. Has he rank? He has no sense of its distinction. Has he the gift of more than common ability? He is unconscious of its preeminence. Has he a more than common share of that grace, which is, we trust, even in infancy effectually conferred on such as are brought with faith, through baptism, to Christ? Still does he run no risk of being exalted above measure; for he knows not the Spirit that is in him. So also whatever gifts of grace we may trust we have received of God, we must feel in point of pride as if we knew not of them. We must be converted, that is, changed, into this childlike temper, to know nothing of ourselves but our own wants and weakness, to look for nothing, but the least and lowest place, in our heavenly Father's house.

High is the esteem, in which our Lord declares, that He will hold Christians such as these. All who treat them kindly, He will count as thus receiving Himself. And most fearfully has He warned all, against ill using them, against offending them, that is, causing them, by ill treatment, or by any other means, to offend. For the word "offences," as here used, means a stumbling-block; something in one person's conduct which causes another person to stumble, or to fall, or to transgress the will of God. The woe here denounced against the world, proves how hateful in God's sight are these snares of transgression. Yet some men lay them purposely for each other; making a mock at sin, and making sad, if it be possible, the heart of the righteous. See Ezek. 13. 22. Let us take watchful heed lest we do so inadvertently; lest, by our words or actions, we lead others into evil, or dishearten them in good. And let us be on our guard against taking, as well as against giving, offence. And whensoever we feel ourselves in danger of being thus made to fall; let us put away from us the ground of temptation. Though it were a hand, or foot, or eye, or friend, more valued than all these, that tempts us to the breach of Christian duty; that member let us cut off, that eye pluck out, that friend, however dear, renounce, unless rather, with all these retained, we would prefer the portion of hell fire. This that we might escape, Christ gave for us, not hand only, and foot, but all, even Himself, on the cross. This that we may be saved from, through Him, what is there we ought to grudge of our own?

Christ teacheth how to treat the meek, and those who trespass.

10 Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven.

11 ¹ For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.

12 ² How think ye? if a man have an hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray?

13 And if so be that he find it, verily I say unto you, he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not astray.

14 Even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish.

15 Moreover ³ if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother.

16 But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in ⁴ the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established.

17 And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church: but if he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an ⁵ heathen man and a publican.

18 Verily I say unto you, ⁶ Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

19 Again I say unto you, That if two of you shall agree on earth as touching any thing that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven.

20 For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

¹ Luke 19. 10.

² Luke 15. 4.

³ Lev. 19. 17. Luke 17. 3.

⁴ Deut. 19. 15. John 8. 17. 2 Cor. 13. 1. Heb. 10. 28.

⁵ 1 Cor. 5. 9. 2 Thess. 3. 14.

⁶ John 20. 23. 1 Cor. 5. 4.

§ 68. Church discipline and church unity.

The little ones here spoken of are children who are entitled, according to this exhortation, to the very tender regard of Christians. Hence we may apply profitably what is here said to such Christians, as are like to children, in point of humility. These are often thought little of by the more confident professors of faith; who, conceiving themselves in all things right, look down with contempt on the conscientious scruples of the humble. Christ therefore here gives us very solemn warning, that we take heed, and despise not any one of them. He states also two reasons for such caution. First, because little as they esteem themselves, and of small account though they may appear to us, there are angels who watch over their souls, angels who all the while incessantly behold the face of the Almighty in heaven. Secondly, we should consider, that it was for such as these that Christ died, for He came "to save that which was lost." The more abject they feel in themselves, the more deeply they humble themselves in his sight, the more they deplore their corrupt nature, depreciate their best works, and heartily repent of their manifold sins; they are the more exactly in the case of those whom Christ came to save, they resemble the more closely that lost sheep, among the hundred, whose finding gives more joy to its owner, than the possession of the rest of his flock. Take heed then, not only that ye make them not offend, but that ye do not so much as despise one of these little ones, of whom God so earnestly desires that they should not perish. "Ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath." Eph. 6. 4. Never be induced to shock the conscience, or to slight the value, either of a child, or of a childlike Christian. Let his feelings, his habits, his very scruples be sacred in your sight. Scoff not, smile not, at a pooriness of spirit, to which it might be well for yourselves to attain. Nor dare to aggravate the burden of a cross, which you should rather assist to bear.

And according to the kind treatment we have ourselves, as lost sinners, thus received of God through Christ, should be the tenor of our own conduct, to such as trespass against us. "Go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." A private, friendly, and frank remonstrance, is the most likely of all methods to convince them that they have done wrong. And for our encouragement, we may consider that we shall then have gained our brother, won him to the confession and reparation of his fault, won him from continuance in sin to repentance and amendment of life. Or if this plan fail, we should next make our complaint in the presence of some one or more chosen friends. That the charge thus laid open, before witnesses, may less admit of doubt or disputation. "And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it," says our Lord, "unto the church." In which words, and in what follows, He points plainly to the discipline soon afterwards established, whereby the church used to bind or loose, that is, to censure or forgive, the faults of its members.

Greatly it is to be regretted, that such discipline is amongst ourselves discontinued; that it should have now been made impracticable, partly by the religious indifference, and yet more by the religious disunion, of the professed members of the church of Christ. Great is the inducement He has here set forth for us, to dwell together in unity. If we are but agreed on earth, as touching any thing that we shall ask, it shall be done for us, of our Father which is in heaven. If we are but gathered together in the name of Christ, bound into one company by communion of Christian faith, then is He in the midst of us. Earnestly should we endeavour to promote the consummation of such union as this, throughout the Christian world. Thankfully should we reflect that in our churches and families, somewhat of such union has, by God's grace, been preserved. We are agreed touching what we shall ask, we are gathered together in the name of Christ; and so surely as we are so, He is in the midst of us. Oh may our souls be conscious of his presence; our prayers be earnest for his grace; our faith enlivened by his gracious promise; and our love enlarged by his unbounded love!

The parable of the king who took account of his servants.

21 Then came Peter to him, and said, Lord, how oft shall my brother sin against me, and I forgive him? 'till seven times?

22 Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times: but, Until seventy times seven.

23 Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants.

24 And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand || talents.

25 But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife, and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made.

26 The servant therefore fell down, and † worshipped him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

27 Then the lord of that servant was moved with compassion, and loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

28 But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellowservants, which owed him an hundred † pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest.

29 And his fellowservant fell down at his feet, and besought him, saying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.

30 And he would not: but went and cast him into prison, till he should pay the debt.

31 So when his fellowservants saw what was done, they were very sorry, and came and told unto their Lord all that was done.

32 Then his lord, after that he had called him, said unto him, O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desiredst me:

33 Shouldest not thou also have had compassion on thy fellowservant, even as I had pity on thee?

34 And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors, till he should pay all that was due unto him.

35 So likewise shall my heavenly Father do also unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their trespasses.

‘ Luke 17. 4.

|| A talent is 750 ounces of silver, which after five shillings the ounce is 187l. 10s.

† Or, besought him.

‡ The Roman penny is the eighth part of an ounce, which after five shillings the ounce is sevenpence halfpenny.

§ 69. That we should forgive as we have been forgiven.

St. Peter seems to have thought that he offered much, in proposing to forgive his brother until seven times. “Until seventy times seven,” is the reply of our Lord; signifying, that we should forgive over and over again, without limit. Thus oftentimes when vainly we imagine that we have purposed or done some acceptable duty, we should feel, if we but felt the spirit of this answer, that we are at the best unprofitable servants.

This reply our Lord enforces by a parable, in which we may first remark the proportion between our trespasses against God, and those of men amongst each other. They are as ten thousand talents to an hundred pence; as a sum which exceeds the largest fortune, to one which may be earned readily by any man. No proportion can indeed adequately express what is due from a creature, who offends, to a Father who preserves, supports, and bears with him; from a bondsman, to a Redeemer who died for his sake; from a sinner, to the Holy Spirit who makes him holy. Whilst our own petty grievances, what are they at the utmost, but trifles, which an hour may make nought, together with the life, nay the world, in which they take place? When we think how few and evil are our days, see Gen. 47. 9, how short our pilgrimage, and how full of sin; we should be ashamed ever to forget Joseph’s counsel to his brethren, “See that ye fall not out by the way.” Gen. 45. 24. Next we should note, in this parable, the supplication of the servant, “Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.” He asked only for time. He thought, it seems, and so vain man too often fondly trusts, that he might make amends in the future, for the faults of the past. But the lord of that servant knew, better than he, what relief was really needful for him. He loosed him, and gave him more than he asked for, even forgave him the debt. This it is that God has done for us, through Jesus Christ our Lord. This it is He still doeth, still offereth to do, in the final day of judgment; even to remember our sins no more. Our pride leads us to think that we can make amends for ourselves. Our heavenly King, whom we could in truth never pay, at once to make us humble, hopeful, and thankful, looseth us, and forgiveth us the debt.

But how now does the servant treat his fellowservant? Does he cheerfully remit those few poor pence, which are all that the utmost grievances between man and man can be deemed, in comparison, to amount to? Nay, he will not give his debtor so much as time. He will not listen to the very prayer he had himself before put up; “Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all.” The covetousness of man insists on punctual payment, his offended pride demands full satisfaction, or his inflamed anger thirsts for retribution and revenge. Would he not then be justly visited by the wrath of his heavenly Lord, and delivered to the tormentors, till he shall pay all that is due? In the last place observe, that though this debt had been once forgiven the servant, it is imputed to him again to the full. So likewise, let us remember, will our heavenly Father do also unto us, if we forgive not every one his brother their trespasses. He has indeed once for all forgiven us through Christ, whose death is an atonement for the sins of all. Yet for the very sins, once forgiven, must we expect, according to this parable, to be called again to account, if we ourselves forgive not. His pardon is free, and we, through his grace are free; only not free to sin, only not free not to forgive. *

May the sense of the love we have received constrain us out of love, rather than fear, to love, to help, to forgive each other! May we discharge from our hearts, if yet we harbour there a thought of bitterness, may we discharge it from our hearts for ever!

Christ answereth on divorcement and on marriage.

1 And it came to pass, ¹ that when Jesus had finished these sayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan;

2 And great multitudes followed him; and he healed them there.

3 The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him, and saying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cause?

4 And he answered and said unto them, Have ye not read ² that he which made them at the beginning made them male and female.

5 And said, ³ For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife: and ⁴ they twain shall be one flesh?

6 Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

7 They say unto him, ⁵ Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?

8 He saith unto them, Moses, because of the hardness of your hearts suffered you to put away your wives: but from the beginning it was not so.

9 ⁶ And I say unto you, Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoso marrieth her which is put away doth commit adultery.

10 His disciples say unto him, If the case of the man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry.

11 But he said unto them, All men cannot receive this saying, save they to whom it is given.

12 For there are some eunuchs, which were so born from their mother's womb: and there are some eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

¹ Mark 10. 1.

² Gen. 1. 27.

³ Gen. 2. 24. Eph. 5. 31.

⁴ 1 Cor. 6. 16.

⁵ Deut. 24. 1.

⁶ Ch. 5. 32. Mark 10. 11. Luke 16. 18. 1 Cor. 7. 11.

§ 70. How we must deny ourselves in all things for Christ's sake.

The coasts of Judæa beyond Jordan were the part of the country first occupied by the Jewish tribes. It was to be expected, therefore, that Jesus would there preach to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. "And great multitudes followed him." Many probably in those parts frequented his teaching; and many also of his former hearers went with Him over Jordan. "And he healed them there." He exercised in all places, with equal ease, and with equal grace, his power of miraculous healing. "The Pharisees also came unto him, tempting him;" that they might find somewhat to lay to his charge. With this view they questioned Him, in a matter much debated among themselves, what cause might justify a man in putting away or divorcing his wife. Christ refers them to the institution of marriage, as set forth, in the case of our first parents, at the beginning of the book of Genesis. He points out how God had sanctioned marriage, by making at the first one man and one woman. He mentions, as said by God, what Adam appears by God's direction to have repeated, Gen. 2. 24, "Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." From whence it seems to follow, that the new connexion, for which the old one is relinquished, must be as binding as the other, nay more binding. So that a son can no more cease to be his parent's child, than a husband the spouse of his wife. As also our Lord here concludes, from their being pronounced by God to be one flesh, no man must dare to put them asunder.

The Pharisees next ask, "Why did Moses then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away?" Not that Moses had so commanded; he only permitted this course in some special cases. See Deut. 24. 1. But not waiting to notice this misrepresentation, our Lord tells them that the permission, which the Law contained, was an indulgence to the hardness of their hearts. It was one which was not known "from the beginning," that is, before the time of Moses. It was one which they had in practice very grossly abused. It was one which He therefore now limits very strictly in the Gospel to a single and extreme case. How lax must have been the practice of the Jews, if even the disciples could argue from this limitation, that "if the case of a man be so with his wife, it is not good to marry!" As if the most endearing ties were of value only to be exchanged! As if the mutual help and comfort God graciously provided for mankind, were not worth having on the terms He kindly ordered for the best!

To this remark our Lord replies, that a single state is indeed to be preferred, not however as having more of liberty, but as having less. For that state of life is nearest unto heaven, in which there is least room for worldly care, earthly affections, or fleshly lusts. That state, in which we are least likely to love a fellow creature more than Christ, is the fittest to prepare us for a resurrection, "where they neither marry nor are given in marriage." Matt. 22. 30. "All men," our Lord owns, "cannot receive this saying." That is, it is a saying of more than common difficulty; a counsel of perfection, binding not on all, but on them "to whom it is given." It is justly also considered to have been most appropriate to what St. Paul called "the present distress," 1 Cor. 7. 26, the times when Christians were few in number, and persecuted by the rest of mankind. But to all persons, and in all times, it must be profitable from this passage to learn, that even marriage, important as we justly reckon this step in life, weighs nothing as compared with our eternal welfare. For the kingdom of heaven's sake we must be ready, if plainly required, to forego what our hearts most fondly wish. We must deny ourselves, in some circumstances, the indulgence of affections, which in others are allowable, the enjoyment of a condition, which, when duly ordered, serves to signify the mystical union that is betwixt Christ and his church. See Eph. 5. 23. And we must learn, whatever be our state, to count all things but loss for Christ; see Phil. 3. 8; and to love neither father nor mother, brother nor sister, husband nor wife more than Him.

Christ receiveth little children, and teacheth the young man the way of life eternal.

13 ¹ Then were there brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them, and pray: and the disciples rebuked them.

14 But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven.

15 And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence.

16 ² And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?

17 And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments.

18 He saith unto him, Which? Jesus said, ³ Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, 19 Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

20 The young man saith unto him, All these things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?

21 Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me.

22 But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

¹ Mark 10. 13. Luke 18. 15.

² Mark 10. 17. Luke 18. 18.

³ Exod. 20. 13.

§ 71. How we may fulfil the law of God.

The disciples have here again need to be reminded, how amiable in the sight of God is the disposition of children. For they rebuked the parties who brought them unto Christ. Our Lord therefore replies, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them." These words, taken in connexion with other circumstances, afford considerable sanction to the practice of the church, in infant baptism. And very forcibly do they recommend us, as a point of Christian duty, to aid the helplessness of children, to bear with their waywardness, and to instruct them with patience, kindness, and attention. But chiefly do they enforce the doctrine our Lord had already laid down, that we must be ourselves in disposition like to little children, if we would enter, as we desire, into the kingdom of heaven. And so does St. Paul also exhort us, see 1 Cor. 14. 20, to be children in point of malice, at the very time when he bids us in understanding to be men. For children, we must remember, are by nature no more innocent than ourselves. Only their corruption scarce shews itself in action, by reason of their infant weakness. And besides, it must be considered, in the case of infant Christians, that the grace of God's Holy Spirit, so newly in baptism imparted to their souls, makes them to be, whilst scarcely capable of sin, children of grace, and heirs of the kingdom of heaven. It is for us, then, though grown up, and surrounded with the manifold temptations of our several ages, to do no more harm than they, to be like them indifferent to the vanities of the world, unpolluted by the lusts of the flesh, unbeguiled by pride, covetousness, or wrath; but to hold rather, as we trust they do, a communion of dependency and love, with the Spirit of a Father which is in heaven.

"And behold one came, and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" He hoped, it appears, to be told of some one particular thing to do, as a repetition of some one prayer, or a pilgrimage, perhaps, to some one place, or a careful observation of some one ceremony, or a watchful abstinence from some one enjoyment, one thing, in short, he wished to be told of, by the doing of which he might be sure to go to heaven. The reply of our Saviour shews us, that it is not the doing any one single thing, but a disposition to do every thing, and especially that thing which is most hard to us, a disposition to do this, in a devout manner, and on a principle of Christian faith, this it is that qualifies us for the kingdom of heaven.

First, however, our Lord inquires, "Why callest thou me good?" What, that is to say, what mean you by this name? Do you believe me to be, as I am, the holy Being to whom alone the name of good belongs? "There is none good but one, that is, God: but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." For this is the way to prove, that you believe Him to be good who gave them. And if further you would know which commandments, consult the Scriptures, keep those which there you read; as, for instance, those which are set down in the twentieth chapter of Exodus, as having been spoken by the voice, and written by the hand of God Himself. These the young man professed that he had kept from his youth up. He had yet, however, to learn their extent and perfection. He little thought that they implied, what Christ next enjoined him, "Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." This one thing he yet lacked; for being unwilling to do this one thing, he loved not his neighbour as himself, he loved not God with all his heart. Not that to do this one thing is the sure road to salvation, but that in him it was to be the proof of a readiness to do all things according to the will of God. For the love of riches seems to have been his besetting sin. And whatever be the sin that most besets us, in this it is that we are most tried; in this that we may most try, for ourselves, whether we do indeed in real earnest love God's commandments.

If this doctrine incline us also to be sorrowful, let us strive and pray that it may be a godly sorrow, such as worketh repentance, and amendment of life; that, if we have not yet so loved God, we may love Him now; and that, if we already love Him, we may henceforth love Him more.

Christ teacheth the perils of wealth, and the advantage of forsaking all for his sake.

23 Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24 And again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

25 When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?

26 But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men, this is impossible; but with God all things are possible.

27 Then answered Peter and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?

28 And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory,² ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

29 And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life.

30³ But many that are first shall be last; and the last shall be first.

¹ Mark 10. 28. Luke 18. 28.

² Luke 22. 30.

³ Ch. 20. 16. Mark 10. 31. Luke 13. 30.

§ 72. Reasons for contentment and self denial.

The young man, who inquired of our Lord the way of life, "went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions." Ver. 22. This led to what may seem a severe remark from our blessed Lord, "That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven." How "hardly," is next plainly expressed by a proverb, familiar in a country where camels were in use, and where they were the largest known animal. This proverb shews our Saviour to have meant, that for a rich man to be saved was as hard as any thing can possibly be conceived. So deceitful are riches! So engrossing is the love of them! So apt are they who have them, to trust in them, to be wasteful stewards of God's good gifts, and to forget, in the vanity and selfishness of their hearts, the Almighty Giver! Let those then, who have little, be content with such things as they have. See Heb. 13. 5. Let them be thankful that they are tried, as most men are by God's appointment, in this respect, on easier terms. Let them rejoice to think, that, through the love of Christ, whatever wants they here endure, they want not in the means of grace; they want not in the hope of heaven; "to the poor the gospel is preached." Luke 7. 22. Let those also, who have much, learn hence to be doubly watchful, lest through their wealth they perish; doubly active to improve their talent, in hope of a proportionate reward. For, impossible though it be with men, that they who are so beset with peril should in any case be saved; yet "with God all things are possible." With his spiritual aid, and in the faith of his redeeming love, every trial, alike of abundance or of want, of affliction or enjoyment, may, by his mercy, turn to our profit, and end in our glory.

* Behold we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have therefore?" Thus pleaded St. Peter for himself and the apostles. And though it was but the poor furniture of their humble occupation, their boats and nets that they had left, yet were these all they had. These were no less for them to lose, than for the wealthy would be their large possessions. And therefore does our Lord, who knew their zeal, the signal sacrifices they had yet to make, and the signal service they would hereafter render to the church; therefore does He promise them the most distinguished place, "in the regeneration," that is, in the resurrection, "when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory." Then shall the apostles also be exalted in honour. Then shall they, by their exaltation, judge, that is, convict of wilful disobedience, the tribes of Israel, who like them might have believed. Then shall they, with all that are the saints, "judge the world." 1 Cor. 6. 2. Then shall they preside also over the tens of thousands, who shall be sealed as children of the faith of Abraham, numbered according to the tribes of his posterity, out of every nation in the world.

For to all, in every country, and in every age, to all is extended the like gracious promise. Whatsoever they forsake in this present life for Christ, for his sake, and in deference to his command; whether it be the abundance of wealth, or the bare means of livelihood, their worldly goods, or the dearer ties of their earthly affection, they shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit everlasting life. There many, who are here first, shall be last; many who have now most large abundance, shall be then in deepest need. And the last shall be first; the poor shall be made rich, the lowly shall be lifted up, and the fishermen of Galilee, who, with little to forsake, had yet forsaken all for Christ, shall be enthroned in the kingdom of his glory. Let no one make excuse of having little to give up. Let none despond, as having no offering of value, to present unto the Lord. Offer what you have with fervent zeal. Forsake, with honest purpose of amendment, whatever hinders you in your Christian progress. Plead with God, not your own, but Christ's worth. Plead with Christ, his own, which He has made to be as ours. Believe in Him. Love Him. Love to do what He would have you. You will then be counted, however small your means, to have forsaken much for Christ. And, however here you may be taken for the last, you may hope by Him to be exalted among the first hereafter.

The parable of the labourers hired into the vineyard.

1 For the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an householder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard.

2 And when he had agreed with the labourers for a penny a day, he sent them into his vineyard.

3 And he went out about the third hour, and saw others standing idle in the market place.

4 And said unto them: Go ye also into the vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will give you. And they went their way.

5 Again he went out about the sixth and ninth hour, and did likewise.

6 And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others standing idle, and saith unto them, Why stand ye here all the day idle?

7 They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. He saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard; and whatsoever is right, that shall ye receive.

8 So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard saith unto his steward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the last unto the first.

9 And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a penny.

10 But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more; and they likewise received every man a penny.

11 And when they had received it, they murmured against the good man of the house,

12 Saying, These last have wrought but one hour, and thou hast made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day.

13 But he answered one of them, and said, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny?

14 Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this last, even as unto thee.

15 Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good?

16 So the last shall be first, and the first last: for many be called, but few chose.

‡ The Roman penny is the eighth part of an ounce, which after five shillings the ounce is reckoned halfpenny.

† Or, have continued one hour only.

1 Ch. 19. 30.

§ 73. How the last shall be first, and the first last.

This whole parable serves to shew us, what is meant by that saying of our Lord, which occurs both just before it, and just after it. "The last shall be first, and the first last." The kingdom of heaven, that is, the dealings of God with mankind through Christ, are compared to those of a householder, hiring labourers into his vineyard. He is represented as agreeing with the first for a certain sum: and then giving the full amount of that sum to all, whether they wrought for him one hour, or twelve. Those who are last hired he pays first. He gives to them as much as he had agreed for with the first. So that when these came to be paid, they murmur because, though they had done more work, they received no more pay than the others. The reply of the householder convicts them of injustice in this their complaint, reminds them that they had just what they had agreed for, and shews them that they had no right to find fault with him for doing what he would with his own.

Thus is it, to apply this parable to ourselves, thus is it in the experience of each Christian community. Christians perform service during periods of very different length; some going to the rest of heaven in early youth, some labouring in the vineyard till extreme old age, some serving God from their youth upwards, some not converted to the ways of pleasantness till their life is far advanced. In all these several cases God doeth what he will with his own; and yet giveth each "whatsoever is right." For He only in any case can determine or discern which of us is fitted, and when, to be taken to Himself. Those of us who have been as it were hired early, who from childhood have been in some sort working in the vineyard, and earning those wages which are the gift of God, should hence learn to be patient in well doing, and content under the continuance of our trials. First though in this sense we be, we shall, if we murmur, if we flag, if we fail continually to improve, we shall be counted for the last. The longer we have known our duty, the more we are bound to do it. More things become sin to us, as we better know God's will. To obey is easier, to transgress more heinous, in proportion as we have been longer in the habits of a Christian life, and are favoured more highly with the gifts of Christian grace. Oh, then, "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall!" 1 Cor. 10. 12.

Secondly, we may hence learn the folly, and the danger, of judging by comparison of ourselves with others. This may lead us to think, both too well of ourselves, and too ill of them. For who shall say, but that they even, who are guilty of notorious sin, may, ere they die, or already whilst we are judging, repent more truly, resolve more heartily, and reform also more largely, in the sight of God, than we ourselves, in our manifold sins, daily committed against Him? Never let us thus compare ourselves with each other! Never let us entertain that jealousy of God's mercy to the chief of sinners, which springs from self-sufficiency in ourselves, or lack of faith in the sufficiency of Christ!

Lastly, we should all learn from this parable, that our heavenly wages bear no such exact proportion to the extent of our services on earth, as we are apt in our pride to imagine. Rather should we consider them to be above all proportion to any service. And so should we more deeply feel them to be the free gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord. For whether we be first, or last, so we be but in the end, through his mercy "chosen," the reward is no reward of ours, but his, and his only, who hath bought both it for us, and us for Himself, through his most precious blood.

Christ answereth the mother of Zebedee's children.

17 ¹ And Jesus going up to Jerusalem took the twelve disciples apart in the way, and said unto them,

18 Behold, we go up to Jerusalem: and the Son of man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death,

19 ² And shall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify him: and the third day he shall rise again.

20 ³ Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him.

21 And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom.

22 But Jesus answered and said, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? They say unto him, We are able.

23 And he saith unto them, Ye shall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with: but to sit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father.

24 And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren.

25 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, 'Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them.

26 But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; .

27 And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant:

28 Even as the ⁵ Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

¹ Mark 10. 32. Luke 18. 31.

² John 18. 32.

³ Mark 10. 35.

⁴ Luke 22. 25.

⁵ Phil. 2. 7.

§ 74. The doctrine of the atonement.

Notwithstanding our Lord's repeated notice of his sufferings, the disciples still understood so little of what his kingdom was to be, that the sons of Zebedee applied, through their mother, to obtain in it the places of most distinguished honour. Our Saviour tells them that they know not what they ask. He informs them that places of honour in his kingdom imply eminence of pains and trouble, drinking of his cup of affliction, and being baptized with the baptism, that is, the sorrow and suffering, He was to be baptized with. And even when they professed cheerfully their readiness to undergo all this for his sake, He adds further, that neither so can He promise them the preference they apply for. For to sit on his right hand and on his left, to be exalted to the highest place of grace on earth or of heavenly glory, is not to be given out of personal favour, or in the way of arbitrary appointment. But it will be dispensed according to the revealed will of God, in proportion to our faith and zeal in his service. It is not, Christ saith, his to give, except to those for whom it is prepared of his Father. And who these are we may learn from another Scripture, "God hath prepared for them that love him." 1 Cor. 2. 9.

The rest of the apostles were moved with indignation against these two, for their making this request. To them therefore our Lord next turns, and reminds them, how unworthy is all such jealousy and anger, how unworthy of their Christian profession. In the world, indeed, now generally, as among the Gentiles of that time, high station, and rank, and authority, and dignity, are eagerly and angrily contended for. "But it shall not be so," says Christ to his apostles, and through them to all us his disciples, "it shall not be so among you." Our precedence is to consist, He tells us, in doing most good to each other; in ministering, most humbly and most charitably, to each other's wants and welfare. "Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Thus did the divine Teacher point to his own conduct, for a pattern of what He would have us do. Thus did He prove to us, that the highest of all dominion is consistent with service the most lowly. For who could be more high than He, the Son of God? Yet who more lowly than that Son of man, who went about doing good, who had not where to lay his head? This then is our pattern. And thus only can we become truly great, when we decline no duty however irksome, no service however humiliating, by which we may do real good to each other.

In the latter words of this last verse, our Lord does moreover very plainly teach the great Gospel doctrine of the atonement. He came "to give his life a ransom for many." A ransom means a payment to redeem us, to redeem us from the captivity of sin and death. This was the chief end for which our Saviour came. This, the very service, and the ministering, by which He became a Saviour unto all. He died for us; the just for the unjust, the righteous for the wicked. He gave his life a ransom for us; that we might through Him be free, free to serve Him in holiness and righteousness all the days of our lives. This his great love in our behalf let us now lay earnestly to heart. Let us requite it to the best of our ability, by ministering in like manner to the good of our brethren. Our life we cannot in like manner lay down for others. See Psalm 49. 7. But we should spend it in their service, for their benefit. We should go about doing good. And whatsoever our hand findeth to do we should do it with all our might. We should look not every man to his own things, but every man also to the things of others. See Phil. 2. 4. And the less we are selfish, irritable, or proud, the nearer we shall be to Christ's right hand in his kingdom that shall be revealed.

Christ giveth two blind men their sight.

- 29 ¹ And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him.
- 30 And, behold, two blind men sitting by the way side, when they heard that Jesus passed by, cried out, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.
- 31 And the multitude rebuked them, because they should hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David.
- 32 And Jesus stood still, and called them, and said, What will ye that I shall do unto you?
- 33 They say unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened.
- 34 So Jesus had compassion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed him.

¹ Mark 10. 46. Luke 18. 35.

§ 75. That it is through faith we see, and through Christ that we have faith.

A great multitude, we are told, now followed Jesus; their numbers increasing as they approached to Jerusalem, where it is probable that they looked for something strange to befall Him. He took therefore this occasion of working a very signal miracle on two blind men who were sitting by the way side. Plainly He has elsewhere taught us, in doing good, not to let our left hand know what our right hand doeth. Yet we see here, that, when the glory of God is concerned, the greater the number of beholders, the more we are bound to do good in their sight.

These two blind men were so eager in their application, that "the multitude rebuked them," to make them "hold their peace: but they cried the more, saying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou Son of David." Here we should observe, that in calling Him the Son of David, they did no less than own Him for the Christ. Blind as they were, they had attained a degree of faith such as many failed to feel who had all their senses perfect. So little does true faith depend on ability either of body or of mind! so well fitted for the conviction of all classes of persons are the evidences of Gospel truth! No deficiency of sight, no lack of learning, can exclude either the poor or the blind from the healing mercies of Christ; if only God move their hearts, if only it be their will, and their earnest prayer, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened. So Jesus had compassion on them;" He shewed mercy, because they so readily believed; because they so devoutly prayed; "and touched their eyes." This He did to prove that through the power of his hand they were healed. "And immediately their eyes received sight, and they followed Him." This was the first use they made of their sight, to follow Him through whom they had received it.

No miracle is more suitable than the giving sight to the blind, for illustrating the spiritual effect of the Gospel, on the human heart. By nature we are all heart blind. We are not able to discern our real good from our greatest evil. We can neither find, nor keep, the path which leadeth unto life eternal. Out of all who have this natural defect, many are never sensible that they labour under it. They live in error, and know not that it is error; in sin, and know not that it is sin. Such are the great mass of the heathen. Such are many of the most abandoned of Christians. Such, in many respects, are we all of us; who, however much we know, yet in many things do wrong, and know it not. Some, however, have a worse blindness than this, a blindness which they know of, but prefer wilfully to sight; a darkness they are aware of, but choose purposely instead of light, because their deeds are evil. See John 3. 1, 9. Though Jesus to them offer, "What will ye that I shall do unto you?" they have not the grace to answer, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened." If even they have heard somewhat of the truth, if even they have suspected themselves to be wrong, they close purposely their eyes, lest they should see more, lest they should see what they like not. They had rather not see, than have to walk in light. And therefore they are not healed.

Meantime there are also some, we trust many, who, being equally by nature blind, yet are earnestly desiring, of the Son of David, that their eyes may by Him be opened. Let us join ourselves to this company of believers. Let us endeavour, as the very ground of our hope of being healed, let us endeavour to have faith in Christ. Then will He have compassion on us, and touch our benighted eyes. Then will He enlighten our dark understandings, enable us to behold a new world around us; in every thing to see God, and his hand ruling over all. Then will appear to us the crown of endless glory, laid up for us in the heavens, there ready for all those who here believe in Christ. Through Him we have received what of sight we have, what of faith in things unseen. Let us be sure to use it in the following of Him. So shall we through Him, and from Him, receive more. And the more we see, the more let us desire, the more let us pray for, of God's good gift; for so shall we still the more receive.

Grant, "Lord, that our eyes may be opened," to behold through faith the things that are invisible; to seek thy will in all we do, to see thy hand in all we meet with, thy chastisements in our sufferings, thy goodness in our joys, and, above all, thy mercy in the saving of our souls!

Christ rideth into Jerusalem upon an ass.

1 And ¹when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then sent Jesus two disciples,

2 Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them, and bring them unto me.

3 And if any man say ought unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them; and straightway he will send them.

4 All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying,

5 ²Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy King cometh unto thee, meek, and sitting upon an ass, and a colt the foal of an ass.

6 ²And the disciples went, and did as Jesus commanded them,

7 And brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set him thereon.

8 And a very great multitude spread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest.

10 ¹And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?

11 And the multitude said, This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee.

¹ Mark 11. 1. Luke 19. 29.

² Is. 62. 11. Zech. 9. 9. John 12. 15.

³ Mark 11. 4.

⁴ Mark 11. 15. Luke 19. 45. John 2. 13.

§ 76. How we may best shew forth our own praise of Christ.

This entry of Christ, into Jerusalem, served to fulfil a very singular prophecy, and at the same time it very significantly represented to the Jews the nature of our Lord's intended kingdom. They expected, after all He had said to undeceive them, they still expected, that if He were the Christ, He would restore their lost dominion, would set them at the head of the nations upon the earth, and would enter as a great conqueror, with the pomp of earthly triumph, into the city of David his father. Yet the prophet Zechariah had very plainly forewarned them otherwise. Zech. 9. 9. "Behold thy King cometh unto thee meek, and sitting upon an ass, and upon," that is, even upon "a colt the foal of an ass." These words were sufficient to have taught the Jews that the Christ would be a very different kind of king from what they were looking for. From the views of earthly greatness, their thoughts should have been turned to the heights of spiritual excellence; and especially to the excellence of meekness and humility.

In order to fulfil this prophecy to the letter, Jesus sent two of his disciples, from the mount of Olives to a neighbouring village, telling them beforehand where they would find the animals that were to be used on the occasion. At the same time He inclined the heart of the owner to part with them readily for his use. Happy was the man who was thus moved to give up without delay what was his own, for the use of Jesus Christ. He saw not who it was that wanted them; but only the two disciples. He knew not for what use they were required; but was satisfied with the message, "The Lord hath need of them. And straightway he sent them." This then should be our sufficient voucher, in any demand that is made on our assistance, towards works of charity or piety. If we be but well assured that the Lord hath need of what we reckon ours, if we but clearly see the way in which it may be given, or spent, most according to his will; straightway we should so spend, so give, so give up all to his service.

And now, every thing being prepared, behold the King enter his own city, riding on this lowly beast! Have we not here a lively image of God visiting his own fallen world, in a form so beneath Himself, that "the world knew him not?" John 1. 10. "And the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest." May we not here see it represented, that, though the world know not Christ, there is notwithstanding a multitude who acknowledge Him for the Son of David? There are thousands, and tens of thousands, there are, there have been, and there will be, in all ages of the church, who believe truly, who repent heartily, who obey affectionately; with whom Christ Himself ever is, and against whom the gates of hell shall not prevail. Let it be our very earnest endeavour to be joined to this holy company. Let us not be content without a lively hope, without a firm conviction, that we are true followers of Christ. It is not to cry Hosanna, but to pray day and night; that is, to desire in the heart, as well as say with the lips, "Lord save us:" this it is that will make us to be counted for his servants. It is not now to spread our garments on the ground beneath his feet; but to offer them in the clothing of the poor and naked: this it is that He will reckon for the honouring of Himself. Soon will He come again; and that, to judgment. Soon, at his coming, will not the whole city only, but the whole earth also, be moved. And shall any of us still ask out of indifference, "Who is this?" Shall we dare to be ignorant of what He hath told us of Himself, of his divine nature, of his boundless love, of his all sufficient power to save? No; let us be assured that "this is Jesus, the prophet of Nazareth, of Galilee." This is He, who died for our sins. This is He, through whom alone we have hope of eternal life.

Oh, may we now be moved, by his so great goodness, to believe effectually in his precious death! Oh, that when He shall come to judgment, and many shall still ask in faithless ignorance, "Who is this?" we may have the grace to say, with full assurance of hope, "This is Jesus," our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ!

Christ visiteth the temple; and maketh the fig tree wither.

12 And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves,

13 And said unto them, It is written, ¹ My house shall be called the house of prayer; ² but ye have made it a den of thieves.

14 And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple; and he healed them.

15 And when the chief priests and scribes saw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the son of David; they were sore displeased,

16 And said unto him, Hearest thou what these say? And Jesus saith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, ³ Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?

¹ Is. 56. 7.

² Jer. 7. 11. Mark 11. 17. Luke 19. 46.

³ Ps. 8. 2.

⁴ Mark 11. 13.

§ 77. That we should pray in faith, nothing doubting.

The first thing Jesus did, “when he was come into Jerusalem,” ver. 10, was to visit the temple. In no place was He so much concerned, as in the house of prayer, to shew forth his power, and his truth. And nowhere either is He to ourselves so closely present, nowhere so sure to hear our prayers, nowhere so averse to behold iniquity, as in that which is now his temple, the congregation of faithful Christians. Thence He would have us utterly exclude, not only all buying and selling, but all thought also of this world’s traffick, all buying and selling in the mind. To the building in which we worship we should thus apply his plain direction, “My house shall be called the house of prayer.” To it we should thus apply his solemn warning, that we make it not a den of thieves. Let us take heed that we never, when in church, allow our thoughts to wander on any scheme of iniquity. Let us strive never to let them wander at all. If we dwell with satisfaction on our past misdoings, which we should there be confessing, and repenting of; if we are purposing for the future transgressions against which we should be there praying for God’s grace; if we there think of our worldly dealings, or worldly work, or of any thing except God’s service, and the love of Christ, and the saving of our souls through Him; what is this, but to mock at his presence, to rob Him of the honour due unto his name, and to make his temple a den of thieves?

In the temple Jesus healed the blind and the lame. Thus when He receives our penitence and hears our prayers in the Christian congregation, He makes by his power our blind souls to see, and guides our feeble steps into the way of holiness and peace. There too, in the temple, did the children attend, and cry, “Hosanna to the Son of David.” Wherein we see fulfilled this prophecy, “Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou perfected praise.” And further we may hence learn, that we should practise in our devotion, somewhat of a child’s eagerness and sincerity of affection. Not that either they, or we, know how to thank God, as we ought, for his mercy to mankind through Christ. No; but we may hence conclude, for our direction, that He counts that praise for most near to perfect, which like the joyful cry of children is most fervent, thankful, and sincere.

The next morning He made to wither the barren fig tree. In this miracle we have a warning against hearing without faith, or having faith without the fruit of works. “Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever,” is the sentence which all must look for, who have no such fruit to shew, when Christ demands it of them. “And presently the fig tree withered away.” And the disciples, though familiar with his mighty works, yet marvelled and said, “How soon is the fig tree withered away!” So little were they acquainted with the extent of his power! So far were they from being aware that He meant to impart of it to themselves! He here assures them, that if they had but faith, and doubted not, they should be able to do like miracles, even marvels as great as the removing of mountains.

To Christians in all ages is extended the promise next following, “All things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive.” See then, when you pray, that you pray with faith; with faith, which looks ever for things spiritual; with faith which makes you ask for such things first; with faith, which nothing doubts but that God will give them; with faith, which waits patiently his good time; with faith, which all the while it waits, is able to rejoice in hope. Sure, as you thus ask, you will receive. Not perhaps just what you ask, or as you ask it. But what He knoweth to be best for you; He to whom you pray; He who is aware both of our necessities before we ask, and of our ignorance in asking; (see Liturgy) He, who, unworthy as are our prayers, vouchsafes to grant them for the worthiness of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. (See Liturgy.)

Christ reproveth the Jews by the similitude of the two sons.

23 ¹ And when he was come into the temple, the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority?

24 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things.

25 The baptism of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say unto us, Why did ye not then believe him?

26 But if we shall say, Of men; we fear the people; ² for all hold John as a prophet:

27 And they answered Jesus, and said, We cannot tell. And he said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

¹ Mark 11. 27. Luke 20. 1.

28 But what think ye? A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first, and said, Son, go work to day in my vineyard.

29 He answered and said, I will not: but afterward he repented, and went.

30 And he came to the second, and said likewise. And he answered and said, I go, sir: and went not.

31 Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto him, The first. Jesus saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you.

32 ² For John came unto you in the way of righteousness, and ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him: and ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

² Ch. 14. 5.

³ Ch. 3. 1.

§ 78. How we may duly estimate our obedience or our sins.

The manner of our Lord's entry into Jerusalem, his healing and teaching in the temple, and his driving away the money changers out of its walls, were matters of so public a nature, that the chief priests and elders might seem justified in demanding, "By what authority doest thou these things?" And no doubt He would have replied to their inquiry, but for some such reasons as these two following. First, they ought long before to have acknowledged his power to be from God. For they might have known it, by his works, to be so. Secondly, they did not ask for information, but with a view to ensnare Him, to frame a charge against Him. For they were persuaded that He had no authority from the Roman governor. And they would have been able, had He pleaded any other, to accuse Him of treason against Caesar. He therefore asks them also a question; which they could not answer, without either owning themselves in fault, or else giving offence to the people. And when to this they refused a reply, He then very justly declared, "Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things." Here we see how we ought to meet such inquiries, as it may be inconvenient, or wrong to satisfy. Not by falsehood, not by prevarication, but by some such gentle method of reply, as may point out that the inquiry ought never to have been made.

And further we learn the duty of turning all our conversation to the improvement of those with whom we converse. For so did our Lord, from this ensnaring question, take occasion to bring home, to the consciences of the priests, their guilt in rejecting the baptism of John. He compares them to that one of the two sons, who, in answer to the father's desire that they would work in his vineyard, "said, I go, sir; and went not." They were professors of religion. They pretended to great zeal in the service of God. Yet when John came to them "in the way of righteousness," that is, preaching a doctrine which they might have known to be righteous, they believed him not. "But the publicans and the harlots believed him." They, whose lives were most opposed to the tenour of his preaching, obeyed it in repentance and amendment. "And ye, when ye had seen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him." Not even by this marvellous conversion of those, whom they most took for sinners, were they awakened to repentance and faith.

This comparison between the self righteous and the profligate, as to the readiness with which they enter into the kingdom of God, is frequently insisted on by our Lord. It should frequently, therefore, engage our most serious consideration. A family such as our own, in which the reading of the Scriptures, and the duties of devotion, are openly observed, a family such as this, needs often to be warned, that we are not therefore sure to be more near to God, than such as are reckoned the most profligate of mankind. Better we are, thus far, that our conduct is less wicked in itself. Better too, in this sense, were the scribes and Pharisees, than the publicans and harlots. Their conduct was less wicked in itself, but not less wicked in them, in them who knew so much better, and professed so much more. Many persons, whose case we are apt to think most desperate, may be making, for aught we can see to the contrary, greater efforts to repent; and yielding also more fruit of their imperfect faith, than we who so rashly pass sentence against them. When then we read of publicans and harlots going into the kingdom of heaven before respectable Pharisees, we should lay to heart these profitable conclusions. First, that it is not for our own works' sake, but out of God's free gift, that any of us shall be saved at all. Secondly, that however great may have been our sins, we may be justified, through God's grace, by faith in Christ. And, thirdly, that, when we would estimate our faith by its fruits, we must try our works, not by comparison with our neighbours', but by what we know of God's will, from God's word; and by what we might know of it more, by God's grace, than we do, if we would obey it better, and love it more.

Parable of the husbandmen, who slew such as were sent unto them.

33 Hear another parable: There was a certain householder, ¹ which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a winepress in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country:

34 And when the time of the fruit drew near, he sent his servants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it.

35 And the husbandmen took his servants, and beat one, and killed another, and stoned another.

36 Again, he sent other servants more than the first: and they did unto them likewise.

37 But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son.

38 But when the husbandmen saw the son, they said among themselves, This is the heir; ² come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.

39 And they caught him, and cast him out of the vineyard, and slew him.

40 When the lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto those husbandmen?

41 They say unto him, He will miserably destroy those wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which shall render him the fruits in their seasons.

42 Jesus saith unto them, ³ Did ye never read in the Scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

43 Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

44 And whosoever ⁴ shall fall on this stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

45 And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them.

46 But when they sought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, because they took him for a prophet.

¹ Is. 5. 1. Jer. 2. 21. Mark 12. 1. Luke 20. 9.

² Ps. 118. 22. Acts 4. 11.

³ Ch. 26. 3. John 11. 53.

⁴ Rom. 9. 33. 1 Pet. 2. 7. Is. 8. 14.

§ 79. How we should render unto God the fruits of holiness.

The householder in this parable represents Almighty God. The vineyard is here the covenant of his mercy through Christ. The husbandmen mean the children of Israel, to whom that covenant was especially intrusted. The servants whom they killed are the prophets, whom they severally set at nought, or put to death. The son, who was sent last of all, is Jesus Christ our Lord. Him, too, did they cast out, and slay; reckoning thus the more surely to retain the exclusive possession of the vineyard. Yet far other was the fruit of their misdoing, as they themselves, in their judgment of the parable, gave sentence against themselves, that it should be. God took from the Jews his covenant, and bestowed it on a people, namely, the Gentiles, who bring forth, we trust, in some degree, the fruits thereof.

Hitherto the chief priests and Pharisees seem not to have been aware that they were condemning themselves. Christ brings home to them the parable, by adding the words of a prophecy from the Psalm: "The same stone which the builders refused, is become the head stone in the corner." Ps. 118. 22. The builders were the Jews who rejected Jesus; He the stone, who being rejected by them, was received with joy by the Gentiles. And as a corner stone unites the walls of two adjoining sides; so does He unite, in one spiritual building, all, whether Jews or Gentiles, who truly believe in Him. This meaning our Lord makes clear, and the application of the parable strictly personal, by saying further to these chief priests and Pharisees; "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Wherein He very plainly tells them, that they should be rejected from being God's favoured people; and also, that this favour, they were so jealous of, should henceforth be extended to all, who would bring forth fruits worthy of it. Whilst the stone, that is, Himself, the corner stone before spoken of, should be a stumblingblock to the faithless; making them to fall and to be broken. And it should fall also on the rebellious and wilfully disobedient, grinding them to powder, that is, utterly destroying them.

The Pharisees, when they perceived that He spake of them, instead of paying the more heed to his awful words, sought only the more eagerly to lay hands on Him. Such was their aversion to the truth here spoken home to themselves. Let us, on the contrary, search out most diligently, and read most frequently, those places of Scripture, in which our own case is most plainly touched, in which God most plainly reproves our own sins. Let us, in all places also, try to see, what may most apply to our own selves. Even here, where our Lord spake chiefly to the Jews, we may perceive perhaps, if we well examine, that He spake to us also. Are we not, in many respects, rather satisfied with the possession of our privileges, than careful to improve them? pleased rather to count others excluded from God's favour, than anxious to profit by it, to the saving of our souls? And what is this, but to desire to keep the vineyard to ourselves, instead of rendering to its Lord the fruits in their seasons? And what, if we fall away from grace given? What, if we sin wilfully, after having enjoyed the knowledge of the truth, and the good gifts of the Holy Ghost? Is not this to slay the Son Himself? Is not this to crucify our Saviour afresh, and to put Him to an open shame? Ever let us labour faithfully in God's service, acknowledging that the vineyard, we enjoy the use of, is his. Let us ascribe to his goodness all that here we have. And when called on to give it up, let us still remember, that all we then hope for is his gift also. And, above all things, let us reverence his Son. When He hath in mercy sent that Son, to reveal to us his will, let us reverence Him, by doing what He commands. And since that Son out of like mercy died for us on the cross, let us reverence Him, by a devout and lively faith in the atonement of his most precious death.

The parable of the marriage of the king's son.

1 And Jesus answered ¹ and spake unto them again by parables, and said,

2 The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his son,

3 And sent forth his servants to call them that were bidden to the wedding : and they would not come.

4 Again, he sent forth other servants, saying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage.

5 But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandise :

6 And the remnant took his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them.

7 But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth : and he sent forth his armies, and destroyed those murderers, and burned up their city.

8 Then saith he to his servants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy.

9 Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.

10 So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all as many as they found, both bad and good : and the wedding was furnished with guests.

11 And when the king came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment :

12 And he saith unto him, Friend, how camest thou in hither not having a wedding garment ? And he was speechless.

13 Then said the king to the servants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and cast him into outer darkness ; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

14 ² For many are called, but few are chosen.

¹ Luke 14. 16. Rev. 19. 9.

² Ch. 20. 16.

§ 80. How this parable applies to them that are Christians.

There are three ways in which we may apply the resemblance of this parable to the Gospel of Christ. First, in respect of its being refused by the people who were first invited. This is what our Lord had said not long before, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Ch. 21. 43. For like unto a marriage was that alliance, or covenant of love, to which the children of Israel were first of all bidden. Them did God select, out of all mankind, to be united by faith unto the Messiah. His servants He sent forth, prophets and apostles, and other ministers of the Gospel, to call them which were bidden to the wedding ; to offer first, unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel, the privilege of being saved through Christ. "And they would not come." They wilfully refused. "They took" also "his servants, and entreated them spitefully, and slew them." So the king, that is God Almighty, caused the armies of a great nation to come, and destroy those murderers, and to burn up their city. And then sending among strangers, by whom are here meant the Gentiles, He invited all, both bad and good, to the wedding, that is, to the covenant of salvation through Christ. Thus was "the casting away of them the reconciling of the world." Rom. 11. 15. Thus when they had refused, we were invited to the Gospel feast.

Let us take to ourselves warning from their obstinate refusal, so often insisted on by our Saviour, and always, we may be sure, always for our instruction. Let us apply the parable in the second place, in this other sense, to ourselves. We here sit, in God's world, and in Christ's church, provided for graciously, as at his feast. How deeply does it concern us, to think of that awful day, when the King shall come in "to see the guests !" We are guests collected from the highways, called from the broad path of sin to sit down to a feast of holiness. Ours is now the blessed privilege, that if we hunger and thirst after righteousness, we shall, through God's grace, be filled. Let us take heed that we prefer not farm or merchandise, the profits, or business, or pleasures of the world, to a spiritual communion with God. Hereby we may become, not guests only, but sons of God, joint heirs with Christ Himself. Let us be sure also that we put off "the old man," Eph. 4. 22, and have on the wedding garment, the righteousness which is by faith, and the holiness which comes of faith, in Jesus Christ. Not in what St. Jude, ver. 23, calls "the garment spotted by the flesh," not in our own unrepented sins, nor yet in any vain conceit of such works as we might do without God's good grace. Not in these let us come to the Gospel feast. In no such state as this, let us kneel down to pray, lie down to sleep, or rise up to work. But if we would have the true wedding garment, let us put on that lively faith in Christ, which works in us a fervent love of Him, and a diligent keeping of all his commandments.

In the third place, we may apply this parable, as it has been very forcibly applied by our church, to that sacrament of which our Lord thus sets forth the duty ; "This do in remembrance of me." Luke 22. 19. Here again, many are tempted to refuse, on pretence of farm or merchandise, with excuse of being so engaged in their worldly business, that they have no time to prepare themselves for this heavenly feast. The garment required is repentance and faith, hope and charity, and a thankful heart. They, who will not now put on these Christian graces, have here often much to say, as they reckon, in their defence. Yet hereafter they will be found to be speechless. And little difference will it then make, whether a man be thrust out for want of the wedding garment, or have in no sense entered in at all. In neither case has he any part in the feast set forth.

Christ teacheth to render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's.

15 ¹ Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk.

16 And they sent out unto him their disciples with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest thou for any man: for thou regardest not the person of men.

17 Tell us therefore, What thinkest thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Caesar, or not?

18 But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said,

Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites?

19 Shew me the tribute money. And they brought unto him a || penny.

20 And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and || superscription?

21 They say unto him, Caesar's. Then saith he unto them, ¹ Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

22 When they had heard these words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

¹ Mark 12. 13. Luke 20. 20.

|| In value sevenpence halfpenny: ch. 20. 2.

|| Or, inscription.

² Rom. 13. 7.

§ 81. That our duty to the government is a part of our duty to God.

In order to understand aright this passage, it is necessary to bear in mind that the Jewish nation was now under the Roman dominion, and had submitted to pay tribute to Caesar the Roman emperor. And this payment was a matter of great annoyance to a people who reckoned themselves to be under the sovereignty of Jehovah alone. For thus they used to speak of themselves: John 8. 33: "We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man." The Pharisees therefore made sure that this question about the tribute must bring our Lord into one of two difficulties. If He were to pronounce the tribute unlawful, He would give offence to the Roman government. And if He were to pronounce it lawful, the people would take umbrage. Here, however, as on other like occasions, He found a way at once to silence them, and to teach them and us an important lesson. For by this time the Roman money, stamped with Caesar's image, was commonly circulated in the country. And this use of it was an acknowledgment of Caesar's sovereignty. When therefore He made them shew Him tribute money, and asked, "Whose is this image and superscription?" they were reminded that the money itself was, in this sense, already Caesar's. And they were not able to resist the force of his conclusion: "Render therefore unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's."

Well did they deserve the name of "hypocrites," who, under pretence of consulting Christ, were all the while bent on tempting Him; who, under pretence of paying honour to God, would have refused to pay tribute to their lawful ruler. And most profitably does our Lord here teach us, that true religion ever promotes, instead of hindering, our dutiful obedience to the laws, and to the magistrates, who, under Providence, administer them. The Christian, therefore, should thus interpret, and apply to his own conduct, this saying of Christ. I am to render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's. I am to pay all lawful demands, to shew all due respect, to the government, and to the governors of the country in which I live. For myself, I am to be seeking a better country, that is, a heavenly one. I shall abstain therefore from all too anxious care, too busy meddling, in the concerns of that country in which I now abide. Only, as far as my influence extends, I must promote in it the principles of Christian justice and Christian charity. Only I must pray heartily for its welfare, and especially, as the Scriptures very plainly teach, for all in it who are in authority; knowing how much their conduct may affect the happiness of mankind, and remembering that it is God who can alone dispose their hearts, as it seemeth best to his divine wisdom. And if, in any case, such as rarely occurs, the government were to ordain, and require, what is plainly at variance with God's word and will; then must I, at all costs, resolve to render unto God the things that are God's. Caesar must have his own, and no more. He must not interfere with that which is the Lord's. No law of man must induce me to do that which I know to be sin against the Almighty.

But in most cases, the doing of our duty to the king is the doing also of our duty to the King of kings. Thus might we at once render to each what is his own. Thus might we pass through this world to the next without offence to man, or disobedience to our Maker. Thus might we discharge rightly those various duties which concern us as citizens of either country. Here behaving as pilgrims. There looking for our home. Here complying as far as may be, with the wishes of those amongst whom we sojourn; and promoting that social order which protects the peaceable and the diligent, from the sons of violence, idleness, and fraud. But there laying up the treasure we most value. There setting the affection we most deeply feel. And offering to the King, who there ever reigns, the most precious of all tribute, the devotion of the heart.

Hear, Lord of lords, our prayer for them that bear rule in this world; that they may so administer things temporal, as finally to lose not the things eternal; that we may so render unto them their due, as to render thine to Thee; and that by our more Christian service, and by their more Christian rule, the kingdoms of this world may soon become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and He reign for ever and ever. See Rev. 11. 15.

Christ confuteth the Sadducees arguing on the resurrection.

23 'The same day came to him the Sadducees,² which say that there is no resurrection, and asked him,

24 Saying, Master, ³ Moses said, If a man die, having no children, his brother shall marry his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

25 Now there were with us seven brethren: and the first, when he had married a wife, deceased, and, having no issue, left his wife unto his brother:

26 Likewise the second also, and the third, unto the seventh.

27 And last of all the woman died also.

28 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife shall she be of the seven? for they all had her.

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God.

30 For in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven.

31 But as touching the resurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was spoken unto you by God, saying,

32 'I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living.

33 And when the multitude heard this, they were astonished at his doctrine.

¹ Mark 12. 18. Luke 20. 27.

² Acts 23. 8.

³ Deut. 25. 5.

⁴ Ex. 3. 6.

§ 82. Life and immortality brought to light through the Gospel.

Among the Jews, as among Christians, though there could be but one true religion, there was a variety of sects. And one of the chief things about which they were at variance was the resurrection of the dead, whether they would rise again, or would not. Now it appears, that in the law of Moses, the rewards and punishments set down relate chiefly to this present life. As we read, for instance, in the fifth commandment; Exod. 20. 12; "That thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." And yet in other parts of their Scriptures, they had very plain intimations that there would be some kind of a future life. And some knowledge of this truth they must have had also delivered down to them from father to son, ever since its first revelation to mankind. So that the Sadducees, however much they might have thought themselves in the right, were certainly in error, and might have known, by due attention, that they were so.

They however were more bent, such is the usual pride of ignorance, on proving themselves to be right in their opinion. And by way of supporting it, they quote to Jesus a passage taken from the law of Moses. See Deut. 25. 5. It was ordained for the Jews, in order to keep up the succession of each family distinct, that if a man should die, and leave a widow without children, his brother should marry her. They suppose therefore a case of seven brothers thus wedded in succession to the same wife; and they then ask, as in triumph, if there were to be a resurrection, "whose wife shall she be of the seven?" Our Lord shews them, notwithstanding, that in this their doctrine they erred, "not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God." His power was prepared, for those who rise again to life, a heaven which far exceeds the utmost happiness of this present world; one, in which "they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God." And next as to the Scriptures, by which are here meant those of the Old Testament; He shews them how they might have found, even in these, very significant hints, that those who die are not altogether dead, but though dead to the world are alive with God. For how else, He argues, could God call Himself "the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob;" and that, long after all three were dead; unless indeed He were likely to name Himself the God of the dead, and not of the living.

Here then does our Lord very signally bring "life and immortality to light." 2 Tim. 1. 10. He shews us how, even in the Old Testament, this doctrine is certainly, if not obviously, contained. He makes it clear, as well as certain, in the Gospel. Here He brings it to light. Here He makes it the great topic of appeal to the hopes and fears of all. Here we read of the worm that never dieth, and of the fire that shall never be quenched. See Mark 9. 44. Here, of the "crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5. 4. Here, of "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil. 3. 14. The life of man on earth we here learn to reckon but as a moment when compared with eternity; its most important business, when set against the caring for the soul, we now know to be no more than "vanity and vexation of spirit;" Eccles. 2. 26. and its purest and highest pleasures, even those of domestic love, not worthy of a place in the consummation of that bliss, which may so soon be ours in heaven.

Oh let us be not "astonished" only, as were the multitude, at this doctrine; but converted from doubt to faith, from sin to holiness of life. However difficult we may find it to understand the resurrection of the body, and its reunion with the soul, let us be assured that they will certainly take place. "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," 1 Cor. 15. 52, "at the last trump," "the dead shall be raised incorruptible." That moment will be to many, to how many we know not, a moment of horror inexpressible. That change may be to us, if it be not our own fault, from weakness to power, from corruption to incorruption, from dishonour to glory. Let us then give God thanks for this his mercy. Let us thank Him with our lives. And especially by temperance and sobriety, by purity and charity, both of thought, and word, and deed, let us strive to keep holy both body and soul, against the day when they may obtain "a better resurrection," Heb. 11. 35, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Christ answereth the Pharisees, and asketh them about the Messias.

34 ¹ But when the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence, they were gathered together.

35 Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying,

36 Master, which is the great commandment in the law?

37 Jesus said unto him, ² Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

38 This is the first and great commandment.

39 And the second is like unto it, ³ Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.

On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

41 ⁴ While the Pharisees were gathered together, Jesus asked them,

42 Saying, What think ye of Christ? whose son is he? They say unto him, The son of David.

43 He saith unto them, How then doth David in spirit call him Lord, saying,

44 ⁵ The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool?

45 If David then call him Lord, how is he his son?

46 And no man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions.

¹ Mark 12. 28.

² Deut. 6. 5. Luke 10. 27.

³ Lev. 19. 18.

⁴ Mark 12. 35. Luke 20. 41.

⁵ Ps. 110. 1.

§ 83. That there is no one commandment so great as to do away with the rest.

“When the Pharisees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence,” they should have been the more reluctant to renew their temptation of our Lord. But immediately “they were gathered together;” provoked, it seems, by this failure, so much the more to persevere in their wicked undertaking. Thus it is that sin hardens the heart. Thus the disappointments we meet with in the world, if they wear not our affection from its vanities, help often, through our pride and ill tempers, to whet our appetite for its enjoyments. These Pharisees now artfully proposed to Jesus a question much debated among themselves; “Which is the great commandment in the law?” This question, which ever way He answered it, would lead Him, they thought, to offend some one party or another. And they would have been glad also to have his sanction for their false notion, that they might be excused, by obedience to some one such great command, in the neglect or violation of the rest. Jesus, instead of preferring one single commandment, answers by a text from Deuteronomy 6. 5, which contains the spirit of every commandment, the principle on which all must be obeyed. “Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This,” He adds, “is the first and great commandment.” Not one which will exempt you from attending to the rest, but one which will constrain you to obey all. “And the second is like unto it.” For though they asked not which was the second, He adds, from Levit. 19. 18, another like text, “Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself.” This was a rule for all their duty to man, as the first was for their duty both to man and God.

After answering their question, He takes occasion, by asking one Himself, to convince them that they understood not their own Scriptures, nor the words of their own king David, relating to the Messiah. That He should be the son of David they were aware. “How then,” he asks further, “doth David in spirit,” that is, speaking by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, “call him Lord?” This they could not account for: because they could not discern between his lowly presence in the flesh, as the son of Mary, and his divine authority as the Son of God, the Lord of David, and of all mankind. Thus they were put to silence, as the Sadducees had been before them. And thus was shewn forth the willingness of God to satisfy in mankind all reasonable inquiries; and his purpose, to silence and to confound all perverse questionings of his word.

Let us then ever inquire, not in order to shew how much we know, but in order that we may learn to know more. Let us learn, in order to practise; in order to love God more, and to serve Him better. And specially let us be warned, by the words we have now been reading, never unduly to exalt any one part of our duty, by way of excusing our neglect of the rest. Vainly would the swearer plead, that he is sober and honest; and therefore hopes to be allowed in his oaths. Vainly would the drunkard protest, that he is kind and forgiving; and therefore trusts that he may safely indulge in excess. Vainly would the covetous, the malicious, the liar, the slanderer, or the extortioner, set up as their great commandment, that they have given to the poor, that they have adopted some exclusive form of doctrine, or obtained from some few vanities of dress, or amusement, or conversation. These things ought they to have done, and not to have left the others undone. See Matt. 23. 23. No one commandment is under the Gospel, any more than under the Law, in such sense the first and great, as that by doing it we may be excused in neglecting any one other. Our duty is no less than that we love God with all our hearts, and our neighbour as ourselves. If we but once truly feel such love as this, we shall feel it as much of one command as of another. If we once truly love God and our neighbour, we shall be as earnest in our desire to be pure and sober, as to be honest and true; we shall be as ready to forgive, as we are to give; as anxious to think no ill, as we are careful to provoke no wrath; as watchful to give Satan no advantage over our souls, as we are mindful to give the wicked no scandal against our name.

Oh let us thus in all things aim at true Christian love. Let us in all remember how God first loved us, and hence learn both how to love God Himself, and how for his sake, and for Christ's, to love one another!

Christ admonisheth to follow the teaching of the scribes.

1 Then spake Jesus to the multitude, and to his disciples,

2 Saying, The scribes and the Pharisees sit in Moses' seat:

3 All therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not.

4 ¹ For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers.

5 But all their works they do for to be seen of men: ² they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments,

6 ³ And love the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues,

7 And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi.

8 ⁴ But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren.

9 And call no man your father upon the earth: ⁵ for one is your Father, which is in heaven.

10 Neither be ye called masters: for one is your Master, even Christ.

11 But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant.

12 ⁶ And whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

¹ Luke 11. 46.

⁴ Jam. 3. 1.

² Numb. 15. 30. Deut. 22. 12.

⁵ Mal. 1. 6.

³ Mark 12. 38. Luke 11. 43.

⁶ Luke 14. 11. & 18. 14.

§ 84. The rule of Christian precedence.

The scribes and Pharisees were said by our Saviour to sit in Moses' seat, as having authority among the Jews to teach, and to explain, the law of Moses. That is to say, they were to be respected for their office sake. And this Christ said not to the multitude only, but to his own disciples; bidding them obey the instructions of these teachers, but not to do after their works. "For they say and do not." Christians are in like manner bound to observe and to do, what is taught them out of God's word by their proper pastors, even when these fall far short in their own lives, of what they preach. And who indeed can fail to fall far short, who that preaches the perfect law of the Lord? Who, even the very best, but must be much further short of what he ought to be, than the very worst is short of him? Look not then at man, look not at the earthen vessel; see 2 Cor. 4. 7; but regard, in each minister, the ordinance of God; regard Him who has ordered it thus on purpose, "that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." 2 Cor. 4. 7.

These Jewish teachers gave sad proof of inconsistency, between what they taught, and what they did. They bound heavy burdens, that is, imposed very severe duties on others. Whilst they themselves were not willing so much as "to move them with one of their fingers," that is, so much as to attempt to do any one of them. For, all their works they used to do, as our Lord here adds, "for to be seen of men." Of which conduct He gives several instances. First, they make broad their phylacteries. These were bandages worn on the wrist and forehead, on which they wrote sentences of the Law, as they did also on the borders of their garments. And the larger they made them, the more room they had for writing, and they could thus make the more show with what they wrote. Other instances of what they did, "for to be seen of men," were these. They chose always "the uppermost rooms at feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues;" that is to say, the places of highest honour, either at meals, or at worship. And in like manner they loved "greetings in the markets, and to be called of men Rabbi," which means master. These were tokens of respect, which men may indeed give, but which they should not care to receive; which ought, when given, to be received with modesty and reluctance, not exacted with eagerness and pride. And our Lord therefore lays down for his disciples a rule of conduct the very opposite; "Be not ye called Rabbi." We are not to be greedy of such titles as Master; but when we have them, we must bear in mind, that one is our Master, even Christ. Nor must we force upon each other such respect as is due to a father; for all we are brethren, and there is one Father which is in heaven, alike theirs, and ours. And thus, if we would be the greatest, we must become the servants of all; labouring continually for their good, and to their inclination submitting readily our own. For "whosoever shall exalt himself, shall be abased;" the proud shall be brought low. And "whosoever humbleth himself shall be exalted;" the lowly shall be raised up.

This is the great law of precedence, the true table of rank, many times repeated in the Gospels. Not that the distinctions of society are to cease, not that the several relations of father and child, master and servant, teacher and disciple, are to be unmarked with due tokens of respect. No; but that none should set their hearts on these, or on any other earthly honours; that we should look in all things rather to the praise of God; and thus, laying to heart our own many sins, which we well know, and hoping of our brethren many good things we know not, we should each esteem others better than ourselves. Thus might "the brother of low degree rejoice," as St. James bids him, "in that he is exalted," James 1. 9, 10, and the rich, and the great also, and wise, of this world, "in that he is brought low;" each glad to think, that they may soon enter into a world, where all, whatever here be their degree, all who are lowly in their own eyes, shall be exalted by the hand of God.

May God incline our hearts to bear one another's burdens! see Gal. 6. 2; not to judge, but to excuse, in others, what we dare not allow in ourselves! to take by preference the lowest place, the hardest work, the poorest recompence! and to make ourselves, each, in all we do, by diligence, and faithfulness in helping one another, not the masters, but the servants of all.

Christ denounceth woe against hypocrites.

13 But ¹woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in.

14 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! ²for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.

15 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves.

16 Woe unto you, ye blind guides, which say, Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor!

17 Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that sanctifieth the gold?

18 And, Whosoever shall swear by the altar, it is nothing; but whosoever sweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty.

19 Ye fools and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that sanctifieth the gift?

20 Whoso therefore shall swear by the altar, sweareth by it, and by all things thereon.

21 And whoso shall swear by the temple, sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein.

22 And he that shall swear by heaven, sweareth by the throne of God, and by him that sitteth thereon.

¹ Luke 11. 52.

² Mark 12. 40. Luke 20. 47.

|| Or, a debtor, or, bound.

§ 85. How Christians are in danger of the like hypocrisy.

Jesus, as his time of suffering drew nigh, rebuked with authority the scribes and Pharisees; and denounced, without regard to their displeasure, the sinfulness of their hypocrisy. He proclaimed against them, as recorded in this chapter, the sentence of woe, on eight different grounds: four of which are now to be explained. First, "for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." This means, that they rejected the truth of Christ; and persecuted all who were willing to receive it. Thus do all they also, in our own times, who wilfully gainsay the truth: all who scoff at others for doing their Christian duty; all who by scorn, coldness, or contradiction, discourage purposely in others, those heights of piety, which they are averse to strive after in themselves. Woe unto them, hypocrites as they also are; pretending to despise that holiness and heaven, which, in truth, they have no hope of reaching.

The second charge runs thus: "for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayer." This is a clear case of hypocrisy. Nor is it even amongst ourselves altogether an uncommon one. To wrong the widow and the orphan, to oppress, and to rob of their just dues, those who through the loss of friends, or through poverty, or through any other means, are helpless; these are practices which abound even in a Christian country. Many times too they are disguised by the profession of Christian faith, and by a scrupulous attendance on Christian worship. And yet what other than a vain pretence can long prayers, or any prayers, be counted for by God, when they issue from the lips of one, who in his heart delights in robbery or wrong? who wrongs, and robs, such as can least protect themselves? who wrongs without repentance, and robs without restitution? Woe unto him also! his very prayer is turned into sin! and he will hereafter receive only "the greater damnation!"

Thirdly, "for ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." The eagerness of men to make proselytes, and that especially to false opinions, and to faulty practices, arises usually not so much from a regard to their welfare, as from anxiety to be kept in countenance by numbers. This therefore is hypocrisy. And this hypocrisy we commit, whensoever we would persuade others to hold with us, if we do so out of regard to our own credit, rather than to their greater good. To this conduct we are most tempted, whereinssoever we most suspect ourselves to be wrong. Let us be careful then, especially in religious matters, to argue, not for victory, but for truth's sake. Let us convince, if we can, not for our own satisfaction, but for the good of those we converse with. Else we incur the woe here pronounced against making proselytes. Else if we lead our brethren astray, we incur the risk of helping them to fall from step to step into twofold greater error than ourselves.

The fourth charge against these blind guides is, that they say, "Whosoever shall swear by the temple, it is nothing; but whosoever shall swear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor." This sort of distinction they made, by way of loosing the bond of an oath altogether. For by such means as these, they could make out any oath to be binding or not, according to their convenience. Thus do many practise, not in oaths only, but in their ordinary speech, to prevaricate. They excuse themselves, by some fine spun distinction, in saying what deceives the hearer. To such belongs this woe for their falsehood, if by any means whatever they wilfully deceive. For in this consists the sin of lying; not in the mere utterance of the lips, but in the heart's intending to mislead, whether by word, or work, or look. Let us watch, that neither in oath nor in common conversation, neither in the matter nor in the manner of what we say or do, we intend any the least deceit. For by no form of falsehood can we escape the sure knowledge of that great God of truth, who is now privy to our inmost thoughts, and will hereafter bring them to judgment.

Christ further denounceth woe against the scribes and Pharisees.

23 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

24 Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat, and swallow a camel.

25 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye make clean the outside of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and excess.

26 Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.

27 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are like unto whited sepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleanness.

28 Even so ye also outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocrisy and iniquity.

29 Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! because ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,

30 And say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.

31 Wherefore ye be witnesses unto yourselves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets.

32 Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers.

33 Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?

¹ Luke 11. 42.

² Luke 11. 39.

§ 86. That these woes belong to the like sins in Christians.

The fifth offence, for which woe was thus fearfully denounced against the scribes and Pharisees, was their affecting so great nicety in the payment of their tithes, whilst they omitted "the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith." Thus we often see men punctual in some one or more formal duties; who neglect, all the while, the weightier matters of the Gospel; the thought of God's love in Christ dying for them, and the devout affection they hence owe to Him. From seeing this, as we cannot help to do, in others, let us learn to suspect it in ourselves. Let us examine, lest we also strain, as it were, at a gnat, and swallow a camel. The duties we most exactly perform are, usually, just such as are most easy to us. Those in which our trial chiefly lies, are such as we are most hindered in, by passion, bad habits, and conformity to an evil world. These then let us examine into; to these direct our chief attention; in these chiefly endeavour to improve; and so escape, if it may be, the threatened woe, by both doing these things, and not leaving the others undone.

Another point, on which these blind guides laid great stress, was the cleansing the vessels in which they took their food. And yet they scrupled not to fill the cup or the platter with the fruit of extortion, or with the viands of excess. Christ bade them cleanse first that which was within the vessels. By which He meant, that the most effectual of all purifying is to fill them with food that is honestly come by, temperately used, and bonitfully shared with those who need. How vain then, and worse than vain, is all outward splendour of our meals, when they are supported by extortion or fraud, when they are swallowed in gluttony or drunkenness! Whilst men admire the unrighteous feast, it is foul and offensive in the sight of God. And by his sure appointment, that plate however clean, that cup however bright, is woe to the soul for ever!

These hypocrites are next compared to whited sepulchres, as being fair outside, and foul within; a condition most hateful to all who are aware of it, that is, to God and to a man's own self. For God, we know, seeth the heart. And of himself a man cannot well help knowing, whether he is, or is not, what he is supposed to be. And most of us must be conscious of many worse things in our own hearts, than appear in our words or works. Thus are we, as far as this is our case, not unlike to the whited sepulchres here spoken of. To proclaim abroad our sins, would indeed but add to our offence, by throwing a scandal in the way of others. And, therefore, to repent of them with confession before God, and with amendment of the heart through his grace, this is the only method to avoid the woful condition of hypocrisy. And so only can we be saved from the misery and sin of appearing outwardly righteous before men, whilst within we are full of iniquity.

The eighth, and last, of these fearful charges against the scribes and Pharisees, for hypocrisy, is this: that they used to repair the tombs of the righteous prophets, whom their fathers had slain, and then take credit to themselves, and say, "If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." But by this very boast they confessed themselves to be the children of those murderers. And by their conduct towards our Lord, they proved that they inherited a full share of that inhuman temper. Let us take heed, when we hear of the guilt of others, that we say not in our hearts, we would not have done the like. But when we read of the sins which are recorded in the Bible, let us, from the view of other men's obduracy, turn rather to consider of our own. Have we never heard in vain the word of God? Have we never neglected the warnings of his prophets? Have we never been near to crucify his blessed Son afresh? We are men of common nature, and like passions with the worst. And were we to be tempted as they have been, how know we but what our fall would be as great?

Christ prophesieth the cruelty of the Jews, and the desolation of Jerusalem.

34 Wherefore, behold, I send unto you prophets, and wise men, and scribes: and some of them ye shall kill and crucify; and some of them shall ye scourge in your synagogues, and persecute them from city to city:

35 That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, ¹ from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar.

36 Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation.

37 ² O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, ³ and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would ⁴ I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!

38 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate.

39 For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

¹ Gen. 4. 8.

² Luke 13. 34.

³ 2 Chron. 24. 21.

⁴ 2 Esdras 1. 30.

§ 87. That we must receive with joy the tidings of salvation through Christ.

The prophecies here pronounced by Jesus Christ were exactly fulfilled in the conduct of the Jews, and in the signal destruction of Jerusalem. Among the teachers whom He sent unto them, some they slew, as Stephen and James; see Acts 7. 59; 12. 2; some they scourged, as Peter, Paul, and others of the apostles; see Acts 16. 23; 22. 24. Some they persecuted from city to city, as especially Paul and Barnabas. See Acts 14. 5, 6, 19, and 2 Cor. 11. 23—26. These deeds of cruelty proved them to be hardened in sin; to be a generation well deserving that exemplary vengeance, which was to be taken for all righteous blood, in the utter desolation of the people who had shed it. Not that those who aforetime slew the prophets were excused; nor that these others were to be punished for their fathers' sins. Rather this must mean, that as some signal national punishment was to be inflicted, in due season, for the national guilt; so was there no time, and no generation, so fit for its execution, as those of which our Lord here spake. In this therefore his last warning to the Jewish rulers, He reminds them how many times He had endeavoured to reclaim them from their sins; how earnestly He had desired to gather them under his protection, "even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings," and they would not! It was their will to reject his kindness. As it was his to offer, it was theirs to refuse the knowledge of the truth, and of the grace that bringeth salvation. See Titus 2. 11. Thus did they set the will they had received from God, against the will of Him who gave it. And thus did He denounce on them their final desolation; declaring that they should not again see Him, till they should say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." That is, till such time as they should have been so chastened by affliction, as to receive Him with the devotion which they now refused.

In these dealings of the Almighty with the Jews, we are instructed as to the method in which He has thought fit to try the will of all mankind. He sends prophets, and wise men, and scribes. He enlightens all in different degrees, either with the faint remnant of tradition, by which the heathen are informed that there is a God; or by the full light of revelation, as it shines in a Christian land. All then have some means of knowing God, and knowing somewhat of his will, and reckoning on some kind of judgment hereafter. According to the use of the means each enjoys, must each expect his future sentence to be pronounced. On the Jews it depended whether they would or would not, on us also ourselves whether we will or will not, be gathered together unto the fold of Christ. Nothing stands between heaven and the worst of sinners, but their own wilfulness. And nothing can more aggravate their sin than to have persecuted and slain the witnesses of the truth, to have opposed them, and rejected their friendly counsel. The desolation of the Jews' city, and their dispersion at this very day amongst all nations, these are fearful warnings of the certainty and severity of divine retribution.

Let us then choose of our ourselves the better part; and pray God to give us grace that we may choose effectually, and joyfully receive the glad tidings of salvation. Let us not wait to be chastened with affliction. But let us say, whilst we have time, and health, and strength, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Daily does He now endeavour to gather us, as his children, together; to save us from all evil, to confirm and strengthen us in all good. Let it not be true of us that we would not. Let not us reject his inspired teachers, by neglecting the doctrines, or the duties they have recorded in the Scriptures for our direction. In these words He thus invites us to take shelter under the wings of his redeeming love. James 4. 8, 9. "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded." And again, ver. 10, "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up." Thus it is that He offers to save us; not by works of righteousness of our own, but through faith in his most precious blood. Let us then believe, believe in Him, that He is mighty to save. Sensible of our own utter unworthiness, let us cast on Him all our care: lay before Him all our burden; and seek from Him all our strength. Sensible of his great mercy in thus saving us, let us conform our will to his; give Him our whole heart; give up to his service our whole life; and say joyfully, even when death shall come, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Christ prophesieth the destruction of the temple.

1 And ¹ Jesus went out, and departed from the temple: and his disciples came to him for to shew him the buildings of the temple.

2 And Jesus said unto them, See ye not all these things? verily I say unto you, ² There shall not be left here one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 And as he sat upon the mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?

4 And Jesus answered and said unto them, ³ Take heed that no man deceive you.

5 For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ: and shall deceive many.

6 And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all these things must come to pass, but the end is not yet.

7 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places.

8 All these are the beginning of sorrows.

9 ⁴ Then shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you: and ye shall be hated of all nations for my name's sake.

10 And then shall many be offended, and shall betray one another, and shall hate one another.

11 And many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many.

12 And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold.

13 But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

14 And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come.

¹ Mark 13. 1. Luke 21. 5.

² Luke 19. 44.

³ Ch. 10. 17. Luke 21. 12. John 16. 2.

§ 88. That we have encouragement to endure unto the end.

It is known from history that the temple of Jerusalem was built of remarkably large stones. And this made it the more improbable that it should be ever utterly thrown down. And the more this was improbable beforehand, the more certain we may be, that none but God could foresee how soon there should be not one stone left upon another. Which thing took place within the life of man from the time these words were uttered. The disciples, astonished at the prophecy, ask next of Jesus, "When shall these things be?" They had many times heard Him speak of his coming again. They trusted that He would then fulfil their views of worldly glory. And they ask therefore, without well knowing of what they spake, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"

The answer here given applies to both parts of this question; both to our Lord's first coming to punish the Jews, and to his second coming to judge all mankind at the end of the world. For the dealings of God with that single nation are meant throughout for a lesson to the rest of mankind. And the signs of the destruction of their city and temple are, in this prophecy, in such manner set down, as that by their fulfilment we should be warned of the approaching destruction of the world.

Thus the disciples were told, that before Jerusalem was destroyed, there would be wars, and rumours of wars, and famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. This we know from history did in fact take place, about the time here signified. Nor is it less certain that Christians in that early season were hated of all nations, persecuted, and put to death for the sake of the name of Christ. Many also were offended, that is, induced to fall from the truth. Many betrayed also one another; were led astray by false prophets: and had their love made cold by the iniquity of the world. These things we know took place, while the Gospel was being preached to all nations; between the time when these words were spoken, and the time when Jerusalem was destroyed. Nor let us doubt that they have again taken place, are taking place, and will take place, over the whole world, in these last times; as signs of the second coming of Christ to judgment. Let us see too, when they do take place, that our hearts be not troubled. Let us be at peace with ourselves, because at peace with God, in the midst of tumults, confusion, and distress. Let us be fearless of affliction, because willing to be afflicted, for Christ's sake; fearless of death, because willing, for his sake, to die. And notwithstanding the iniquity that abounds, let us continue not only patient in well doing, but persevering also in love, and in the work of love to all around us, for the sake of our blessed Lord, until the end.

How near may be the end for which we look, it was not his purpose here to reveal. Only He has set forth such signs of its approach as might put all generations on the watch for its arrival. In our own times these signs do more than ever demand our attention. Never have there been made such active exertions for preaching "in all the world," as "a witness unto all nations," "the gospel of the kingdom" of Christ. Never has iniquity more abounded. Never have there been more grievous instances of the love of many waxing cold. We see enough then, in the present state of things, to excite us to persevere unto the end; enough to encourage us, in the cheerful hope, that this end is not far off. For that coming of Christ let us daily watch, as though it were close at hand. And yet wait also for it, patiently; however long it may be delayed. God will in his good time fulfil his word of truth. And, surely as we have now wars, and pestilence, false prophets, and abundance of iniquity; so surely will there be an end, an end of evil; and he that shall endure unto it, in faith, and love, "the same shall be saved."

Christ warneth his disciples when to flee from Jerusalem.

15 ¹ When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by ² Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth let him understand :) should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened.

16 Then let them which be in Judæa flee into the mountains: 23 ³ Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there; believe it not.

17 Let him which is on the housetop not come down to take any thing out of his house:

18 Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes.

19 And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

20 But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the sabbath day:

21 For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be.

22 And except those days should be shortened, there

24 For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect.

25 Behold, I have told you before.

26 Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not.

27 For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

28 ⁴ For wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together.

¹ Mark 13. 14.

² Dan. 9. 37.

³ Mark 13. 21. Luke 17. 23.

⁴ Luke 17. 37.

§ 89. That we should flee from sin to escape the wrath to come.

In what our Lord here says of the destruction of Jerusalem, He points plainly to his last coming to judge the world. First, He bids his disciples be sure to fly out of the city, as soon as they should see in the holy place, or near to the temple and the mount on which it stood, the abomination of desolation, which here means the Roman army. For by that army was the city made desolate. And the Romans were the people of whom Daniel had long before prophesied, that their empire, succeeding three others, should "devour the whole earth," and "tread it down, and break it in pieces." Dan. 7. 23. Under the power of this nation the Jews were now reduced; but they were ready at any time to rebel, out of confidence in the great strength of their city. The first counsel therefore here given to the disciples is to flee into the mountains. They were to tarry for no business however urgent. They were to pray against all natural hindrances of rapid flight. They were to pray that their flight might not befall them in the winter, when they could less easily put up with its hardships; nor on the sabbath day, when, by journeying, they would break its appointed rest, and lose the spiritual consolation which the ordinance is designed ever to afford.

And further to urge their flight, they are informed that such tribulation should then take place in the devoted city, as never had yet been "since the beginning of the world." In agreement with which prophecy, the historian of the Jews has thus described the sufferings of his countrymen: "If the misfortunes of all from the beginning of the world were compared with those of the Jews, they would appear to be much inferior." (Josephus.) "But for the elect's sake," adds our Lord, "those days shall be shortened." That is, for the sake of the devout Christians, as well those who remained in the city, as those who were suffering by their sojourn in the mountains; for the sake also of that remnant of the Jews, of whom many will hereafter become Christians. And this is a mercy which will help also, we hope, to mitigate the like sufferings that are to come upon the earth, before the great and terrible day of the Lord. He, who for ten righteous' sake would have spared a whole city, see Gen. 18. 32, does, many times, when we little think it, make short the chastisements of the world, and especially will do so ere his last coming, for the sake of the faithful who dwell therein. How then should it add life to our faith, and fervour to our devotion, to think that for our sakes, if faithful and devout, "those days shall be shortened!"

In the second place, our Lord here bids his disciples not to believe any false rumours of Christ being come, such as were common in Jerusalem at the time of the siege. Like to these are the accounts we hear amongst ourselves, of pretenders to prophecy or miracles, and of persons who set up to be the messengers of Messiah. More, probably, and more plausible instances of imposture and self-deceit, will make their appearance before the end be fully come. But to none of these must we listen; to no vain questionable rumour that "here is Christ." His coming will be sudden and manifest, as the lightning which by a single flash is seen, from one end of heaven to the other. And with Him will be assembled the heavenly host, in speed and power like to eagles; gathering round the earth, which, as an useless carcase, shall then perish "in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb." Rev. 14. 10.

"Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons," as St. Peter asks, 2 Pet. 3. 11, "ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness?" Ought we to be fond of a world thus sure to perish, or "looking for and hasting unto," as this apostle tells us, "the coming of the day of God?" What we ought to be, we can scarce fail to know; so far at least as to know that we are what we ought not. Let us lay to heart, as a strong motive for our practice, this sure coming of Christ to judgment. Let us flee from the wicked practices of the world, as from a city devoted to desolation. And whenever we are pressed by the temptation that doth most easily beset us, let us think how all loathsome sin will seem, when our Lord shall shine forth like the lightning in the heavens, suddenly, fearfully, gloriously.

Christ prophesieth of his coming to judge the world.

29 Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken :

30 And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven ; and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

31 And he shall send his angels with a great sound of trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

32 Now learn a parable of the fig tree ; When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh :

33 So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors.

34 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled.

35 Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away.

36 But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.

37 But as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

38 For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark,

39 And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away ; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.

40 Then shall two be in the field ; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

41 Two women shall be grinding at the mill ; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

¹ Mark 13. 24. Luke 21. 25. Is. 13. 10. Joel 2. 31. Ezek. 32. 7.
² Or, with a trumpet and a great voice.

³ Mark 13. 31.

⁴ Rev. 1. 7.

⁵ Gen. 7. 5. Luke 17. 26.

⁶ 1 Cor. 15. 52. 1 Thess. 4. 16.

⁷ Luke 17. 36.

§ 90. That the last judgment is sure, and will be soon, and sudden.

This prophecy, as it draws towards a close, points almost entirely to that coming of Christ at the end of the world, in which we are all most deeply concerned. Of that awful advent we cannot possibly know more than what God has been pleased in his word to reveal. Nor has He told us these particulars by way of satisfying our vain curiosity ; but in order to raise in us a wholesome fear, and continual watchfulness. The sun shall “ be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light.” These, and other like circumstances here mentioned, shew that the frame of nature will be utterly dissolved by a sudden and visible convulsion ; so that what now we see, and hear, and feel, we shall feel and hear and see no more. “ And then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven.” Some signal manifestation of his presence shall be displayed to all mankind ; some such glory will fill all earth and heaven, as shone in a small space around St. Paul, see Acts 9. 3, at the time of his conversion. “ And then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn.” They shall mourn for sin, and out of fear of punishment. “ And they shall see the Son of man coming.” “ Every eye,” as St. John writes in the Revelation, Rev. 1. 7, “ every eye shall see him ; and they also which pierced him.” Then shall we need no exhortation to mourn, when we behold his sign, when we see Himself. But we shall own ourselves, even those who least seem to sin, we shall own ourselves with shame and confusion of face to have been guilty of piercing Christ. “ And he shall send his angels,” the spirits who minister to his will. “ And they shall gather together his elect,” all from every quarter of the world, who through grace believe heartily, love sincerely, and diligently obey.

And now observe how the certainty of this coming of Christ is pressed on our attention. As by the putting forth of fresh-leaves in a tree we know that summer is nigh, so by the first part of this prophecy being fulfilled, we may tell that the rest will surely follow. Surely then as Jerusalem was made desolate, surely as the people of the Jews have, ever since its desolation, been scattered throughout the earth, so surely “ the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.” 2 Pet. 3. 10. And not surely only, but speedily, as God counts speed. For, “ this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled.” This generation, that is, this race of human kind. Short-lived as man is, and short as must needs be the permitted existence of all his sinful family, yet shall they not altogether be cut off, before all these signs have been fulfilled. Cut off they shall all be at last, and with them the very heavens and the earth, in which, and under which, they abide. However sure we deem this universe we inhabit, these surrounding objects of sense ; the word of Christ is still more sure, that word which has pronounced of heaven and earth, that they “ shall pass away.”

“ But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only.” That is to say, God hath not revealed to any one, at what time Christ will come to judgment. So that men will be as they were in the days of Noah, occupied in the common business and enjoyments of life. How much the more therefore should we labour and pray, that we may be in these things always influenced by Christian grace ; that in our business we may be not slothful, but “ fervent in spirit ; serving the Lord,” Rom. 12. 11 ; that in our enjoyments we may be sober, heavenly minded, rejoicing “ in the Lord alway.” Phil. 4. 4. And whereas we are here further told that out of two in the same field, or at the same mill, “ the one shall be taken and the other left,” this is to shew us, that God will in that day be no respecter of persons ; but that, in every condition and occupation of life, some will be saved and some be lost. Let us then in no case complain of our own lot. Whatever may be its inconvenience, however difficult or painful may be our portion for a time ; it is as likely as the most agreeable we could devise, to prove, through God’s good gift, our road to heaven, our way to enter into eternal life.

The good man of the house and the servants.

42 ¹ Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

43 ² But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up.

44 Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.

45 ³ Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household to give them meat in due season?

46 Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

47 Verily I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods.

48 But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming;

49 And shall begin to smite his fellowservants, and to eat and drink with the drunken;

50 The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of,

51 And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

¹ Mark 13. 35.

² Luke 12. 39. 1 Thess. 5. 2. Rev. 16. 15.

³ Luke 12. 42.

|| Or, cut him off.

§ 91. That we should be ever on the watch for death and judgment.

“Watch therefore” is the great practical lesson with which our Lord concludes the prophecy of his coming to judgment. “Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.” The duty is difficult. But the reason is plain. If we know not when He is to come, how but by continual watchfulness can we be ready for Him? If indeed we could know the exact time, and could be sure also of preparing just beforehand, it might be soon enough to prepare as the time approached. And so also if the good man of the house, in this parable, had known in what watch, that is, at what time of night, the thief would come, he would have watched, that is, would have taken care to be awake, would have been on his guard at that time. But as he did not know, his house was broken into; for he neglected, as it seems, the only safe way left for him, to watch, or be on his guard, all night.

This then is the kind of watching our Lord urges upon us. “Therefore be ye also ready.” Ready, not merely at one particular time, but ready at all times. “For in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh.” Not only we do not know when He will come; but He cometh, at an hour when we think He will not. When men most reckon on this world’s enduring, then shall it on a sudden cease to exist. When we, for ourselves, most count on youth, or health, or strength, then shall we be overtaken, and if we watch not, be overtaken unprepared, by death and judgment. If therefore, merely by being on his guard, the master of the house might have preserved his property from thieves, much more let us be ever on the watch for Him, who cometh, in such an hour as we think not, either to give us the riches of his mercy, or to cut us off from their enjoyment for ever.

“Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season?” To all of us hath God given some charge. All hath He made stewards of some gift, which we are to exercise according to his own commands. Which then of us is a faithful and wise servant, wise because faithful, and faithful so as to obey his will? “Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.” That is to say, when He thus cometh unawares. For no servant, whether good or evil, would fail to put all things right, if he knew just when his master would return. And it is because this coming of Christ is uncertain, therefore it is that we are tempted to say in our hearts, “My lord delayeth his coming.” Hence it is that men are emboldened to continue in sin. Hence they begin to smite their fellowservants, that is, to be oppressive, or cruel, or cross, to each other. Hence they eat and drink with the drunken; that is, they eat more than they want, or drink more than they ought; they consume unthankfully on their lusts what they should use with temperance, or should save for the sake of those who need. And still they say to themselves, I may sin this once more, and yet have time to repent. I may persist in anger, pride, or covetousness, in waste, idleness, or sensuality; all this I may yet a little longer indulge in, for “my Lord delayeth his coming.” But what, if whilst thus we reason, our Lord should, as here He warns us, come in a day when we look not for Him? What if some sudden disease or accident cut off in a few hours the presumptuous sinner? What if in a more protracted illness, he have no ease of body, no rest for thought, or for repentance? What if old age, as it creeps slowly on, should encourage, by continuance of health, the same evil thought of the heart, “My Lord delayeth his coming?” And observe, it is especially in such cases as these, it is “but and if” the evil servant say this very thing in his heart, it is to him who thus presumes, and it is because he thus presumes, “the Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder.” Presume not therefore on delay; for the more you so presume, the more are you likely to be taken unawares. Presume not on delay; but watch. Act, each hour, as if you were indeed watching. Give to every one their “meat in due season.” Whether it be service, or counsel, or help, or forgiveness, or kind words, or charitable thoughts; give to each, do to each, as your Lord has bidden you; and as you would wish to have been doing, this very hour, if in the next He were to summon you, by death to judgment.

The parable of the ten virgins.

1 Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom.

2 And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.

3 They that were foolish took their lamps, and took no oil with them :

4 But the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps.

5 While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept.

6 And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh ; go ye out to meet him.

7 Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps.

8 And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil ; for our lamps are gone out.

9 But the wise answered, saying, Not so ; lest there be not enough for us and you : but go ye rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves.

10 And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came ; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage : and the door was shut.

11 Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us.

12 But he answered, and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not.

13 ¹ Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

|| Or, going out.

¹ Ch. 24. 42. Mark 13. 33.

§ 92. How we may have oil in our lamps.

The duty of watchfulness so urgently recommended at the close of the last chapter, is here further enforced by a parable. Virgins are mentioned, because their attendance was customary at marriage feasts ; and also because our Lord would warn us that this very state of life, however highly in some respects commended, is liable, like all others, to its share of folly as well as of wisdom, of neglect as well as of watchfulness. "Five of them were wise, and five were foolish." Not that this must be taken for the proportion in the world, or in the visible church, of those who watch for Christ, and those who watch not. Not that we must ever forget that broad is the way that leadeth unto death ; and that narrow is the way of life, "and few there be that find it." Matt. 7. 13, 14. The wisdom of the wise virgins was shewn in taking oil in their vessels with their lamps, that is, in having forethought for the future, in providing "while it is called To-day," Heb. 3. 13, against the night "when no man can work." John 9. 4. "While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept." This did the wise as well as the foolish ; signifying, both how liable the most watchful are to be overtaken for a while by forgetfulness of God, and how sure also are all to sleep, when this life ends, the appointed sleep of death. This then is the season for providing oil for our lamps, if we would then have them bright ; if, when we shall arise from the dead, we would be prepared to meet the bridegroom. For if in death we sleep, how deep is that sleep ! how short will it appear, how but for a moment, the twinkling of an eye ! How in an instant will the judgment seem close after death ! How soon, if life be here uncertain, how suddenly may we reckon to hear the cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh."

What an useless thing is a lamp without oil ! What a wretched object is a soul without grace ! What a miserable creature is that man, who, when this life ends, and the next begins, has no faith in God's mercy through Christ, no sense of his love, no experience of his strength made perfect in weakness. See 2 Cor. 12. 9. What will be then, what is now, the use of asking from each other that oil, whereof no one can ever have enough for himself ? In vain should we go to those who make pretence of selling, what no price can purchase, save the blood of Christ. The saving of the soul is his work, and his gift. It is given through faith to them who love Him. The grace to believe, and love, and serve, we must ask, not of each other, but of the heavenly Bridegroom. And here we are well warned, that an hour is at hand, when no prayer can be heard, no exertion aided, no application, however urgent, receive other than this answer, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not."

Would we then escape that fearful sentence ? Would we be not shut out from that marriage of divine love, wherein Christ is united to his church, and man made one with his Maker ? Let us now take the utmost pains to make our calling and election sure. See 2 Pet. 1. 10. Let us learn from God's word, the true tenour of his will, the way He hath ordained for eternal life, the oil which will abide and give light hereafter, when "the bridegroom cometh." Not that it is which others can supply ; as some have vainly taught, that one man's good works can be imputed to his neighbour. Nor is it what can in any way be bought with money, as the same corrupt church has made many to believe. No, we are to take oil in our own lamps, ourselves. And yet not we, but God that giveth all things for our good, He it is who maketh our light to shine. To Him then let us apply, through Christ, to Him apply with prayer, for grace unto holiness, for faith unto salvation. These blessings we must ask of God, as his to give ; we must thank Him for, as his, when given. We must provide them with diligence, improve them with zeal, and especially secure them by watchfulness. And thus whilst here we wait for Christ, our sleep shall be not sloth but heavenly peace. And at whatsoever hour our Lord may come, we shall go in with Him unto the marriage, and our joy shall be full.

The first part of the parable of the talents.

14 ¹ For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods.

15 And^u unto one he gave five || talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey.

16 Then he that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made them other five talents.

17 And likewise he that had received two, he also gained other two.

18 But he that had received one went and digged in the earth, and hid his lord's money.

19 After a long time the lord of those servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.

20 And so he that had received five talents came and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliverdest unto me five talents: behold, I have gained beside them five talents more.

21 His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

22 He also that had received two talents, came and said, Lord, thou deliverdest unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beside them.

23 His lord said unto him, Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord.

¹ Luke 19. 12.

|| A talent is 187l. 10s. Ch. 18. 24.

§ 93. That our improvement must bear proportion to grace received.

The parable, of which a portion has now been read, represents to us the kingdom of heaven as it will be settled at the coming of Christ to judgment. The great lessons we may hence derive are these following:

First, that, as the lord of these servants came certainly at the last, though not till “after a long time:” so the judgment of Christ, however distant it may seem, will one day be most surely present. And therefore it is represented as at hand to all succeeding generations; the time between being short as far as mankind are concerned; see 1 Cor. 7. 29; and being as nothing in respect of God, with whom one day is “as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day.” 2 Pet. 3. 8. Never then let us listen to, much less ask in our own hearts, the question familiar with the scoffer, “Where is the promise of his coming?” 2 Pet. 3. 4. Though it may seem to us “after a long time,” though it may in Scripture be said to be so, out of condescension to our weak thoughts, yet are we no less plainly told, that “the Lord is not slack concerning his promise, as some men count slackness; but is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.” 2 Peter 3. 9. The servants have time to improve their talents. They have time to do right. They have time to repent of what they do wrong. They have time to serve the Lord with diligence. But they have no time to lose in sloth or negligence. They have time to work. But they have no time to waste. They have time to believe and to obey. But they have no time to sin.

Secondly, we learn that God dispenses gifts and trials “to every man according to his several ability.” He, and He only can be aware, which of us may best be instructed with health or wealth, long life or excellent capacity; and which may be better tried in affliction, in sickness, in ignorance, or in want. He bestows, according to his wisdom and goodness, the means and opportunities, the station, abilities, and requirements, which distinguish one man's portion from another's. Let each of us be content with what we have; not doubting, in any single instance, that it is in mercy allotted to our share. And instead of fancying we could do better with some other talent, let us diligently improve what God hath placed in our charge.

Thirdly, we should be hence made aware that we are to receive our sentence, not according to the amount of excellency actually attained, but according to our use of the talents given to us, whether many or few, whether great or small. To have been diligent in the improvement of what we have, though little; to have been faithful over “a few things,” will ensure, no less than to have been faithful over many things, will ensure that praise above all price, “Well done, good and faithful servant.” Never then let us judge favourably of ourselves, merely because we know others whose ~~down~~ward conduct is worse than our own, and whose case may therefore seem to be more desperate. Though we could count their talents, which is beyond our power, yet still less can we count their diligence or sloth; we know not, and have no means of knowing, whether they have, or have not, laboured more than ourselves, to resist temptation, or to advance in holiness. Let us consider instead each thus in his own case: How much have I received myself? What instruction from parents or teachers, what opportunities of knowing and serving God, what divine assistance have I experienced? What longsuffering and forbearance have I met with from that Holy Spirit, who will not “always strive with man?” Gen. 6. 3. These things if we well weigh, we shall find too much to condemn in ourselves, for us to think ever of finding fault with our neighbours. We shall become convinced of sin, and that deeply, though we have received only a single talent, if we find that we have been hiding it in the earth, not improving it to the glory of God.

The parable of the talents concluded.

24 Then he which had received the one talent came and said, Lord, I knew thee that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strawed:

25 And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou hast that is thine.

26 His lord answered and said unto him, Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not, and gather where I have not strawed:

27 Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I should have received mine own with usury.

28 Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents.

29 For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath.

30 And cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

¹ Ch. 13. 12. Mark 4. 25. Luke 8. 18.

§ 94. That to be slothful is to be wicked.

In this latter part of the parable of the talents, we see plainly, that the more a man excuses himself in sin, the more does he stand condemned before God. "He that had received the one talent" first pleaded that he knew his master to be a hard man, then, that he was afraid, and in the third place, that he had got and could restore what had been given him. "Lo, there thou hast that is thine." Many, it is to be feared, cherish, by way of palliating their sins, some such hard thoughts of God as these. I have no strength, they say within themselves, to resist temptation; I have no heart to continue patient in well doing; my burden, the burden of the flesh with its lusts, the burden of the world with its vanities, the burden of Satan with his wiles, my burden is greater than I can bear. God cannot surely, they presumptuously conclude, cannot consistently with his goodness, require an obedience which is thus impossible. Let such self deceivers lay to heart this answer: "Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou knewest that I reap where I sowed not;" according to your own thoughts of God this obedience is required: "thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers." The more you reckon to have exacted of you, the more ought you in common prudence to exert yourselves, to make the most of the means you have; the more if you neglect to do so, the more are you in your neglect inexcusable.

The second plea of the slothful servant is fear: "I was afraid." There is a fear which is salutary, which leads to love, and constrains us to obey. There is a fear which is servile, slothful, near akin to hatred and despair. Than this latter there is no case more perilous, no passion more to be subdued, no temper more repugnant to Christian meekness and Christian grace. Never let us plead fear in neglect of duty. Never let us so fear as to disobey. Never let us so fear as to do that which is mean, or to leave undone that which is right. Never let us fear to speak the truth. Never let us fear to defend or to help our neighbour. Never let us fear to resist the devil, or to renounce the world. Never let us fear to encounter harm, where God requires, for the sake of what He deems good.

Thirdly, let us never dare to say, let us never dare to think in respect of God, "Lo, there thou hast that is thine." What have we that He has not given us? And what is there, of all that He hath given, that we have not deformed or defiled? In his own image made He us. And we by sin have lost it! Health He giveth us; and we injure it by carelessness, or excess! Time; and we waste it! Grace; and we resist it! The Comforter He sendeth: and we grieve Him! His Son He sent to die for us on the cross. And by our sins we crucify Him afresh!

And here, fourthly, observe, that to abstain from gross evil, nay, from all evil whatsoever, is far from enough service, nay, is counted for no service at all. To be no worse than when we came into the world, to have done no great violence, or wrong, or scandal, to be innocent of drunkenness, or dishonesty, of murder or adultery, tempts many perhaps to say, "There thou hast that is thine." But if meantime we have been hiding our talent in the earth, if we have made no progress in holiness and love, this excuse will only expose us to the severe rebuke, "Thou wicked and slothful servant." In our Christian calling, to be slothful is to be wicked. To have improved in nothing is the way to have taken from us that which we have. If nothing we have profited ourselves, nothing of what God hath given will be set down in our favour. But "unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance;" here abundance of God's grace, hereafter of God's glory. Here shall the good gifts of the Spirit be more and more largely, each day, shed abroad in the hearts of those who most profit by them. Hereafter shall be theirs the more exalted praise, the mansions of bliss more high, and a share the more abundant in the joy of their Lord.

Make us, blessed Lord, contented with the talent Thou hast given us, with the state of life and light to which thou hast been pleased to call us! Help us to be faithful over what things we have; not to despise those who have fewer, nor to envy those who have more; but to stir up, and improve to the uttermost, the gift that is in ourselves!

Christ declareth who shall be blessed of the Father.

31 When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory :

32 And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats :

33 And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

34 Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world :

35 ¹ For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in :

36 Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

37 Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

38 When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

39 Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee?

40 And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

¹ Isaiah 58. 7. Ezek. 18. 7.

§ 95. That we should do all things as doing them unto Christ.

Our Lord, in what goes before, has described the manner of his coming to judge the world. He has declared in one parable, by way of motive to our watchfulness, how surely He will take us unawares. By another He has explained the equitable rule on which his judgment will proceed. He now urges, in conclusion of the whole, a consideration most important in the practice of our lives, that our conduct will in every thing be estimated by a reference of our motives to Himself. The duty He would here enjoin is exactly what the apostle, writing afterwards to the Colossians, 3. 17, thus plainly expressed; "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." And, that He may engage us the more warmly in this view of our duty, Christ applies it in this instance to a matter of universal interest, the relief of each other's wants. And thus at the same time He recommends in the most lively manner, that charity, which, in its extended sense, is the chief new commandment of the Gospel. See John 13. 34.

How fearful is the separation here described us to take place "when the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with Him!" How alarming the thought, that different as is the right hand from the left, distant as are heaven and hell, so distant, so different from each other, are the places to one of which we shall be severally consigned. Here indeed grow together the tares and the wheat. Here they who oppress, and they who relieve, they who hate, and they who love, they who set at nought the love of Christ, and they who in all things remember Him, all these are in this world mingled together, the evil and the good. But on that day we shall be separated. And God only knows on which side we shall each be placed. We shall be separated "one from another." "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Great will be the surprise, as well as the joy, of those humble Christians, who will then be exalted to glory. "Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, and fed thee; or thirsty, and gave thee drink?" They count not that they have done aught of acceptable service. They are conscious that in many things they have done wrong, in many things failed to do right. And especially in the ministering to the necessities of others, they are aware that they have too little thought of doing it unto Christ. Yet doth He of his mercy pronounce, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." He accepts the imperfect service, and by the praise He gives it, points out to us the perfection He would have us aim at. He counts done unto Himself what is done unto the poor; that He may teach us, in all we do of good, to them and to all, to do it unto Him.

Here then we have the most urgent of motives, the most excellent of rules, not only for feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, but for every part of Christian kindness, for every particular of social duty. Are we called upon to give? It is Christ who begs of us. Have we occasion to forbear, or to forgive? It is unto Him that we must exercise these good tempers. Are we required to labour? let us labour unto the Lord. To suffer? let us suffer as with Christ. To love? let our good will extend, like his, towards all mankind, and be directed, for his sake, to their eternal welfare. See what a feeling He vouchsafes to own for our infirmities! See how He hungers with them that hunger, and thirsts with them that thirst! See how He counts Himself to be naked, and sick, and in prison, for every one who thus suffers, out of those whom He calls his brethren! Let us learn from his example to "weep with them that weep." Rom. 12. 15. Let us in these affections of our brethren, feel as for ourselves. Not as for ourselves only, let us feel, but as for Christ. For thus hath He in our behalf not felt only, but lived, and laid down also his life on the cross. And thus may we for his sake, if thus we love and help each other, be counted among the righteous, and inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world.

Christ declareth who shall be hereafter cursed.

41 Then shall he say also unto them on the left hand, 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels:

42 For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink:

43 I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not.

44 Then shall they also answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?

45 Then shall he answer them, saying, Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me.

46 And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.

¹ Psalm 6. 8. Ch. 7. 23.

² Dan. 12. 2. John 5. 29.

§ 96. That we should love each other for Christ's sake and for our own.

The righteous were above described as unconscious of the service Christ reckons them to have done unto Himself. This arises from their humility. The wicked too are not aware that they had refused Christ their services. This comes of their ignorance and pride. To do good, and to think nothing of it, is the way to enter into the joy of our Lord. To refuse to do good, or to do evil, and think nothing of it, to sin, and not know ourselves to be sinners, this would fit us to be placed by the King on the left hand, and to hear his words of wrath, "Depart from me, ye cursed." He saith not here, as He said to the righteous, "ye blessed of my Father," He saith not here, ye cursed of my Father. For though the blessing of the righteous be of God, the curse of the wicked is of themselves. The righteous are counted to be so through faith, and for the sake of the blood of Christ. Whilst they on the left hand are placed there for their own work's and wickedness' sake.

And now observe what works of wickedness are here mentioned. Are they only what we reckon gross sins that are shewn to expose men to "everlasting punishment?" Far from it. They are what many men, who are respected by the world, are committing all their lives long! They are such as giving no meat to the hungry, and no drink to them that are athirst; entertaining no strangers, clothing not them that are naked, and not visiting the prisoners, or the sick. These are duties which many commonly neglect, as being irksome, and not necessary to ensure the good esteem of their neighbours. So they can but pass for honest and true, goodnatured and honourable, they care not to be bountiful, to labour in well doing, they care not to give up, for Christ's sake, their time and thoughts, to alleviating the sufferings of mankind. And all the while they are not aware that it is Christ's work, and Christ's Self, that they are neglecting. They answer to his charge, as if no harm were done; "When saw we thee an hungred, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto thee?" They have yet to learn this rule of Gospel judgment; "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." If then we, being Christians, refuse any good that our hand findeth to do, it is Christ whom we are counted to refuse. If we wilfully refuse to do good, we may reckon on receiving the same sentence of wrath, with those who wilfully do evil. If the misery which is in the world through sin, raise in us no anxious concern, how slight must be our love for Christ, whose most precious blood it cost! If we endeavour not according to our ability to relieve each other's bodily wants, if we aim not to feed also with spiritual knowledge the hungry soul, to set free them that are bound of Satan, and to visit with healing counsel the sick in trespasses and sins; how lightly must we esteem the example of Him, who "went about doing good," Acts 10. 38, and who has left it us for his new commandment, that we should love one another! See John 13. 34. And forcibly does our Lord enjoin that we should do so out of love to Him. And for this end we have abundantly set forth in the Gospel the riches of his mercy and grace. "Greater love," it is said, "hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." John 15. 13. This love had Christ for us. Love like to this we ought to feel for Him, and to feel, for his sake, towards each other. But if we hesitate, He would move us unto faith and holiness, by what few are found deficient in, the love of ourselves. "These," saith He, speaking of those who love not, "these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal." Have we then any desire of heaven? Have we any fear of hell? Do we dread the "everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels?" Would we wish to inherit the "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world?" One way only there is thereto; and that is, to be righteous. One means only to be righteous; and that is, to believe. One way only to believe, and that is, so as to love; to love, because Christ first loved us, and gave Himself for us unto death. This is to be righteous through faith in Christ. This is to have that faith which is not dead, but living. And they only who so believe, so love, and live unto Christ, shall go away into life eternal.

God quicken in us daily that faith which both "worketh by love," Gal. 5. 6, and which hath "respect also unto the recompense of the reward!" Heb. 11. 26. God make us daily mindful, as we work, that when we have done all, "we are unprofitable servants!" Luke 17. 10. God teach us that our reward, if reward we shall obtain, is not ours, but his who saith, "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be!" Rev. 22. 12.

The rulers conspire against Christ. A woman anointeth his head.

1 And it came to pass, when Jesus had finished all these sayings, he said unto his disciples,

2 'Ye know that after two days is the feast of the passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified.

3 'Then assembled together the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high priest, who was called Caiaphas,

4 And consulted that they might take Jesus by subtilty, and kill him.

5 But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar among the people.

6 'Now when Jesus was in Bethany, in the house of Simon the leper,

7 There came unto him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he sat at meat.

8 But when his disciples saw it, they had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste?

9 For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor.

10 When Jesus understood it, he said unto them. Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me.

11 'For ye have the poor always with you; but me ye have not always.

12 For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial.

13 Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

¹ Mark 14. 1. Luke 22. 1. John 13. 1.

² John 11. 47.

³ Mark 14. 3. John 11. 1.

⁴ Deut. 15. 11.

§ 97. That we cannot spend too much in the honouring of Christ.

"When Jesus had finished all these sayings," that is, his account of the day of judgment, He next reminded his disciples that the passover was near at hand, and told them of Himself that He was betrayed to be crucified. He was, as St. Paul declares, 1 Cor. 5. 7, "our Passover;" He was "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. 13. 8. And when the day of our visitation shall arrive, it is only through his blood that we may escape the wrath to come. However highly the preceding discourse may set the importance of good works, this mention following of Christ's death on the cross reminds us, that no charity of ours, no diligence in the improvement of our talents, no watchfulness, however anxious, will avail, except through the atonement of his blood.

Whilst our Lord was foreshewing his death to the disciples, his enemies, at the palace of the high priest, were consulting how best to compass it. This they chose to do, not by force, but by subtilty. And in like manner, for fear of the people, they settled not to do it during the feast. Yet on the very day they meant not, was Jesus, through their means, led forth to die; on the very day when the paschal lamb was slain. So vain is it for man to purpose, where God has ordered otherwise for good, so vain for man to purpose evil. Only in their subtilty they were allowed to prosper. For what they had in hand was Satan's work; and he is, as our Lord describes him, "a liar, and the father of it." John 8. 44. Let us remember then that our enemy desires to take us by subtilty. Let us know, that we have the most need to fear when least we see sign of danger. Let us not only watch against presumptuous sins, but search out also, if possible, our most secret faults, lest these and their iniquity should be our ruin. See Psalm 19. 12, 13.

The plot is laid. The victim is aware of his approaching end. And now, whilst yet He lives, He is anointed ready for his burial. "There came unto him a woman having an alabaster box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he sat at meat." How lively was her faith in Christ, in Christ apprehended as dead! How great her zeal to count all things, all things to her most precious, but loss for his sake! "It might have been sold for much." Much therefore was its cost to her who gave it. And the disciples who understood not her intent, and Judas, who "was a thief, and had the bag, and bare what was put therein," John 12. 6; these, "when they saw it, had indignation, saying, To what purpose is this waste? For this ointment might have been sold for much, and given to the poor." Our Lord bids them not trouble the woman, and tells them it was a good work that she had wrought. He then adds, "Ye have the poor always with you, but me ye have not always." That is to say, He was soon to be taken away "out of their sight," Acts 1. 9, and the poor would remain among Christians, to be objects of bounty to the rest, as long as the world should last. "For in that she hath poured this ointment on my body she did it for my burial." Aware of the malice of my enemies, and expecting that they will put me to death, she hath done a work which is most seasonable for my burial, so soon to take place. Therefore, instead of blame, let her receive abundant praise. "Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her."

Signally is this prophecy at this moment fulfilled. And plainly should this signify to us, that whatsoever we can spend for the honouring of Christ will be sure to redound to our endless praise. The thoughtless may count it waste. The covetous may grudge the bounty which they may not share, and will not practise. But though it were our whole substance that we have to offer to our Lord, the instance of this woman may suffice to convince us, that we shall in no wise lose our reward.

Christ eateth the passover with his disciples.

14 'Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iscariot, went unto the chief priests,

15 And said unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of silver.

16 And from that time he sought opportunity to betray him.

17 'Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover?

18 And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him, The Master saith, My time is at hand; I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples.

19 And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them; and they made ready the passover.

20 'Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve,

21 And as they did eat, he said, Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.

22 And they were exceeding sorrowful, and began every one of them to say unto him, Lord, is it I?

23 And he answered and said, 'He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me.

24 The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but woe unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born.

25 Then Judas, which betrayed him, answered and said, Master, is it I? He said unto him, Thou hast said.

¹ Mark 14. 10. Luke 22. 3.

² Mark 14. 12. Luke 22. 7.

³ Mark 14. 18. Luke 22. 14. John 13. 21.

⁴ Ps. 41. 9.

§ 98. That in the worst of sins, we should distrust ourselves.

It is set down of the traitor that he was "one of the twelve;" as if the apostles were not on this account careful to conceal what might seem to be a disgrace to themselves. So faithfully did they in all instances record the whole history they had to relate. So ready should we be in relating any thing to tell, on due occasions, however injurious to ourselves, the whole truth, as well as nothing but the truth. Judas, it seems, was not enticed to this act by the chief priests; but of his own accord he offered to deliver up to them his Master. And we may remark, that he did this soon after he had been rebuked of Jesus for finding fault with the woman about the ointment. His covetous disposition was thus whetted by what he took for an affront. And what he had probably been long meditating for gain, he resolved at once to put in practice for revenge. If then you have been tempted to entertain either the love of riches, or the desire of vengeance, remember that these were the sins of Judas; these led him, as they will lead you, if you forsake them not, to betray your Saviour Christ. We should observe, too, at what price our Lord was sold; the same in amount as that which was appointed in the book of Exodus, 21. 32, to be paid for a bondservant when killed by cattle. So vile was He esteemed who gave "his life a ransom for many." Matt. 20. 28. So exactly did He take on Him, not "the form" only "of a servant," Phil. 2. 7, but the estimation of a slave.

Preparations are now made by the disciples for celebrating the passover, Christ instructing them at what house they should make it ready. In the midst of the supper He tells them the strange tidings that one of them shall betray Him. "Lord, is it I?" was a question in which they might naturally express their surprise and concern. In this question even Judas joined; willing probably to cover his design with a profession of zeal, that implied his innocence. To the rest Jesus answered, "He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me." By which sign each of them might clearly see that it was Judas who was meant, and not himself. To Judas, when he repeated the inquiry, our Lord answered "Thou hast said;" that is, Thou hast said the truth. In which answer we see that plainness of speech must be preferred, even at the risk of seeming rude, to such civility as is founded on deceit. And in the sign given we have fulfilled the prophecy of the Psalms, 41. 9, "Yea, even mine own familiar friend whom I trusted, who did also eat of my bread, hath laid great wait for me."

The apostles inquired, "every one of them," "Lord, is it I?" though all of them, except one, must have known, that they had no intention to betray their Master. It was no more than due humility, even in case of sin so heinous, to distrust themselves, to apprehend the possibility of transgressing, and to confess this their apprehension to Him who knoweth the heart. "Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." 1 Cor. 10. 12. It is to be hoped that there are many and gross sins, of which our consciences bear witness that we are guiltless. But there are, we know, some persons who thus sin. And their nature, let us remember, is no other than our own. Aware then of our frailty, aware how many things there are that may tempt us to betray our heavenly Lord, let us ask within ourselves each enormity we hear of in the world, "Lord, is it I?" I know not my own heart. I dare not trust it. I presume not to be certain but what I may yet commit this gross offence, and desert the cause of Thee, my Saviour. By thy grace alone, I have hitherto escaped. In thy strength alone, I yet stand upright. And thou only knowest how long. Give me this blessed assurance, that I shall take no part with thy murderers; lest for me also it had been good that I had never been born. Thus may we do well to ask with the disciples, "Lord, is it I?" Our answer we may find in the word of God. For there we are plainly told what persons they are who "crucify the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame." Heb. 6. 6. Let us apply to our own consciences what there we read, as the answer of Christ Himself, And let us pray that we may never deserve for our reply his words to Judas, "Thou hast said."

Christ eateth his last supper, and warneth Peter of his fall.

26 And as they were eating, 'Jesus took bread, and || blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body.

27 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it;

28 For this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

29 But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.

30 And when they had sung an † hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

31 Then saith Jesus unto them, ' All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, ' I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad.

32 But after I am risen again, ' I will go before you into Galilee.

33 Peter answered and said unto him, ' Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended.

34 Jesus said unto him, ' Verily I say unto thee, ' That this night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice.

35 Peter said unto him, ' Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewise also said all the disciples.

1 1 Cor. 11. 24.

|| Many Greek copies have, gave thanks.

2 Zech. 13. 7.

4 Mark 14. 28. & 16. 7.

† Or, psalm.

5 Mark 14. 27. John 16. 32.

6 John 13. 38.

§ 99. That pride goeth before a fall.

It was when they were eating the passover that our Lord appointed the sacrament of his body and blood. He took in a solemn manner some of the bread on the table; and He "blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body." The passover was kept in memory of the Israelites being spared, when the Lord smote all the firstborn of the Egyptians. The lamb appointed to be slain was a figure or representation of Christ, of Christ to be slain for the sins of men. Here our Lord may be considered to say, I ordain a new figure. I appoint that you eat bread as my body, and that in doing so you shall be partakers of the benefit of my death. And in like manner "he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." So that the cup, we see, was for all, as well as the bread; and there can be no doubt that the withholding it from the congregation is a grievous error in that foreign church, which once prevailed in our land. And errors such as this it is important for us to note; because they justify a separation among Christians, which otherwise is much to be regretted, and which, except it be for due cause, is the sin of schism. And we should here note also, that the whole sacrament ought to be regularly received by all Christians who would obtain the "remission of sins" here spoken of. Greatly is it to be deplored, that out of congregations so large as frequent our churches, only few in comparison should be found to attend on this divine ordinance. Let those of us, who are in the habit of attending, both take heed how we receive, and, when we have received, take heed how we behave afterwards. Nothing would so much win others to communion as the manifest growth in Christian grace of those whom they know to communicate. But if they see our lives as careless as before, our conduct as much influenced by the love of the world, our thoughts no less vain, our conversation no less light; can we wonder that they still stay away? Can we doubt, that in staying away, they are confirmed by the ill fruit they find of our attendance?

After instituting this sacrament our Lord adds, "I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom." In which words He seems to speak of what took place after his resurrection. For it was "in breaking of bread," Luke 24. 35, that He was then known or recognised by the apostles. And that breaking of bread was probably no other than a celebrating of this supper both with bread and wine. And this wine He did then drink in a new and strange manner, it being as great a miracle for the body He then had to eat and drink, as for the body He had at first to walk upon the sea. See Matt. 14. 25. And thus doth He in this sacrament still eat and drink anew with us, each time we receive it faithfully; fulfilling to the end of time these his gracious words: "If any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3. 20.

After the supper, when they were gone out to the mount of Olives, our Lord warned the disciples that they should the very same night be offended, that is, made to fall, because of Him; that is, because of his being betrayed, they should desert Him. And being sure of their leaving Him, He tells them where He would meet them when He should have risen from the dead. Peter hereupon answers most positively for himself, as did also the other disciples, "Though I should die with thee, yet will I not deny thee." How utterly he failed to make good this boast is well known to all. Let us note, then, the deceitfulness of the heart. Let us learn how mad is boasting in one so frail as man. Far be it from us either outwardly to boast, or even inwardly to feel sure, that we shall never fall away. We know not how soon the enemy of souls may be suffered to prevail against us. We know not how suddenly the world by its pleasures, the scorner by his laugh, or our own hearts by our own evil passions, may tempt us to forget and deny our Lord. To be proud in our own strength, is the worst of weakness. To boast that we can stand, is the most sure way to stumble. And when we are warned that we are likely to be offended and to fall, let us own our weakness, and have recourse to that strength of God which alone can enable us to stand.

Christ prayeth in agony at Gethsemane.

36 'Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto the disciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder.

37 And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and very heavy.

38 Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me.

39 And he went a little farther, and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt.

40 And he cometh unto the disciples, and findeth them asleep, and saith unto Peter, What, could ye not watch with me one hour?

41 Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

42 He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying, O my Father, if this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done.

43 And he came and found them asleep again: for their eyes were heavy.

44 And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

45 Then cometh he to his disciples, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest: behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

46 Rise, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

¹ Mark 14. 32. Luke 22. 39.

§ 100. How to behave and how to pray when in affliction.

Peter and the two sons of Zebedee were the same disciples who saw the transfiguration on mount Tabor. See Matt. 17. 1. Having been admitted to this glimpse of his glory, they were the more fit to sustain this sad sight of his distress. He bade them therefore watch near Him whilst He prayed. He bade them watch with Him, that is, join in prayer for strength to help in this his time of need. "Yet could not they watch with Him one hour." "He cometh unto his disciples, and findeth them asleep." So hard of attainment is that truly Christian grace, to feel a lively interest in the sorrows of each other! So apt is the human heart to indulge in sloth and indifference, at scenes which would draw tears of anguish from the Saviour of mankind!

In this agony of our Lord, we may see what is meant by "the remembrance of our sins" being "grievous unto us, the burden of them intolerable." (Liturgy.) Such was the burden, such was the remembrance of our sins to Him, who, being Himself without sin, was made sin for us. See 2 Cor. 5. 21. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities." Isaiah 53. 5. And shall not we feel for our own ourselves? Let our sorrow be lively like to his, whose soul was thus for our sakes sorrowful "unto death." Let us mourn for sin as for the worst of evils, as for that which cost Christ his painful end; as for that which, unless we repent, will cost us to die eternally.

Next we have here a pattern of resignation. "It pleased the Lord to bruise him." Isaiah 53. 10. Many afflictions in all probability, and some of them severe, it will please God, ere death, to lay on us. Or, if not, there is death itself, an affliction which no one can escape. Would we then know how best to bear our griefs? Let us study by this pattern in the garden of Gethsemane. There we may see one who was both God and man, one who as man was without spot of sin, visited by sorrow the most severe. Was his soul insensible to the burden of woe? Did the divine nature so uphold the human spirit, as that He could bear without feeling it, the dreadful load? Far from it. His words and outward agony expressed the anguish of his soul. Thrice did He ask with earnest prayer that the cup He had to drink, the death to die, might pass from Him. Yet thrice also did He resign Himself to his Father's will. And thus have we plain proof of how much He suffered, and how patiently He submitted to suffer. Let not us then in our affliction try so much not to feel, as feeling to bear with patience. And not with patience only, but with thanksgiving let us receive the chastisement of God, whensoever by any manner of adversity it shall please Him to visit us.

And let us here learn further how to pray when we are in trouble: "Father, if it be possible." Let us ask of God as of a father, as of one who knoweth both what is possible, and what is good for us, for all. Let us consider how ill we can ourselves judge for ourselves; how often the very evil we deplore turns out to be the best thing that could have befallen us. And above all, let us never doubt, that, as God knows what is best, so is He inclined also to give it us, for his Son's sake. He desires, like a gracious parent, by each chastisement we receive, to make us less unworthy of his love, to draw us nearer to Himself. This if we feel duly, however earnestly we may pray "Let this cup pass from me," we shall not fail in all humility to conclude, "Nevertheless not my will, but thine be done." Marvellous is that power of the Almighty which gives us a will at all, independent of his own. Marvellous that wisdom, which whilst we choose freely, yet ordereth all things both in heaven and earth. The more we feel that we have any distinct will of our own, the more we ought in wonder, love, and praise, to conform what will we have to his. Wherever then we can tell certainly what his will is, there let us neither act, nor so much as wish to act otherwise. Where we know it not, and pray for what seems best unto ourselves, there let us add always in devout submission, "Not my will, but thine be done."

Christ is betrayed by Judas.

47 And ¹while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and elders of the people.

48 Now he that betrayed him gave them a sign, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he: hold him fast.

49 And forthwith he came to Jesus, and said, Hail, master; and kissed him.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him.

51 And, behold, one of them which were with Jesus stretched out his hand, and drew his sword, and struck a servant of the high priest's, and smote off his ear.

52 Then said Jesus unto him, Put up again thy sword into his place: ²for all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.

53 Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?

54 But how then shall the scriptures be fulfilled, ³that thus it must be?

55 In that same hour said Jesus to the multitudes, Are ye come out against a thief with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me.

56 But all this was done, that the ⁴scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled.

¹ Mark 14. 43. Luke 22. 47. John 18. 3.

² Gen. 9. 6. Rev. 13. 10.

³ Isaiah 53. 10.

⁴ Lam. 4. 20.

§ 101. That in our afflictions the Scriptures are fulfilled.

Judas betrayed his Master with a kiss. And what else do they who make profession of their regard to Christ, and so much the more injure by their unholy lives the Christian cause? With their lips they boast of being Christians. In their lives they deceive, they defraud, they slander, they swear, they are proud, irritable, and selfish. With their lips they pray daily to be delivered from evil. And all the while in their hearts they are planning some evil scheme, as of covetousness or impurity. With their lips they proclaim that they believe in Christ, that they love Him, and give up their lives to his service. And all the while they live with no thought of Him at all, much less with any lively faith in Him, much less with any devout love of Him or of his word. Let us beware, lest we be thus found one while to say, "Hail, master," and another to betray our Lord. Certain it is, that if we love Him not, so as to serve Him truly, our profession of his faith does but bring it into the greater contempt. Whenever therefore we frequent his worship, or in any way make profession of being Christians, let us put to ourselves, as from Him, this searching question, "Friend, wherefore art thou come?" Friend you call yourself. But are you a friend indeed? Are you resolved to do honour to your Lord? Or do you purpose, ere scarce your back be turned, do you purpose at the very next opportunity of sin, to put him to an open shame?

"Then came they, and laid hands on Jesus, and took him." And now note how an indiscreet zeal, exceeding the bounds of law and order, may do injury, no less than the traitor's kiss, to the cause of Christ. "Put up again thy sword into his place," is the rebuke of the disciple who drew in defence of his Master this worldly weapon. "Put up thy sword into his place," is a sentence which may well check in us all irritable impatience at such evil in the world as God thinks fit to permit. However grievous the wrong, we must never think to redress it by violence. We must not take into our own hands the law, to which, whether it be well or ill administered, we are bound by God's ordinance to submit. "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Such, we know, is in fact their ordinary end. And such we here learn it is God's will that it should be. And most plainly doth Christ here denounce as sinful all personal violence in private wrongs; and so much also, to say the least, of public wars as might, by Christian policy, be possibly avoided.

Christ could as He here tells his disciples, have assumed at any moment the full majesty of his divine nature. By legions of angels He might have been protected from the enemies who were compassing his death. "But how then," saith He, "shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?" The very method of his being taken, namely by subtilty, was itself, as He then adds, a fulfilment of prophecy. "All this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled." How cheerfully then ought we also to submit to the very worst that can here befall us, when we consider both our Lord's example, and how truly our own share of affliction is no more than the Scriptures being fulfilled. That we must suffer affliction, take up our cross, be despised of men, and deny ourselves, these are things set down in the Gospel as most likely to happen to all those whom God most loves on earth. No wonder that He allows the wicked in many things to prevail. Legions of angels wait at his bidding to defend his faithful servants. That He suffers them not at once to interfere, argues, not lack of power, but a purpose, which, whether we comprehend it or not, we cannot doubt to be both wise and good. If therefore we are tempted to regret the prosperity of the wicked, to grudge them their abundance, or to murmur at woe befalling those who seem less richly to deserve it, let us bethink ourselves of this answer of our Lord, and task our reluctant hearts to answer, how else "shall the scriptures be fulfilled, that thus it must be?"

Christ is led away to Caiaphas, Peter following.

57 ¹ And they that had laid hold on Jesus led him away to Caiaphas the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled.

58 But Peter followed him afar off unto the high priest's palace, and went in, and sat with the servants, to see the end.

59 Now the chief priests, and elders, and all the council, sought false witness against Jesus, to put him to death;

60 But found none: yea, though many false witnesses came, yet found they none. At the last came two false witnesses,

61 And said, This fellow said, ² I am able to destroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days.

62 And the high priest arose, and said unto him, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witnesses against thee?

63 But Jesus held his peace. And the high priest answered and said unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Christ, the Son of God.

64 Jesus saith unto him, Thou hast said: nevertheless I say unto you, ³ Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

65 Then the high priest rent his clothes, saying, He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses? behold, now ye have heard his blasphemy.

66 What think ye? They answered and said, He is guilty of death.

67 Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him; and others smote him with the palms of their hands,

68 Saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Christ, Who is he that smote thee?

¹ Mark 14. 53. Luke 22. 54. John 18. 13.

² John 2. 19.

³ Ch. 16. 27. 1 Thess. 4. 16. Rom. 14. 10.

⁴ Isaiah 60. 6.

|| Or, rods.

§ 102. That we should follow close to Jesus at all risks.

Jesus is now taken by the hands of his enemies. The Shepherd is smitten; and lo, also the sheep are scattered abroad. "Then all the disciples forsook him, and fled." Ver. 56. St. Matthew, a faithful historian, conceals not this fact so little to his own credit. He records of himself, and of all, that they deserted in the hour of his greatest need, their Master Christ. We must except however St. John, as he mentions in his Gospel, 18. 15; and St. Peter, who so lately had declared that he would never by any means be tempted to deny his Lord. But Peter followed Him "afar off;" not into the presence of the high priest, to give testimony in behalf of Christ, but only out of weak curiosity, to sit "with the servants, and see the end."

It was the object of the chief priests and elders to find against Jesus some charge such as they might bring forward before the Roman governor, who alone had now the power of putting criminals to death. Failing to get from their false witnesses any suitable proof, they next try to ensnare Him by artful questions, so as to have Him condemned out of his own mouth. "But Jesus held his peace." See how safe is silence against that enemy of our souls, who rejoices to have us offend with our lips! When tempted by an angry or an idle word to give the adversary occasion to accuse us, let us call to mind this instance of our Lord's behaviour, and with Jesus hold our peace.

Being now further very solemnly adjured, that is, put upon his oath by the high priest, to say whether He were the Christ the Son of God, He answered plainly, "Thou hast said;" that is, Thou hast said the truth. Here therefore we have his own word for it, that He was the very Messiah whom the Jews in their Scriptures had been taught to expect; and that being so, being the seed of the woman, the son of Abraham, and the son of David, He was at the same time most truly the Son of God. To this He added, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." This the high priest pronounced to be blasphemy; meaning that Jesus took to Himself the honour due to God. And to him the rest agreed, saying, "He is guilty of death." Then did they spit in his face, and buffeted him." They began to treat Him as in times before the Gospel they used commonly to treat the condemned, not with justice only for the prevention of crime, but with cruelty for their own evil pleasure. And yet had they no power to condemn Him at all, but were forced, as will appear in the next chapter, to take Him afterwards for that purpose before the Roman governor. So utterly unjust was every blow our Lord received. So utterly immerited by any fault of his were those stripes by which we and our sins are healed.

Meantime Peter instead of standing by his Master, was waiting, as we read in what follows, "without in the palace." Ver. 69. And here perhaps he flattered himself that he had kept his boastful words, "yet will I never be offended." But call to mind the end of this account, and you will see how little such half measures avail. This following of Christ, without a steadfast purpose to follow Him even unto death, only exposed Peter to the more grievous fall.

Be not then, as were they of Laodicea, "neither cold nor hot." Rev. 3. 15. Follow Christ, not, as did Peter in this instance, afar off, but close. Resort to where He is in his ordinances, not for any company's sake, save his; not to see aught out of curiosity, but out of a devout desire to be near to Him. In the world there arise against Him false witnesses continually. Shrink not from bearing testimony to his Gospel truth. Though they scoff, dare you to be serious. Though they rail at his religion, be you free to confess that it is the ground of your dearest hope. Though they count for either hypocrites or fools all who own to walking by faith in Him, be not you ashamed to declare that in this faith you strive now to live, and by it you trust that you shall live eternally. Draw not back from any occasion where you may hope to do this profitably, or where you feel it to be your duty to do it faithfully; leaving the event, in all humility, to God.

Christ is denied of Peter.

69 'Now Peter sat without in the palace: and a damsel came unto him, saying, 'Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee.

70 But he denied before them all, saying, I know not what thou sayest.

71 And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid saw him, and said unto them that were there, 'This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth.

72 And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man.

73 And after a while came unto him they that stood by, and said to Peter, Surely thou also art one of them; for thy speech bewrayeth thee.

74 Then began he to curse and to swear, saying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew.

75 And Peter remembered the word of Jesus, which said unto him, Before the cock crew, thou shalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

¹ Mark 14. 66. Luke 22. 55. John 18. 25.

§ 103. That we should never be ashamed of Christ and his Gospel.

Thus ended that imprudent boasting: "Though all men shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." Ver. 33. Thrice ere the cock crowing was the engagement broken. Thrice did St. Peter deny his Lord. The first time "a damsel came unto him, saying, 'Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee.'" This led him to deny with falsehood, "I know not what thou sayest." He made pretence of not understanding her words. Next he violated the solemnity of an oath, that appeal to Almighty God which was sanctioned by Himself, and is agreed upon amongst men, for "an end of all strife," Heb. 6. 16; "he denied with an oath, I do not know the man." The third time he was found out to be a Galilean by his manner of speaking. "Surely thou also art one of them, for thy speech bewrayeth thee. Then began he to curse and to swear," that is, not merely to deny with a solemn oath, but with imprecations on himself, and curses on those who addressed him, "saying, I know not the man."

Here we see most signally fulfilled the words of Christ, "This night, before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice." Ver. 34. Here we see how exactly He knows the hearts of men, and can tell what sins they will commit when most they profess purpose to obey. Here we see the danger of a presumptuous trust in our own strength, and how sure all are to fall, who rely not on the grace of Christ, and work not in his strength. And more especially we should here observe the close connexion which there is between one sin and another. We should lay to heart how hard it is to stop, if we once begin, as did this apostle, wilfully to deny the truth. First he was ashamed of Christ as being in bonds, and afraid of the like treatment for himself. Fear, and false shame, soon brought him to deceit and perjury. Till at last, to make his falsehood the more believed, he affected to break out into a passion, with cursing and swearing, at the very thought of being taken for a follower of Christ.

But now note how bitterly he wept, the moment he became aware of his sin, the moment that the crowing of the cock reminded him of his having denied his Master Christ, "he went out and wept bitterly." No longer had he any taste for the company which had before entertained him; "he went out." No longer did he feel that vain curiosity to see the end, which seems chiefly to have drawn him to follow Christ to the palace of the high priest; "he went out." And not merely did he thus absent himself from the sight which he went to see, but he retired on purpose to offer the tears of repentance to that Father which seeth in secret; "he went out, and wept bitterly."

Seldom or never are we tempted to deny Christ exactly in the same way as St. Peter did. For to us it is a credit to be called Christians; to us it would be a disgrace to profess of Jesus of Nazareth, "I know not the man." Yet not far from such denial is the sin of those, who are in any sense ashamed of Him or of his words, in the midst of a wicked and adulterous generation. Such are they, who, when they must know far better, join the laugh, of very common occurrence, at whatsoever is holy and good. Such are they who so much as smile in silence when "fools make a mock at sin." Prov. 14. 9. Such are they who omit to pray or praise at proper seasons, out of regard to the presence of a stranger. Such are they who submit at any season to transgress their Lord's will, out of deference to the fear of man. Rather let us prefer the cross of Christ crucified, to the praise of the whole world. Let us resolve, through evil report and good report, both to put our whole trust in Him, and to own also to all men that we do so. And if in any thing we should ever fail so to do, if in any thing we should through fear or shame approach to a denial of Christ, let us with St. Peter go out, and weep bitterly. Let our repentance cost us tears. Let it give us a distaste for the haunts of sin; for the occasions, and accompaniments, and memorials of the offence we have committed. From these let us go out; these let us entirely renounce; that we may weep in secret before God, those tears of heartfelt sorrow which He will wipe away. See Rev. 21. 4.

Oh may we pause, ere next we stoop to sin; and think how grievous is the fall we venture, how hard to stop, how painful to retrieve! Oh may we never idly gaze for pleasure, at those vain sights of this world's triumph, which should wring our hearts with sorrow! Oh may we never vainly boast, never trust presumptuously in ourselves! But trusting in God through Jesus Christ, oh may we never be offended!

Christ is delivered bound to Pilate. Judas hangeth himself.

1 When the morning was come, ¹ all the chief priests and elders of the people took counsel against Jesus to put him to death:

2 And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor.

3 Then Judas, which had betrayed him, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders,

4 Saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

5 And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, ² and departed, and went and hanged himself.

¹ Mark 15. 1. Luke 22. 66. John 18. 28.

⁴ Zech. 11. 12.

6 And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because it is the price of blood.

7 And they took counsel, and bought with them the potter's field, to bury strangers in.

8 Wherefore that field was called, ³ The field of blood, unto this day.

9 Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, 'And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the price of him that was valued, || whom they of the children of Israel did value;

10 And gave them for the potter's field, as the Lord appointed me.

² Acts 1. 18.

³ Acts 1. 19.

|| Or, whom they bought of the children of Israel.

§ 104. The parts of true repentance ; its difficulty, and necessity.

The chief priests and elders had already pronounced Jesus to be guilty, and had treated Him as a criminal under sentence of death. We find here plain proof that their proceedings were utterly unlawful. For in the morning following they were forced to take counsel against Him, that is, to frame some new plausible accusation, that they might persuade the Roman governor to have Him killed. Whilst He was for this purpose being bound, and carried away, ere yet the council had broken up, they are visited by "Judas which had betrayed him." In what followed, we see the awful condition, both of him who sold, and of them who bought, the life of the innocent Jesus. Judas "repented himself," but not till it was too late to repent to any useful purpose. And the rulers, who had yet time for effectual repentance, put aside the thought with the self righteous answer, "What is that to us? see thou to that."

Judas, it is expressly said, "repented himself;" yet straightway "went and hanged himself." It is not all repentance then that is effectual. True, he confessed his offence. And this costs some sacrifice of pride. True, he was sorry for his sin. For else he would not have confessed it at all. True, he brought again the thirty pieces of silver. And this is a step in penitence so painful, that few take it, except those who are in earnest. Yet one thing was wanting. For besides sorrow, besides confession, besides restitution, there is needful for that repentance on which pardon waits, there is needful a real change of heart and soul from the love of evil, to the love of good. And this it appears Judas did not attain to, this he had neither time nor grace to reach. For no sooner had he confessed, "I have sinned," and "cast down the pieces of silver in the temple," than he committed that most hopeless of all sins, self murder. There is a time, let us remember, for all things, see Eccles. 3. 11; a time for repentance, and a time, when repentance is too late. Let us beware therefore for ourselves, lest we put off the invitation to repent, by applying to our accusing conscience the words of these chief priests, "What is that to us?" Many things we may find hereafter to have been sin to us, which here we persuade ourselves concern us not. Such especially are those offences of others, which they have been encouraged in by any word or example of ours. Such are those sins, which, but for our neglect, others might have learnt to avoid. In a state where we are so closely connected with each other, and when the influence of each action we perform is so extensive, there is no sin that can be committed in the same family, scarcely in the same world, of which we may safely say, "What is that to us?" By prayer, if by no other means, we are concerned to intercede for all mankind. And must we not, by neglect of prayer, become concerned in all their sins? And are we not, if not aware of this, like in a degree to those blind rulers, who, having covenanted with Judas for innocent blood, then asked him, "What is that to us?"

The chief priests, though blind to their own pollution, scrupled to put the silver into the treasury, because it was "the price of blood." They laid it out therefore in the purchase of a burial place for strangers. Such is the conscience of the ungodly; to strain at a gnat whilst they swallow a camel, see Matt. 23. 24; to find sin in the silver, but none in themselves. Such is the hospitality, such the alms of the oppressor. With one hand he pays the price of blood, with the other he buys a burial ground for strangers. With one hand he deals in cruelty and fraud, with the other sets forth a feast for his friends, or deals out a pittance to the poor, or bestows on some public use for strangers what is due to his own nearer relatives. Ill fares it with that bounty which is supplied out of the gains of ungodliness. We must first be just, before we can be charitable. One penny unjustly taken, unfairly gained, robs of grace a whole fortune bountifully bestowed. Let him therefore, who has in any matter wronged his brother, first repent, with restitution to the injured; that what remains may be his own to dispose of. To give what has been got by any kind of sin, by fraud or violence, by oppressing the poor, profaning the sabbath, or concealment of another's right, to give whilst these wrongs are unrepented, unredressed, this is like the chief priests buying a field to bury strangers, instead of hastening, whilst there yet was time, to save the innocent blood.

Christ standeth before the governor. Pilate washeth his hands.

11 And Jesus stood before the governor: and the governor asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest.

12 And when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing.

13 Then said Pilate unto him, Hearest thou not how many things they witness against thee?

14 And he answered him to never a word; inasmuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

15 ¹ Now at that feast the governor was wont to release unto the people a prisoner, whom they would.

16 And they had then a notable prisoner, called Barabbas.

17 Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate said unto them, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ?

18 For he knew that for envy they had delivered him.

19 When he was set down on the judgment seat, his wife sent unto him, saying, Have thou nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him.

20 ² But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus.

21 The governor answered and said unto them, * Whether of the twain will ye that I release unto you? They said, Barabbas.

22 Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ? They all say unto him, Let him be crucified.

23 And the governor said, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified.

24 When Pilate saw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it.

25 Then answered all the people, and said, His blood be on us, and on our children.

¹ Luke 23. 17.

² John 18. 40. Acts 3. 14.

§ 105. How the prayer of the swearer is fulfilled.

Pilate could not without great cruelty ask our Lord to accuse Himself of treason against Caesar. He took however this oppressive method of inquiry; saying, "Art thou the King of the Jews? And Jesus said unto him, Thou sayest," that is, thou sayest the truth. "And when he was accused of the chief priests and elders, he answered nothing." Hence we learn both when to be silent, and when to speak. A false charge we may meet with silence, not answering again. But if there be a question which we are constrained to answer, a truth which our silence might seem to deny; that truth we are bound to tell, however great the inconvenience; that truth we are bound to tell, though like the reply of our blessed Lord, it were to cost us life itself.

The governor was all the while aware "that for envy they had delivered him." He had been warned also when first he sat down on the judgment seat, "Have thou nothing to do with that just man." These things made him desirous to release Jesus. But, at the same time he desired also to please those who had accused our Lord. And as is commonly the case with such as would serve two masters, he fell into so much the greater sin. He first proposed to the people, according to the custom of releasing to them a prisoner at the feast, that they should choose Christ for the person to be set at liberty. He hoped probably, that the multitude, in whom the choice lay, would be no parties to the envy which the rulers entertained. "But the chief priests and elders persuaded the multitude that they should ask Barabbas, and destroy Jesus." So blindly does that man choose who listens to evil counsel. So many times are we persuaded by evil company, or by our own evil passions, or by the evil enemy of our souls, to prefer as it were Barabbas to Jesus, the friendship of a wicked world to the love of our Saviour Christ.

"Pilate saith unto them, What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" Pilate should have done his own duty, instead of consulting the wishes of others, especially in a matter where he knew already their disposition to be evil. When we have not the courage to do right, let us at least not add hypocrisy to fear; or ask counsel of the wicked, to be emboldened in doing wrong. In vain does the governor thus again appeal to them, asking "Why, what evil hath he done?" He knew beforehand that none could be proved. And the Jews, though they could mention none, "cried out the more, saying, Let him be crucified." At length, in order to throw the blame from himself on them, Pilate "washed his hands before the multitude, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person." As if any washing of the hands could cleanse the conscience, or wipe off the stain of murder from one who wilfully condemned the innocent to death.

The Jews, indeed, in the hardness of their hearts, were willing to take, if they might, the whole guilt upon themselves. "His blood be on us, and on our children." And against them most fearfully has this curse been made good, even up to this present day. Most fearfully in them have been fulfilled the words of the Psalmist; "His delight was in cursing, and it shall happen unto him." Psalm 109. 16. Scattered they are through every quarter of the earth, and every where subject to the signal judgments which these words of their own provoked. Let the swearer whenever he sees them consider the true meaning and sure consequence of each oath he utters. What else is it than a prayer that his own soul may perish? a prayer, which, as may be seen in this sad instance, He whom it affronts, knows how to fulfil? But let the faithful Christian from the same sad sight, and from the record of this same hardened imprecation, learn to praise the goodness of God who out of all this violence and cruelty has wrought the redemption of mankind. Let this curse of the Jews be turned by us into a prayer, that the blood of Christ may be on us and on our children, not for the condemnation, but for the saving, of the soul.

Christ is delivered to be crucified.

26 Then released he Barabbas unto them: and when he had scourged Jesus, he delivered him to be crucified.

27 Then the soldiers of the governor took Jesus into the common hall, and gathered unto him the whole band of soldiers.

28 And they stripped him, and put on him a scarlet robe.

29 And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, king of the Jews!

¹ John 19. 1.

|| Or, governor's house.

30 And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head.

31 And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him.

32 And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his cross.

33 And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to say, a place of a skull,

34 They gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall: and when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink.

² Mark 15. 21. Luke 23. 26.

³ John 19. 17.

§ 106. That it is good for us to be afflicted.

Whilst Barabbas is released, Jesus is scourged, and delivered to be crucified. Whilst the wicked prosper, they often who most love God, and whom God most loves, are chastened by affliction or want, by sorrow, by sickness, or by death. Whenever it may be our lot thus to suffer, let us turn for our comfort and direction to this view of the sufferings of our Lord. First He is scourged, then stripped, that He might the more be put to shame; then clothed in mockery with a scarlet robe, a crown as for a king put upon his head, and a reed by way of sceptre in his hand. "And they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, king of the Jews. And they spit upon him, and took the reed, and smote him on the head." Here we see fulfilled the account in Isaiah, 50. 6, "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting." Are they then pains of body or of mind that occur to disturb our peace, that would tempt us, if we listen to the tempter's voice, would tempt us to repine, to murmur, or to rebel? Here we have strong instances of each kind, endured for our sakes by Christ. What racking of our members with disease should seem hard to the disciples of a Lord, who Himself submitted to be scourged? What insult ought to move indignation in a Christian; when Christ was spit upon, and mocked, and smitten on the head? Yet how commonly is a blow thought to be more than man can bear from man without revenge! And a single word of slight or ridicule, how grievously does it many times embroil the peace of a family, or the harmony of friends. Let it be the settled purpose of our minds, beforehand, that we would bear, not sorrow only and sickness, but insult even and blows, with meekness, after the example of our Lord, for his sake, and through the grace He gives.

After this ill usage, which the soldiers in their cruelty had for their own pleasure inflicted on our Lord, they next "led him away to crucify him." To crucify means to fasten alive on the cross, in order to the death of the person so fastened. And the cross consisted of a great beam of wood fixed upright in the ground, with another smaller piece across it near the top. To this the body of the sufferer was fastened by large nails driven through the hands and feet. By which means he was sure to undergo, until death took place, the utmost pain which the human body could bear. Upon arriving at the place of execution, "they gave him vinegar to drink mingled with gall." This was a draught of strong and sour wine, mixed with drugs fit to stupefy the senses of the person crucified. Our Lord tasted it, in order to fulfil every prophecy, every portion of the bitterness of his lot on earth. But "when he had tasted thereof, he would not drink." For He needed no such help of art towards bearing the pain of the cross. And He designed to bear it patiently in our behalf, with all the senses of the soul alive.

Here then we may observe the folly of attempting to stupefy our sense of affliction, either by wine and drugs, or by the dissipations of idle company and vain amusement. These things, if ever we have been tempted for that end to taste, let us henceforth know their bitterness. Let us resolve with Christ, to bear both our cross, and the shame and pain of it, without any such sinful intoxication. Many are the uses of affliction, such as patience, contentment, and a thankful persuasion that all things, through God's love, work together for our good. These lessons we should never learn from sorrow, if we were to seek always worldly comforts to divert its force. Would we derive from it that spiritual benefit which the chastisement of our heavenly Father is always designed to promote? Let us refuse to drink the offered cup of sensual pleasure. Let us give no ear to those ill judging friends, who would drive away all thought by idle talk, or help us to waste in trifles these most precious of all hours for penitence and prayer. Let us choose rather to feel our affliction to the full, that so we may use it for the best, and experience the uttermost of this blessed truth, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Heb. 12. 6.

Make us, blessed Lord, patient in tribulation, and meek under the assaults of injury and scorn! Help us, when reviled, to revile not again; when we suffer, to threaten not; see 1 Pet. 2. 23; whosoever would smite us on the right cheek, to turn to him the other also; whosoever would take away our coat, to let him have our cloak also. See Matt. 5. 39, 40.

Christ is crucified.

35 And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, ¹They parted my garments among them, and upon my vesture did they cast lots.

36 And sitting down they watched him there;

37 And set up over his head his accusation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

38 Then were there two thieves crucified with him, one on the right hand, and another on the left.

39 And they that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads,

40 And saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross.

¹ Ps. 22. 18.

41 Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders, said,

42 He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him.

43 ²He trusted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he said, I am the Son of God.

44 The thieves also, which were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.

² Ps. 22. 8. Wis. 2. 16, 17, 18.

§ 107. That we must believe in Christ crucified.

"And they crucified him." They nailed Him to the cross. They pierced, as David had foretold, see Ps. 22. 17, his hands and his feet. "And sitting down they watched him there;" thus fulfilling what is added in the same Psalm and verse, "they stand staring and looking upon me." The parting of his garments by lot, had in like manner been described beforehand by David. See Ps. 22. 18. And the fact of his being crucified between two thieves, was no more than Isaiah, see 53. 12, had plainly set down. "He was numbered with the transgressors." Thus numerous and minute were the circumstances expressed by prophecy, in order to mark, and certify, an event in itself so little to be expected. So that instead of taking offence at the shame of the cross, we know that if Jesus had not been crucified, He could not have been the Christ. And we know for this very reason amongst others, because He was crucified, that "This is Jesus the King of the Jews."

"And they crucified him." What humility is here! Christ the King of Glory, the express image of the Father, the only begotten Son of God, "God of God, Light of light, very God of very God," (Nicene Creed,) Christ is made man, is made sin for us, is nailed to the cross, is crucified with thieves. "And they crucified him." What patience, what meekness, what forbearance is this! He who had legions of angels at command, He who could with like ease have burst the bonds of his captivity, or rent the world asunder: He suffered the most vile of his creatures to mar with cruel usage that human form in which He had veiled his glory. He bare with them as they cast lots on his vesture, watched with savage joy the agony his countenance expressed, and set over Him as an accusation the being King of the Jews, when He was indeed King of kings, and Lord of lords. "And they crucified him." What love, what greater than all other love is this, that He laid down his very life, and that, in the most painful way of death, for us whom He hath called friends! He laid down his life for us, that we might live for ever. He laid down his life, that God might for his sake forgive our sins, make us the children of his love, and bless our souls in heaven. "And they crucified Him." And thus from Christ crucified being the foundation of our Christian hope, we learn that the cross, when dispensed in affliction to ourselves, is the gift of God's love, and the mark of our being his sons by adoption of grace.

"And they that passed by reviled him." They reproached Him with his prophecy of rebuilding the temple in three days; not knowing that "he spake of the temple of his body." John 2. 21. They put it to Him to confirm his word by coming down from the cross. So also did the scribes and elders, and even the thieves, or at least one of them, reproach Him, saying, "If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him." Thus it is that men desire to make terms for themselves; settling on what conditions they would believe God, instead of thanking Him for the inestimable blessing of being saved on the terms He has already revealed. The terms are these, that we should believe, with a lively active working faith, in Christ crucified; not in Christ reigning with earthly glory, but in Christ exalted on the cross; there once crucified for our sins, and henceforth to reign in our hearts for ever.

Far be it from us then to excuse any lurking root of evil unbelief, by saying that we would have more lively faith, on some condition of our own devising. Far be it from us to covet for ourselves any lot more easy than the cross which Christ assigns us; or to wish for any more glorious object of our faith than Christ crucified with thieves. That crown of thorns should outshine in our view all crowns of gold and precious stones. It is the crown of patience, humility, and love. That cross should be by us esteemed of more dignity than any earthly throne, for thence issues forth continually a fountain for all uncleanness, even blood that can redeem our sinful souls. And those thieves with whom He suffered should remind us of that excellency in his love, that He "came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance;" Matt. 9. 13; should convince us, that "when we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." Rom. 5. 8. Come not then down, Thou blessed Lord, come not Thou down from the cross! Save others, not Thyself! Bear yet a while that agony of pain, and shame, and nameless horror! Bear that intolerable burden of our sins! Bear that breath of the displeasure of our heavenly Father, in which we must be else consumed! Come not Thou down, till "it is finished," John 19. 30, come not Thou down from the cross! save not Thyself, but us!

Christ yieldeth up the ghost.

45 Now from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour.

46 And about the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'

47 Some of them that stood there, when they heard that, said, This man calleth for Elias.

48 And straightway one of them ran, and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink.

49 The rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him.

50 Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost.

¹ Ps. 22. 1.

51 And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent;

52 And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose,

53 And came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many.

54 Now when the centurion, and they that were with him, watching Jesus, saw the earthquake, and those things that were done, they feared greatly, saying, Truly this was the Son of God.

² Ps. 69. 21.

§ 108. That we should hold the truth not in fear but in love.

All things in heaven and in earth are moved at the sufferings and death of Christ. First, whilst He was yet alive "from the sixth hour there was darkness over all the land unto the ninth hour." The light of heaven was withheld, as if to signify that He, who then expired, was "the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." John 1. 9. And that we might the better know how much He underwent, He called out, towards the end of his sufferings, in the words of David, see Ps. 22. 1, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Not as though He were really in despair; but to prove that He felt most intolerable the burden of human sin. Not as though He could not have prayed in words of his own; but that He would shew us how to turn in all our troubles to the words of Scripture, and there to learn both how to feel and how to express our feelings. Would that in our sins and sorrows we were more solicitous lest God forsake us, than careful, as we are apt to be, for our worldly character or comfort! Would that we could feel, as did our blessed Lord for us, and as our church teaches us to say for ourselves, that "the remembrance of our misdoings is grievous unto us, the burden intolerable." (See Liturgy.)

In this agony of Christ, "some of them that stood there" either mistook his words, or purposely made a mock of what He said. Whilst one, more humane perhaps than the rest, offered Him, by way of relief to his painful thirst, a sponge of vinegar to drink. It is no new thing for the wicked to make a mock at the prayers of the devout. Nor is it seldom that ignorance is the cause of that scorn, which no ignorance, being wilful, can excuse. Let us endeavour both to know our Saviour's need, and knowing it let us labour to relieve it. Let us remember, it is in the least of them who are his brethren that He would have us shew kindness to Himself. When we see them in distress, when we hear their cry for help, let us conceive ourselves to hear the voice of Christ, to see Him hanging on the cross; and let us run in haste, to minister according to our ability, but in any case in haste to minister, willing, anxious, and making speed to minister, to the necessities of his saints!

"Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost." Thus were those pains at length concluded which Christ once suffered for all our sins. Thus did He become truly a sin offering for us, a sacrifice, a Passover, or Paschal Lamb, even the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Rev. 13. 8. He "yielded up the ghost." Let not us then too fearfully apprehend the sure approach of our own decease. We are called upon to enter on a path which Christ has trod before. In that dark passage let us trust to Him for aid. Let us be assured that through Him it has been made the gate of glory. He "yielded up the ghost." And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent," signifying that the temple of his body was now severed from his soul by death. And signifying also, as the apostle intimated to the Hebrews, that our High Priest was now by his own blood to enter once into the holy place, through the veil of his flesh, having obtained eternal redemption for us. See Heb. 9. 12; 10. 20. He "yielded up the ghost." "And the earth did quake." Either an earthquake then took place in Judæa, or the whole globe was made to tremble in its course, at the moment when Jesus breathed his last. "And the rocks rent," in consequence of the commotion in the earth, and fulfilling also in some sort what our Lord had said, that the stones should cry out in witness of Him. See Luke 19. 40. "And the graves were opened, and many bodies of the saints which slept arose;" in token, as it should seem, that by the death of Christ the bands of death were loosed, and that, even in the case of those who died before the hour of his suffering.

Great was the fear which fell upon the centurion, and on them that were with him watching Jesus, when they saw "those things that were done." And most important was the confession they were then forced to make: "Truly this was the Son of God." Fear made them own the truth, when it was now too late; when those cruel scourgings had been inflicted, when that cross had done the work of death. Oh, how far better is it to hold the truth in love, than to own it reluctantly in fear! Oh, how much better to believe in Christ, when meekly submitting to affronts, than when He shall make the earth to quake and the graves to give up their dead! Then will it be too late, if we confess Him not now before men, too late to confess Him before the angels of heaven; too late for hope, for love, for joy; too late, except to fear greatly.

Christ is buried; and the sepulchre sealed.

55 And many women were there beholding afar off, which followed Jesus from Galilee, ministering unto him:

56 Among which was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James and Josce, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

57 ¹ When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, who also himself was Jesus' disciple:

58 He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. Then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered.

59 And when Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth,

60 And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great stone to the door of the sepulchre, and departed.

61 And there was Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, sitting over against the sepulchre.

62 Now the next day, that followed the day of the preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees came together unto Pilate,

63 Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, while he was yet alive, After three days I will rise again.

64 Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest his disciples come by night, and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error shall be worse than the first.

65 Pilate said unto them, Ye have a watch: go your way, make it as sure as ye can.

66 So they went, and made the sepulchre sure, sealing the stone, and setting a watch.

¹ Mark 15. 42. Luke 23. 50. John 19. 38.

§ 109. That our bodies must see corruption.

It is recorded to the especial honour of three women, amongst others, that when the disciples had fled they "were there beholding," though "afar off." They enjoyed for their reward the sight of those wonders which attended their Master's death. And of two of them we read in what follows that they were the first to whom his resurrection was made known. To love our Lord unto the end, to be faithful to Him in the hour of his affliction, these are instances of faithfulness not strictly within our reach; seeing that He is now gone up on high, and has led captivity captive. See Ephes. 4. 8. Would we know whether we have the disposition so to do, whether we should have done so had we been living when He died, whether we should have fled with the disciples, or stayed with these faithful women? Let us consider how far we now venture to own before men the strength of our attachment to his holy cause; how far before those who now despise his name and words, we avow our faith, and make good our profession of love, by manfully contending under his banner against sin, the world, and the devil.

Another instance of the like courage and fidelity we see in Joseph of Arimathea. "He went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus." He is here said to be "a rich man;" agreeably to the prophet's account, that the Messiah should be "with the rich in his death." Isai. 53. 9. The more he possessed, the more he must have put in jeopardy, by this devout instance of respect to the last remains of Jesus. Regardless of the enmity he might incur, as well from the people as from the rulers of the Jews, he treated with all due honour the body of his crucified Lord. "He wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, and laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock." These things shew the certainty of our Saviour's death. They who handled his body, who committed it to the grave, were friends who must have carefully examined the least signs, had there been any, of remaining life. And for our more full assurance that Christ was during this time most truly dead, we have the testimony of St. Peter, who has told us, 1 Pet. 3. 19, that He went during this interval, and "preached unto the spirits in prison," that is, ministered in some way unknown to us, to those departed souls, "which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah," that is, before the time of the deluge.

Thus is our blessed Lord still employed in doing good at the very hour when his body is laid in the grave. His enemies meanwhile, in order to prevent any pretended resurrection, obtain a guard from the Roman governor, and seal the very stone at the door of the sepulchre. Now then we know of a certainty that the dead body is there shut in, and that no human power can take it thence. The Jews themselves have set the seal. Stationed at the entrance is a guard of Roman soldiers, men to whose arms the world was subject, to whom slumber at their post was certain death. The disciples are dispersed in fear. And only two helpless women remain, out of all that were concerned for the honour of their Lord. Most sure then we must be, if Jesus did rise, that He did rise truly from the dead.

Here let us pause. And whilst we wait the issue, let us reflect that in like manner our bodies must be laid in the silent grave. We know that we shall be soon brought low by death, unless Christ, ere yet we die, first come to judgment. Our sense will cease to act, and the very friends who most love us will assist to commit us to the ground from which we were taken. Dust we are, and unto dust we must return. See Gen. 3. 19. There must these our bodies grow gradually corrupt; there perish in dishonour; there waste, till there be no form or fragment left. How dare we now pamper them with excess, clothe them in finery, or defile them with forbidden lusts? How hesitate to offer them, by purity, temperance, and sobriety, by selfdenial, and by activity in doing good, a lively sacrifice unto God?

Christ is risen, and appeareth to the women.

1 In the ¹ end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre.

2 And, behold, there ² was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it.

3 His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow:

4 And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men.

5 And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified.

6 He is not here: for he is risen, as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay.

7 And go quickly, and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead; and, behold, he goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see him: lo, I have told you.

8 And they departed quickly from the sepulchre with fear and great joy; and did run to bring his disciples word.

9 And as they went to tell his disciples, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshipped him.

10 Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me.

¹ Mark 16. 1. John 20. 1.

|| Or, had been.

§ 110. How we may have joy in the presence of our Lord.

On the third day, two of the faithful women, who had watched on the first, returned to see the sepulchre. What a sight was there! Earth trembling! An angel descending from heaven! The guard of soldiers become through fear of him as dead men! And He, that was crucified and dead, no longer there, but risen! "And the angel answered, and said unto the women, Fear not ye: for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified." Fear was fitting for those who watched Christ for enmity, but not for them who sought Him with devotion. And the same angel, at whose presence the keepers became as dead with alarm, was commissioned to bid the women who devoutly sought our Lord, "Fear not ye." This was their encouragement. Let this be ours. Whatever difficulties beset us; whether from friends or foes we apprehend aught of danger; it is enough that we seek heartily "Jesus which was crucified." It is enough that, whatever be our errand, we are bent on acting according to his will, on fulfilling his commands, on attaining to the crown of glory He hath promised. Then need we fear no harm, either in this world, or in the next.

But chiefly may we be set above all unworthy fear by those other words of the angel, "He is not here: for he is risen, as he said." What evil here befalls us more formidable than death? Yet death does through Christ lead only to our rising again. So was it with Himself; and so through Him will it be with us. He the firstfruits, "afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. 15. 23. What place can be more awful than the sepulchre, or than the chamber which is occupied by the body of our brother yet unburied? Let us think, when we have occasion to enter that solemn scene, let us think, of these devout followers of Christ being guided by an angel to see the place "where the Lord lay." Let us think of their surprise when that place was seen to have been left by Him, of their joy when they were told not only that He was not there, but also was "risen, as he said." Might not we also then visit or leave the chamber of the dead, not with fear only, but with great joy; not so much with pain at a sight so grievous, as with gladness at a hope so full of glory?

With these tidings the women departed quickly, as the angel bade them, to tell the disciples that their Lord was risen from the dead. And as they went, "Behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail." At once they knew Him, and held Him by the feet, and worshipped Him. On which behaviour, recorded without note of censure, we may do well to remark that we not only may give to Christ, without idolatry, but that we cannot deny Him, without irreverence, the worship which is due to Almighty God. Our Lord as well as the angel encourages these devout women, saying, "Be not afraid." And at first we may think it strange that at a sight so full of joy they should feel any fresh tendency to alarm. But there is in death so much to fear, that even the resurrection of the dead seems fearful. Nor should we be able to regard without awe as well as joy, any friend, however dear, who should so rise from the grave. And further, it is not improbable that there was seen in the appearance of our Lord, something of that glorified body, with which we may believe Him to have been then invested. So that we may account for the women being afraid as well by what they saw in Christ's person, as by what they knew of his death and resurrection.

What then will be our emotions when we shall see this same Jesus, manifest in this same glorified body, coming in the clouds of heaven, to pass sentence on all mankind? What power shall then allay our terror? what voice of consolation bid us "Be not afraid!" His own, and no other. His own which then shall say to those who now truly love Him, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Ch. 25. 34. Then will their alarm be turned into joy, their joy such happiness as no words can express. Then will He not only remove all terror from their hearts, but fill them with all pleasure for evermore. There shall they see Him, see Him as He is, all great, all good; see Him, as He hath revealed Himself to be, to them that love Him, all love.

Christ appeareth to the disciples, and sendeth them to baptize.

11 Now when they were going, behold, some of the watch came into the city, and shewed unto the chief priests all the things that were done.

12 And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers,

13 Saying, Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept.

14 And if this come to the governor's ears, we will persuade him, and secure you.

15 So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day.

16 Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them.

17 And when they saw him, they worshipped him: but some doubted.

18 And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth.

19 Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost:

20 Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

¹ Mark 16. 15.

§ 111. The essentials of Christian faith, and of Christian practice.

The soldiers who kept watch had no sooner recovered from their alarm, than they went to tell the chief priests what had happened. "And when they were assembled with the elders, and had taken counsel, they gave large money unto the soldiers." This was by way of bribing them to give a false account of "the things that were done." So largely do men often give and spend for sin, when they will spare so little for alms! So free are they to squander in a bad cause what in a good one they are resolute to withhold! So backward to bestow on the poor, to clothe the naked, to instruct the ignorant! So lavish in the indulgence of their own vanity and pride, in the entertainment of those friends who can bid them again! See Luke 14. 12.

The false account for which the elders thus largely paid was this: "Say ye, His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept." In which story we may observe this one clear proof of falsehood: How, namely, if they had really been asleep, how could they know what happened in the meantime, whether the body had been stolen, or had of itself risen from the grave? "So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this saying is commonly reported among the Jews until this day." That is, until the time when the apostle wrote, or about ten years after the death of Christ. To which we may add, that it is reported also to this present time, nearly two thousand years after. And how many of the Jews in the meanwhile must have been hardened in their unbelief by the circulation of this single untruth! And how much, in the obduracy of the Jews have the soldiers who told this falsehood, to answer for, and how much more the rulers who bade them tell it! Far be it from us to deny or to misrepresent the truth! Far be it from us to encourage others in deceit! Far be from us the money which is paid as the wages of deceitfulness! Far be from us that "love of money," which is the root, not only of falsehood, but of "all evil." 1 Tim. 6. 10.

Opposed to this manifest falsehood of the soldiers, we have in this chapter four distinct testimonies to the resurrection of our blessed Lord: the words of the angel to the women; the appearing of Christ to them Himself; the true account which the watch gave to the elders; and, lastly, our Lord's own appearance in Galilee to his disciples. Here it was that He had appointed them to meet Him. Here it was that they "saw him." "And when they saw him, they worshipped him." They, too, offer without hesitation, to Himself, the prayers and praises which belong to God. "They worshipped him: but some doubted." Even of the disciples who were blessed with the sight of our Lord "some doubted." Seeing is not, as it is commonly said to be, believing. Believing means, to be sure of what we cannot see, because God hath told us. And this is indeed the trial of faith, to believe what we deem most strange; to believe what some, what many doubt. Such a thing, and so strange, was what the disciples had to believe, that their Lord whom they then saw, had been dead and was alive again. See Rev. 1. 18. Such a thing, and so strange is that which is revealed to us of the resurrection of our own bodies; that we all, like Jesus Christ, shall rise again in the body, each in his own; though glorified, yet his own. We must believe entirely, that it will be so, though we cannot in any part understand how it will come to pass. We must endeavour to feel as sure of it, as though we had joined this company on the appointed mount, there seen the risen body of our Lord, there heard the last words of love, which He is recorded to have uttered whilst on earth.

Full of affection for mankind were those words: full of care for the salvation of the world. "All power," saith He, "is given unto me," that is, given to the Son of man, in man's behalf, "all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them." This is the use to which he would have his power put, that his flock should be duly fed, and diligently enlarged. The disciples have their plain directions, to teach and to baptize. They are to baptize "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." They are to teach men to "observe all things, whatsoever Christ had commanded."

Here then we have set down at the conclusion of this Gospel the essentials of Christian faith and of Christian practice. We are to be baptized, we are to believe, "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." In our faith we are to conceive of God, first as a Father who made us, and who "like as a father pitieth his own children," even so is merciful to "them that fear him." Ps. 103. 13. We are to conceive of God, secondly, as the blessed Son, who for us and for our salvation was made man, crucified, dead, and buried; who rose again from the dead, and ascended into heaven. (See Nicene Creed.) We are to conceive of God, thirdly, as the Holy Ghost, who, from the Father and the Son proceeding, maketh us, if the fault be not our own, holy as He is holy, and pure as He is pure. Thus are we to conceive of that one great Being, in whom we believe as God. And in serving Him we are to take for our direction whatsoever Christ has commanded us. We are to study with earnest attention what the apostles have set down as his word and will. We are to study that we may understand; to understand that we may obey. Then will be fulfilled in us his gracious promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." With us He will be through life, strengthening us by his grace; with us in the hour of death, supporting us by the hope of his appearing; with us in the resurrection from the dead, receiving us into the brightness of his glory.

"Amen." So be it, blessed Lord; soon may thy kingdom come! "Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. 22. 20. Be with us now; and yet come to us hereafter! Be with us, where we are, for our safety, for our comfort, for our peace! But come, if it may be, soon; come, for our greater joy, to take us to the place Thou art gone to prepare, that where Thou art, there we may be also! See John 14. 3.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MARK.

§ 112. The use of having four Gospels.

ST. Mark was the same person whom St. Peter, 1 Ep. 5. 13. calls "Marcus my son," meaning his disciple in Christianity, a convert of his ministry, and a faithful reporter of the Gospel which he preached. So that, although this writer was not himself an apostle, he had the benefit of an apostle's fatherly instruction; and, probably with his assistance, certainly with the guidance of God's Holy Spirit, composed the history of our Saviour now before us.

That there should be more than one, nay four distinct histories of our Lord's ministry, called Gospels, was ordained by God's providence, as we may plainly see, for several important ends. First, the four Gospels serve as so many independent witnesses; affording to the inquisitive mind of man that very kind of evidence which best admits of being examined, and which is in all human transactions deemed the most satisfactory. For here we may apply what St. Paul quotes from the law of Moses, 2 Cor. 13. 1, "In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established." And we may observe, in confirmation of this remark, how improbable it is that any, except a true account, should have been purposely related in four different histories. A forger of falsehoods confines himself ever carefully to a single tale. Such an one, like Pilate, who meant falsehood though he wrote the truth, answers, when pressed to review his account, "What I have written, I have written." John 19. 22. Whilst faithful witnesses care not how often they repeat their testimony, nor how much their expressions may be thought to vary; content to know that the fact as it took place is a master key to each seeming difficulty, that fits and opens all.

A second use of this diversity of accounts is, that wherever the same transaction is related by more than one of the Evangelists, we are able, by comparing them together, to obtain a more just notion of it, than we could have done from either of them singly. For though they were all under the special guidance of the same Holy Spirit, yet they were evidently so far permitted to relate things according to their own memory or impressions, as to constitute their testimony independent of each other's. And by the confronting of witnesses who agree in the main, we may not only be made more certain that the fact they relate took place; but from the different light in which they viewed it, and out of the very variations in their accounts, we may usually the more fully, and the more exactly, gather the most important circumstances attending it.

Thus are all the parts of Scripture of use, for our instruction in righteousness. Prophets and apostles have not written in vain, Christ hath not spoken his gracious word, but for our endless comfort or eternal condemnation. Let us then give all heed to the study of it; prizing, above all other knowledge, the knowledge of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord!

John the Baptist, his office. He baptizeth Christ.

1 The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God;

2 As it is written in the prophets, ¹ Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

3 ² The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

4 ³ John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance || for the remission of sins.

5 ⁴ And there went out unto him all the land of Judæa, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.

6 And John was ⁵ clothed with camel's hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins; and he did eat locusts and wild honey;

7 And preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

8 I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.

9 ⁶ And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.

10 And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens [†] opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him:

11 And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

12 ⁷ And immediately the Spirit driveth him into the wilderness.

13 And he was there in the wilderness forty days, tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto him.

¹ Mal. 3. 1. ² Is. 40. 3. Luke 3. 4. John 1. 23.

⁵ Matt. 3. 4.

⁶ Matt. 3. 13.

⁵ Matt. 3. 1.

|| Or, unto.

⁴ Matt. 3. 5.

[†] Or, cloven, or, rent.

⁷ Matt. 4. 1.

§ 113. That God is for Christ's sake well pleased in them that are his sons.

St. Mark dates the beginning of this Gospel from the preaching of John the Baptist. And this may signify to us both that baptism, such as our Lord afterwards ordained, is the necessary beginning of the Christian life; and that repentance for the remission of sins is the first in order of all Christian graces, the due preparation for the receiving of the rest. John was, according to one prophet here cited, Mal. 3. 1, a messenger to prepare the way before Christ. And according to another, he was "the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord." Isaiah 40. 3. The importance which is thus attached to his ministry, should impress on us the necessity of a right preparation for hearing the truth. If Christ could not, or at least did not, preach the Gospel without a messenger to prepare his way before Him, neither must man hope to profit by its preaching, without pains taken to make ready for its influence on the heart.

The means thereto are outward ordinances and inward change. "John did baptize in the wilderness." And again, "It came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan." Here we have two ordinances enforced, the sacrament of Baptism, and the ministry or service of human instruments in the work of God. John did baptize and Jesus came to be baptized. Therefore, however light a matter it may seem to the natural man for the body to be sprinkled with water, baptism must be regarded by the eye of faith as "the washing of regeneration." Tit. 3. 5. Jesus came to be baptized of John. Therefore no person, however great, however good, should think himself above attending on the lawful ministry of any minister, however inferior to himself. They who were baptized confessed their sins, and John preached the baptism of repentance. Therefore no outward washing can suffice without contrition, and change within ourselves. John was clothed in the plainest of dress, and fed on the plainest food. Therefore no change can be relied on within, which works not a change without, selfdenial, and mortification of the flesh, and of the affections and lusts thereof.

Of our Lord it is added, that "straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending," that is, descending like a dove, "upon him: and there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Thus on the due performance of Christian baptism, the Spirit descends from heaven on the soul, and the Almighty Father acknowledges us for sons in whom He is well pleased. We see not indeed in this, or in any other Christian ordinance; we see not, we hear not, we feel not the dovelike coming down from heaven of that power, which moves the heart to faithfulness and love. We walk not by sense, but by the evidence of things unseen. We work not in certainty, but in the assurance of hope. And many times after our best endeavours, whether of repentance, or prayer, or attendance on God's word and sacraments, we may be unable to maintain the cheering conviction that we are sons pleasing in his sight.

This, however, is but one of our manifold trials; one only, of those many temptations with which Satan is permitted in the wilderness of this life to assail our souls. Our own evil passions, the worst of wild beasts that here prevail, are ever active for our destruction. Our enemy the devil, "as a roaring lion, goeth about seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5. 8. But he has only a short time. See Rev. 12. 12. Our utmost continuance, what is it but as a forty days out of the whole life, what is it but as a moment out of a year, when compared with the continuance, of the life we look for? Let us then be patient in well doing. Let us be patient, though we are apprehensive of doing ill; though we attain not as we could wish, the comfortable assurance, that God is well pleased in us. He hath spoken thus of his Son. And if only we believe in Christ, if only as faithful sons we love and serve our heavenly Father, He hath spoken it, for Christ's sake, of us.

Christ beginneth to preach, and to call his apostles.

14 Now after that John was put in prison, ¹ Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God,

15 And saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.

16 ² Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

17 And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18 And straightway they forsook their nets, and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little farther thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

20 And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

21 ³ And they went into Capernaum; and straightway on the sabbath day he entered into the synagogue, and taught.

22 ⁴ And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.

23 ⁵ And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,

24 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God.

25 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26 And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

¹ Matt. 4. 12.

² Matt. 4. 18.

³ Matt. 4. 13.

⁴ Matt. 7. 28.

⁵ Luke 4. 33.

§ 114. That we may not set up our own will against God's.

"The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." No such doctrine, no such motives, as these, had been before preached to mankind. Thenceforth, to the present hour they have been the creed and the hope of the whole Christian church. That on our repentance, sin will be forgiven, that on our faith, prayer will be heard, and grace bestowed, the sinful soul justified, and the kingdom of heaven, the reign of holiness and peace and joy, thus established in our hearts on earth, thus secured to us in heaven for ever; these are the truths which the preaching of Jesus proclaims in the Galilee of this world, to them who had else sat in darkness, and in the region and shadow of death. See Matt. 4. 16.

Our Lord selected his apostles in the first instance from the occupation of fishermen. He described the office to which He invited them by a figure well suited to their apprehension, saying, that He would make them "to become fishers of men." In this likening of men to the fishes of the sea we too have for our use a lively picture of the state of the whole human race, wandering as they do by nature through the wide waste of a worldly life. Some we may conceive preying on each other, the fierce on the timid, the strong on the weak, the cunning on the ignorant and dull. Some we see idly sporting in the sunshine of brief enjoyment, devoting to each trifling object that occurs the activity of their utmost strength. Meantime the apostles, and ministers of religion, the appointed fishers of men, cast in according to his several ordinances, the net of the Gospel; those heavenly meshes of hope and fear, of thankfulness and love, which are fitted to engage each human soul in glad captivity to Christ. But how few does this good net effectually retain! How many by obstinate resistance or perverse ingenuity escape into the false liberty of an ungodly life!

Common is the case of those who like the man here mentioned with the unclean spirit refuse to be saved, who are ready to answer to the tidings of God's mercy in Christ, "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth?" This is the very worst symptom of impenitence, to be impatient of healing, to be offended at the gracious offers of redeeming love, to reject Christ in his ordinances, to harbour a distaste for his word, a distrust of his ability or willingness to save. This is saying as it were to Himself, "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee." What else indeed do we say whenever we repine under affliction, whenever we murmur at the loss of wealth, or health, or friends? What else when we deem dull, or wearisome, or vexatious, the reproofs of Scripture, or of those who are ordained to enforce its admonitions on the consciences of mankind? What else do we say in our hearts, whenever idly contented with our present attainments we disparage the superior piety of those, whose zeal condemns our sloth, their bounty our niggard alms, their heaven directed thoughts our worldly walk and conversation?

Surely as we ever experience these rebellious thoughts, they are suggested by some unclean spirit, who, though he tear not our outward frame, is defiling the soul within. Let us therefore, awakened to a sense of our condition, have recourse to Him who alone can say effectually, "Hold thy peace, and come out of him." The more we feel inclined to resist his will, the more let us pray, purpose, and endeavour, to submit to it entirely our own. For so only shall we become whole and sound, so only at peace within ourselves, so only at peace with God, when that power of choice, which He hath by nature given us, is guided by the directions He reveals to us through grace.

Let not, Lord, our will, but thine be done! Let not, Lord, our will, but thine be ours! Make us to love that which Thou dost order! Make us to hate that which Thou dost forbid! What thou hast chosen for us, make us with all our hearts to choose! And the work which Thou hast given us to do, make us to do it with all our might!

Christ healeth Simon's wife's mother : prayeth in private.

27 And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirits, and they do obey him.

28 And immediately his fame spread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee.

29 ¹ And forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house of Simon and Andrew with James and John.

30 But Simon's wife's mother lay sick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her.

31 And he came and took her by the hand, and lifted her up; and immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them.

32 And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils.

33 And all the city was gathered together at the door.

34 And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him.

35 And in the morning, rising up a great while before day, he went out and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed.

¹ Matt. 8. 14.

|| Or, to say that they knew him.

§ 115. The duty and manner of private prayer.

The attendance of Simon Peter on our Lord as an apostle led to the healing of his wife's mother. This shews us how numerous are the advantages of devoutly following Christ; how surely we may expect that our conduct and our prayers, if guided by his word, will redound, not only to our own welfare, but to the benefit of those who are most near and dear to us. "And immediately the fever left her, and she ministered unto them." Hence we may be reminded that in our spiritual healing, in our recovery from sin and death to holiness and hope through Christ, our cure is in order to his service. Let us endeavour then in all that we do, to minister unto Christ, and to them that are his. Let us in every word and work have an eye to his glory, and to the good of those our brethren, whom He graciously reckons for his own.

This miracle took place "forthwith, when they were come out of the synagogue." It took place then on the sabbath. "And at even, when the sun did set," because they counted the sabbath to be then over, "they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door. And he healed many." Here it seems to be implied that He healed not all, neither cast out the devils from all who were possessed. And so we fear it is in every city. Though all may be gathered at the door, though all, or at least many, frequent the house of God, and profess the faith of Christ: and though also He heal many; yet there are some whom He heals not. Well is it, if even in each single family there be not some who for lack of faith and prayer, partake not now of his healing grace, have no part or lot in his promises of heaven. Let us each, whilst we minister to the good of others, and seek to promote their salvation, neglect not the hope of our own. Let us lay to heart that strait is the door at which we are gathered, narrow the way which leadeth unto life, and that "few there be that find it!" Matt. 7. 14.

Next after these many miracles, we have it recorded of our Lord, that "rising up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a solitary place, and there prayed." Wherein we see how important is this duty of private prayer, how little excuse for its neglect the most pressing business can afford, how necessary it is for those who are the most deeply engaged in their worldly calling so much the more to give their first waking thoughts to devout communion with God. Remember then, if ever your work is more urgent than common, is more than usual likely to occupy the day, remember, you have so much the more need to ask God for his blessing on your labours; you are so much the more bound to rise early before day, when you may more easily be alone, and pray unto your Father, which seeth in secret. When you are most alone, then are you most close to Him. Then may you most freely express to Him your contrition, your need, your thanksgiving for need supplied, for contrition accepted through Christ in mercy.

Set apart then some fixed time for private prayer. Endeavour to be as far as possible alone. Retire to your own chamber; or, if you have none of your own, to some one place, the most private you can find or make, in the room you have in common. It matters not so much to be out of sight of men, as to be in sight of God; for you to be seen by Him, and for you to see Him by faith. Remember what you owe to Him, and give thanks. Call to mind how you have grieved Him, and confess. Consider what you want of Him; forgiveness of sin, grace unto holiness, and salvation of the soul through Christ. Consider and ask in prayer, believing; and through Christ "ye shall receive." Matt. 21. 22. Confess both your own sins, and the sinfulness of your own nature. Own yourself to be unfit to enter into God's presence. Think over with shame and sorrow before Him your worldly ways, your proud and selfish thoughts, your wanton words and looks and deeds; your perverse temper, your vain amusements, your idle neglect of his holy will. Pray that He be not extreme to mark what is done amiss. Pray that for his dear Son's sake He would forgive your sinfulness, and give you of his grace. Pray that He may make you to live in love, to die in hope, to rest in peace, and to rise in glory. And above all, each time of praying, each morning the first thing, and each night the last, give thanks to God for his great goodness in the redemption of the world through the atonement of Jesus Christ.

Christ cleanseth a leper.

36 And Simon and they that were with him followed after him.

37 And when they had found him, they said unto him, All men seek for thee.

38 And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

40 ¹ And there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

41 And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

42 And as soon as he had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And he straitly charged him, and forthwith sent him away;

44 And saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded for a testimony unto them.

45 ² But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

¹ Matt. 8. 2.

² Luke 5. 15.

§ 116. How we ought to publish God's goodness to ourselves.

In the healing of the leper it should be observed that the disease he laboured under was at once most loathsome and most hopeless of cure. A prophet, as we read in the Old Testament, 2 Kings 5. 27, might inflict it by way of punishment, but Christ, and they only, to whom He gave the power, by a touch could heal it. The many laws of Moses relating to this complaint, to its signs, its offensiveness, and to the necessity of avoiding all contact with the diseased, all seem to point it out as a fit type of that deep disease in the soul of man, the leprosy of sin. This, too, it was reserved for Christ to heal. He and He only by his word can make us clean.

From the conduct of this leper, let us learn what course it is our wisdom to pursue for this end. He came to Christ, beseeching Him, and kneeling down, and saying unto Him, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Thus, too, must we come to Christ, with prayer "beseeching him," with humility "kneeling down," and with faith professing without doubt "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." The kneeling is for the body, as the humility is for the mind. This outward posture is important as an expression of the inward disposition. It signifies that we bow down our souls before God; and not signifies only, but helps us to do so. It helps us, by its being a posture used only for the purpose of prayer, and thus reminding us when we kneel, that we are then to pray. It helps us, as giving us some sense of inconvenience, and thus reminding us, when we pray, that we are in need of assistance. It helps us, as being what we never do to each other, what we never do to our brother man, and thus reminding us, when we do it, that we are in the presence of Almighty God. Take care then, that when you pray, you kneel. Take care that when you kneel, you pray devoutly. Neither in private prayer, nor in family devotion, nor in public worship, indulge the body in that ease of posture which is injurious to the exertion of the soul. Such pain or weariness as distracts the attention would defeat the very end of all devotion; and each man's own strength and health must be in this matter the measure of his bodily homage. But let this be the purpose and the aim of all, that according to the measure of your health and strength, you each kneel so as to feel that you are kneeling, so as to be sensible of inconvenience, so as to express humiliation.

And whilst the body kneels, let us be sure that the thoughts are humble; let us be sure that the heart is faithful. Let us be sure that we both feel how little we can help ourselves, and how greatly God is able, and willing also, to help us. Readily is He moved with compassion for the manifold infirmities of his creatures, when they are laid before Him in prayer. Constantly doth He say to every one of us, if only we apply in humility and faith, "I will; be thou clean." It is his will that we be cleansed from offence, saved from death and from condemnation. It is his will that we be clean. Oh, let not us purpose to defile ourselves with sin!

Nor when most we may suppose that we have tasted of this mercy should we forget the injunction here given to the leper, or publish unadvisedly, proudly, or familiarly, our great and wondrous cure. Our own private experience of God's goodness, in deliverance from sin to the power of holiness, our being cleansed from evil thoughts, and enabled to mind chiefly things in heaven; these are matters, of which in proportion as we feel them deeply, we should be the less inclined to talk lightly. It is in our conduct, and not in our professions, it is in the tenour of all we say and do, that our blessed change is to be made manifest. It is by a holy life, as well as by an edifying conversation that we should make our light shine before men. It is when they see our good works, as well as hear our good words, that they will glorify our Father which is in heaven. See Matth. 5. 16.

May our hearts be touched by the love of Christ! May our souls be made clean through his most precious blood! May our sins, forgiven for his merits' sake and healed by his grace, no longer make us hurtful to our brethren, nor hateful in the sight of Him, who is "of purer eyes than to behold evil." Habak. 1. 3.

Christ healeth one sick of the palsy.

1 ¹ And again he entered into Capernaum after some days; and it was noised that he was in the house.

2 And straightway many were gathered together, insomuch that there was no room to receive them, no, not so much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them.

3 And they come unto him, bringing one sick of the palsy, which was borne of four.

4 And when they could not come nigh unto him for the press, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the sick of the palsy lay.

5 When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.

6 But there were certain of the scribes sitting here, and reasoning in their hearts,

¹ Matt. 9. 1.

7 Why doth this man thus speak blasphemies? ² who can forgive sins but God only?

8 And immediately when Jesus perceived in his spirit that they so reasoned within themselves, he said unto them, Why reason ye these things in your hearts?

9 Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk?

10 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins, (he saith to the sick of the palsy,)

11 I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine house.

12 And immediately he arose, took up the bed, and went forth before them all; insomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, saying, We never saw it on this fashion.

² Job 14. 4. Is. 43. 25.

§ 117. That we should desire rather spiritual than earthly blessings.

One of the most obvious things noted in this miracle, as already related by St. Matthew, 8. 1—4, was the close connexion between sin and suffering. From this account of St. Mark we may do well to draw the lesson of their comparative importance, to consider how much more deeply to be deplored are the ailments of the soul, than those of the body. Not so, it seems, thought they who brought unto our Lord the sick of the palsy. For they scrupled not, whilst He was preaching the word to a crowd so great that the doorway was impassable, they scrupled not to interrupt his discourse by letting down this sick man on his bed through the roof. Jesus, who in all his words and works would teach us to think no evil, treated this their eagerness as an argument of their faith, so far as they had means to believe. Let us learn, however deeply we may be otherwise engaged, when applied to for assistance or advice, let us endeavour to see, in the importunity of those who apply, not rudeness, but zeal; not a subject of vexation or rebuke, but a motive to our kind and courteous attention.

“When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.” He will not be diverted from his spiritual teaching. He so complies with the application for help to the body, as to point to the far greater importance of health in the soul. He desists from preaching the word to the multitude, only that He may preach it to the sick of the palsy, “Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.” He first heals the inner, then the outward man. Both things were to Him alike easy. But He would have us know that both are not alike important. And that for which we press most eagerly He withholds, till He has enforced the preeminence of the other. Would the bearers of that couch have so waited at the door, so climbed on the roof, broken up so eagerly the covering of the chamber, and so boldly have let down at the feet of Jesus their helpless burden, had the object of their prayer been, not the healing of his palsy, but the forgiveness of his sins? We fear that they would not; if, at least, we may judge from our own too eager longing for this world’s health, this world’s blessings, from our own too cold indifference to those which Christ offers in the world to come. Well it is, if for a time He withhold what first we ask, and so teach us to ask first, for what most we need. Power He had on earth to forgive sins. Power He hath in heaven, where now He sitteth on the right hand of God. See Heb. 10. 12. Power He hath, and will have, in that day when He shall come in the glory of the Father to judge the quick and dead. See 1 Pet. 4. 5. This power let us beseech Him to exert for the healing of the soul. And as for the infirmities of the body, any sufferings or sorrows which in this mortal life our fallen frame is heir to, let us feel them to be light in the comparison, nay helpful, if we rightly use them, to our eternal health.

This health, which consists in the forgiveness of sin and in the grace of holiness, this health of the spirit within, ought to be, we here learn, the first object of our anxiety, as well in behalf of others as for ourselves. Let us then for our fellow creatures labour ever to do good after this sort. Let us pray, and work, and give, with a view to instruct the ignorant, and to reclaim the wicked, and so bring our brethren unto Christ, if by any means their sins may be forgiven them. And for ourselves, let us take shame to think how deep has been our affliction under the loss of health perhaps, or wealth, or friends, compared with the dull apprehension we feel of the misery of our lost estate, of the frailty of our souls, and of the extent of their iniquity in the sight of God. These things let us henceforth try to feel more deeply, that we may before Him more heartily deplore them. And neglecting in the comparison the very chiefest of this world’s goods, let us aim, above all things, to obtain from Christ this gracious sentence, “Son, thy sins be forgiven thee.”

Hear, Lord, our prayers for those we love! Hear, Lord, their prayers for us! Forgive, we pray Thee, them their sin! Forgive us, we pray Thee, ours!

Christ calleth Levi; eateth with publicans and sinners.

13 And he went forth again by the sea-side; and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 ¹ And as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alphaeus sitting ^{||} at the receipt of custom, and said unto him, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15 And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples: for there were many, and they followed him.

16 And when the scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?

17 When Jesus heard it, he saith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

18 ² And the disciples of John and of the Pharisees used to fast: and they come and say unto him, Why do the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but thy disciples fast not?

19 And Jesus said unto them, Can the children of the bridechamber fast while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast.

20 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

21 No man also seweth a piece of [†] new cloth on an old garment: else the new piece that filled it up taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worse.

22 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles: else the new wine doth burst the bottles, and the wine is spilled, and the bottles will be marred: but new wine must be put into new bottles.

¹ Matt. 9. 9.

^{||} Or, at the place where the custom was received.

² Matt. 9. 14. Luke 5. 33.

[†] Or, raw, or, unwrought.

§ 118 The limit of Christian festivity.

Levi the son of Alphaeus is the same with Matthew the writer of the first Gospel. He appears to have been the last called of the twelve apostles. Jesus passing by near the sea side saw him sitting at the receipt of custom. That is to say, he was engaged in the work of his calling, as a publican, or receiver of the public customs. This was a business most disgraceful in the estimation of the Jews, who objected to paying tribute, as they were now forced to do, to the Roman government. And besides, owing to the plan on which all taxes used then to be collected, it was a business which led commonly to the practice of extortion and fraud. (See Lect. 29.) Yet when one only was wanting to fill the number of the apostles, it was from "the receipt of custom" that Matthew was called. So little in the matter of our Christian calling, so little signifies our worldly business or quality, in comparison with our inward disposition. To the poor no less than to the rich, to the despised no less than to them that are in honour, to all under the dispensation of the Gospel, is it given, if the fault be not their own, to become as apostles of Christ, to shew forth, in their respective stations, the power of his Gospel, and holiness of heart.

Jesus, we read, refused not to sit at meat in the house of his apostle Matthew, and in the company of many who were in the same condition of life. At this act of condescension the Pharisees were inclined to take offence. "They said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners?" The answer, and the example also of our Lord, serve to shew us how much we should mistake our duty, if we were to abstain from all intercourse of society with such as we might suppose to be greater sinners than ourselves. We should choose indeed in preference the company of the good. And some risk of evil we cannot fail to run from communication with those who have less regard for God. This risk, however, we are to guard against by prayer and watchfulness; not to avoid it by exclusive retirement from the world. Therein it is our duty, at once to exercise our own faith, and hope, and charity; and to promote, as much as in us lies, among all with whom we come in contact, the growth of Christian grace. However forward be our progress, we may still continue ourselves to be in the number of publicans and sinners. Nor are there any so far gone in iniquity, but that we are bound herein to treat them with brotherly love. According to the degree of our connexion with them, by neighbourhood or birth, service or mastership, membership of the same family, household, or church, we must eat and drink with them, deal or confer; and so seek by our conversation to win them unto Christ, rather than by their rejection to justify ourselves.

Here then we have a rule for our associating with others. As in the answer which follows, to the disciples of John, and of the Pharisees, we find corresponding directions applicable to our Christian duty, in the use of meats and drinks. These, and such other enjoyments as God has in his goodness given unto man, we are allowed in some cases to partake of, as well as in some instances exhorted to refuse. "As long as the bridegroom is with them," the children of the bridechamber "cannot fast." The new spirit of the Christian dispensation was no more fit to be confined by the severe system of the elder covenant, than new cloth is to be sewn on an old garment, or new wine to be put into old bottles. There is a time for all things. The Gospel does not enjoin unmitigated austerity of life. Seriousness and self-denial are to be varied with cheerfulness, and with the thankful receiving of "every creature of God." 1 Tim. 4. 4. Let us then endeavour, through God's grace, to discharge both duties, to unite in ourselves both tempers. Let us continually fast, by never exceeding the bounds of temperance and sobriety of mind. Let us feast continually, by thankfully enjoying all God's good gifts, as well those of his providence, as those of his grace.

Christ teacheth that the sabbath was made for man.

23 ¹ And it came to pass, that he went through the corn fields on the sabbath day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

24 And the Pharisees said unto him, Behold, why do they on the sabbath day that which is not lawful?

25 And he said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him?

26 How he went into the house of God in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shew-bread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?

27 And he said unto them, The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath:

28 Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

¹ Matt. 12. 1.

§ 119. How we may best profit by the Christian sabbath.

The disciples on the sabbath day are contented to satisfy their hunger with corn gathered as they walked through the fields. So true it is, that a man may be in want of bread, and be not any the less near to Christ; so true, that those whom God most loves He visits often with poverty, hunger, or distress. The Pharisees, who ought to have felt compassion for the disciples in their need, were inclined rather to accuse them of profaning the day of rest. Our Lord, in his reply, first justifies his disciples, and then lays down the true principle of observing the sabbath under the Christian dispensation. In order to justify his disciples to the Pharisees, He argues from their own Scriptures, and from the example of David, that there were cases of necessity in which the letter of the Law could not be followed. He shews also how they who were commissioned from on high, as was David, and as He was Himself, might in such cases dispense with the ordinances of God, whether in such a matter as the shew-bread, or in any other. Thus the disciples had done no more than the Pharisees must own to be allowable. Thus does Christ still justify his faithful servants; pleading for them both his own merits, and the gracious promise of his word, against that evil accuser of the brethren who accuseth them before God day and night. See Rev. 12. 10.

And further He declares, that "the sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath." Whence it would follow that the man himself, his health or life, ought not to be sacrificed to the observation of a law, which was ordained for the relief both of body and soul. And whence it would follow, in the second place, that "the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath." For He is the Lord of all that has been ordained for the good of man, Himself the ordainer of it; the Son, not of man only, but of God; the Son, by whom the worlds were made. See Heb. 1. 2. To commemorate that work of creation, to remind man, throughout all generations, of his high original at the hand of God, to refresh his body, and to prepare his weary soul for the rest of heaven; for these ends was this portion of time set apart from the beginning, the hallowing of this day enjoined on all mankind, the command renewed in the law of Moses, with a solemn admonition to remember it, and fulfilled or enforced in a more spiritual application, by the Gospel to the disciples of Christ.

This then is the gracious reason assigned by our Lord for our observing it, "the sabbath was made for man." This the rule by which we are to observe it, "the sabbath was made for man." For our good and not for our harm; for our rest and help unto holiness; not for our privation in the comforts of this life, but for the improvement of our condition in those good things which belong to the life that is to come. The sabbath was made for man; for man's good. Let not its return become, by too strict a rule, a snare to the consciences of mankind. The sabbath was made for man; for man's good. Never let us, by its profanation or neglect, lose the great advantages, which God doth in Christ on this day offer.

Each sabbath that returns, let us remember ere the day begins, that it was made for our good. Let us ask ourselves severally, each evening, as each sabbath ends, what good have I derived from its observance? Have I rejoiced in the opportunity afforded me to suspend the employments of this present world, and to fix my thoughts without let or hindrance on the joys of the world to come? Have I partaken of rest without idleness, and taken, as our blessed Lord allowed, the necessities of life, without indulging in luxurious excess? Have I resorted with zeal to public worship, there prayed with earnestness, and listened to the word there preached with a single view to the edification of my soul? Have I examined thoroughly my conduct during the week past, noted what therein I did amiss, confessed and repented whereinsoever I am aware that I laboured or spake, received or spent, without an eye to God's glory, and to the good of man? And am I now at peace with God? Have I repented with a "repentance to salvation not to be repented of?" 2 Cor. 7. 10. Have I stirred up, by meditating on the word of God, my faith in the merits of his Son, my trust in the promise of his forgiveness through Christ, my hope in the heaven He hath revealed?

God grant, that each time his hallowed day returns, we may find that He hath made it for our good! God grant that in this, and in all his ordinances, we may experience the excellency of his love! God teach us, to the comfort of our souls, that in all the dispensation of the Gospel, He doth not more make us work for his glory, than make all things work together for our good! See Rom. 8. 28.

Christ healeth the withered hand.

1 And ¹he entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand.

2 And they watched him, whether he would heal him on the sabbath day; that they might accuse him.

3 And he saith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.

4 And he saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? But they held their peace.

5 And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the || hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it out: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

6 And the Pharisees went forth, and straightway took counsel with the Herodians against him, how they might destroy him.

7 But Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples to the sea: and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judæa,

8 And from Jerusalem, and from Idumæa, and from beyond Jordan; and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him.

9 And he spake to his disciples, that a small ship should wait on him because of the multitude, lest they should throng him.

10 For he had healed many; insomuch that they † pressed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues.

11 And unclean spirits, when they saw him, fell down before him, and cried, saying, Thou art the Son of God.

12 And he straitly charged them that they should not make him known.

¹ Matt. 12. 9.

|| Or, blindness.

† Or, rushed.

§ 120. How we are to disarm the enmity of the world.

Whosoever, after the example of our Saviour, designs and endeavours to do good, should be prepared to meet with many who will watch that they may accuse him. So ready are men to find fault with any measure of excellence, however small, which exceeds what they purpose themselves to practise! Whether it be that for some Christian end we do on the sabbath day the works of necessity or love, whether we devote, more than they, our time to heaven on other days of the week; in some such way, our conduct will be thought to condemn all who shew not the like zeal, somewhat the world will be sure to censure in those who are not thoroughly conformed to its ways. Now it is not in our power, like our Saviour, to confute these accusations by a miracle. We cannot with like fulness of authority proclaim to the lame, "Stretch forth thine hand." We cannot thus heal them that are plagued with sickness, or compel the unclean spirits to depart at the name of Christ. But from his conduct, as here related, we may learn for our direction the following important rules.

First, that we should justify our zeal, by a sober appeal to the right reason of our fellow creatures. "Is it lawful to do good?" Is it, we may ask them, or is it not, agreeable to your own convictions, that if we do indeed believe in God, we should do all we can to serve Him; that if we do indeed hope for heaven, we should take all the pains we can to go there? Can any one be really injured, can any law be broken, any harm be inflicted by our activity, if we are active in doing good? If not, why should you find fault with those, who exercise in such matters more zeal, devote to them more thought, more time, more wealth than yourselves? We do not thus in order to condemn others, but in order to save from condemnation ourselves. Our aim is to do the will of our Saviour Christ. And so far are we herein from exulting over you, that we have learnt from his word, even of your greater negligence to think no evil, even in your indifference to these duties, yet to hope for you all things. See 1 Cor. 13. 5, 7.

Secondly, we learn hence, that if ever anger is allowable, if ever we can be angry and sin not, see Eph. 4. 26, it is when we are angry against sin, and when our anger against sin is tempered with a lively concern for the sinner. Our Lord had no sooner looked round in anger on his enemies, than He proceeded to work a miracle for their conversion. So must we also in our utmost indignation at the daring iniquity, or unjust censure of mankind, so must we also be devising always the most effectual means, to soften their enmity and improve their hearts. Nor shall we find any means so serviceable, nor so near perhaps in their judgment to a miracle, as for us to requite their ill treatment with unfeigned affection, and to give proof of our affection in words of gentleness, and works of kindness. "A soft answer," we know, Prov. 15. 1, "turneth away wrath." Much more does a kind action disarm displeasure; and the warmth of charity make to melt the heart that is most hardened in opposition and ill will. See Rom. 12. 20.

Thirdly, if our enemies proceed, notwithstanding, from censure to persecution; we learn hence how it is our duty to withdraw ourselves in time from the threatened evil. "But Jesus withdrew himself with his disciples." And afterwards for the like reason He charged the unclean spirits that "they should not make him known." Let us, like Him, endeavour to prove, that in the work of doing good, it is God's glory we have at heart, and not our own. Let us shew forth in what we do, and in our manner of doing, not the love of ourselves, but the love of God, and of our neighbour. Jealousy will thus be best appeased when we make no pretence to being superior. And censure will be most effectually silenced, when we aim not to condemn, but to convert our neighbour. And having taken all means of peace to avoid the persecution of the ungodly, we shall have the comfort of reflecting, whether we are subject to it or not, that herein the same mind is in us, "which was also in Christ Jesus." Phil. 2. 5.

Christ ordaineth his twelve apostles.

13 ¹ And he goeth up into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him.

14 And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach,

15 And to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils:

16 And Simon he surnamed Peter;

17 And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder:

18 And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the son of Alphæus, and Thaddæus, and Simon the Canaanite,

19 And Judas Iscariot, which also betrayed him: and they went || into an house.

20 And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not so much as eat bread.

21 And when his † friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, He is beside himself.

¹ Matt. 10. 1.

|| Or, home.

† Or, kinsmen.

§ 121. How we ought to attend the ministry of the word.

We here read of the first ordination or appointment of ministers by our Lord. We shall do well therefore to observe its object and the manner in which it was done. Its object was that the apostles should be with Christ, and that "he might send them forth to preach, and to have power to heal sicknesses, and to cast out devils." By their being with Him, they were to learn his doctrine, to remember his sayings, and to be able to bear true witness to the chief events of his life, his death, and his resurrection. By their miraculous powers of healing, they were to prove to others the truth of what they spake, and to enforce, as by divine authority, the duties they preached. The manner of their appointment was, that Christ went up into a mountain, and called unto Him "whom he would. And he ordained twelve." Of which twelve it is remarkable that they afterwards forsook Him; and that amongst them were both Peter who denied Him, and Judas Iscariot "which also betrayed him." This ordaining then did not insure that they would of necessity be in all instances faithful and obedient. Nor did it hinder there being one in the number for whom it had been good "if he had not been born." Matt. 26. 24. It gave them the privilege to be with Christ. It gave them authority to preach his word. And yet it left them liable to transgress as before; at liberty, such is the liberty of sin, to do dishonour to his doctrines, and despite to his grace.

Hence we learn, that an ordination or outward appointment is necessary for the due authority of Christian ministers. For as these were by Christ themselves appointed, so did they appoint others also after them; and that, as there is every reason to believe in fulfilment of his own directions. Nor can any emergency now justify men in taking this office upon themselves; any more than the lack of labourers in the vineyard, would have induced these twelve to go forth and preach, before they had the sanction of their Lord. And further we learn, that as the ministers of Christ derive, when duly ordained, their authority from Him; they are entitled to the respect of the flock, not by virtue of any zeal or holiness of their own, but by reason of their office, and of its divine appointment. Judas, we see, had the same mission as the rest, preached the same word, wrought the like miracles, and ministered, for aught we read to the contrary, with the like success. Wherein we may well admire the wisdom of that Providence, which, having to work by means of beings so frail as men, has made the uses of their ministration, in great measure, independent of frailty in the ministers themselves. The treasure, is "in earthen vessels," 2 Cor. 4. 7; but the vessels are to be had in honour for the treasure's sake, and for his sake who hath committed it to their care.

Nor should we here fail to observe, that the great object of those who are thus appointed is, that, like the apostles, they should both be with Christ, and go forth and preach in his name. With Him they should be frequent in meditation and in prayer, they should be intent on doing the will of their Father which is in heaven. They should conform to his example, their thoughts, their desires, their employments; and so go forth continually to enforce on others the gracious truths of his Gospel. Whilst those who hear the word should imitate in their attentive zeal, the anxiety of that multitude, who so waited on the preaching of Christ and his apostles, that "they could not so much as eat bread." The world indeed, and they even whom the world calls our friends, would be ready in such case to say of us, as of Christ, "He is beside himself." But with St. Paul we might most truly reply, "I am not mad, most noble Festus." Acts 26. 25. With him we might prefer in sober earnest the truth of God's word to the applause of men. And whensoever both cannot at once be enjoyed, whensoever our Christian improvement is incompatible with our worldly interest, the madness on our part would be for us not to neglect even the support of the body, for "that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." John 6. 27.

Grant, Lord, to thy ministers, that they may feed thy sheep! Grant, Lord, to thy people, that they may reverence thy word, and all those whom thou hast ordained to teach it! Incline us "to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake," 1 Thess. 5. 13, for that work which thou hast given them to do, and which is, in their hands, not theirs, but thine.

Christ speaketh of blasphemy, declareth who are his near relatives.

22 And the scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, ¹ He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils.

23 And he called them unto him, and said unto them in parables, How can Satan cast out Satan?

24 And if a kingdom be divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand.

25 And if a house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand.

26 And if Satan rise up against himself, and be divided, he cannot stand, but hath an end.

27 No man can enter into a strong man's house, and spoil his goods, except he will first bind the strong man; and then he will spoil his house.

28 ² Verily I say unto you, All sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, and blasphemies wherewith soever they shall blaspheme:

¹ Matt. 9. 34.

² Matt. 12. 31.

³ Matt. 12. 46.

§ 122. That we should draw near to Christ by zeal in his service.

That men were really possessed by devils, and that Christ did really cast them out, was neither denied nor questioned by these scribes who came down from Jerusalem, for the very purpose, as it should seem, of finding fault with our Lord. That which they plainly saw, they could not at the same time gainsay. They took therefore the only remaining method of disparaging these miracles; they ascribed them to the evil influence of Satan. "He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils casteth he out devils." Our Lord first points out the absurdity of supposing that Satan would "cast out Satan." He argues that no house could prosper by being divided against itself; and that no one can spoil the possessions of an enemy except by first binding him and restraining his power. Then, "because they said, He hath an unclean spirit," He adds the fearful denunciation of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. This offence therefore consisted in those very words, "He hath an unclean spirit." It was the ascribing to Satan those miracles which they could not deny to be supernatural, but would not attribute to the Holy Spirit of God. The great aggravation of the sinfulness of these words was the determined purpose of unbelief which animated those who uttered them. They saw, with their own eyes, the casting out of the devils. They might have known, with the least consideration, that only by the Spirit of God could this be done. To say then that it was done by Beelzebub was to blaspheme against God the Holy Ghost, and was enough to prove themselves unworthy, if not incapable, of any further conviction. For no means can be conceived by man, and certainly none have been adopted by God, so powerful for convincing the human mind, as that which we call a miracle. That sickness should cease, and health return, at a word or at a touch; that evil spirits, after manifest possession, should be utterly and triumphantly cast out, these are things which must prove to all beholders that "this is the finger of God." Exod. 8. 19. And they who perversely refuse such proof of God's agency, can have no prospect of being converted by any other means to that faith and repentance of heart, without which there is no hope of forgiveness.

Such seems to have been the great aggravation of this blasphemy against the Holy Ghost. So that no man can, strictly speaking, be guilty of it, now that miracles are no longer to be seen. But though we see them not, yet are we justly taught to acknowledge, "O God, we have heard with our ears, and our fathers have declared unto us, the noble works that Thou didst in their days, and in the old time before them." (Litany.) Near then to the enormity of this sin do all they approach, who, either in words or writings, ascribe to any other than divine agency the miracles of Christ and of his apostles. Most carefully, therefore, should we abstain from countenancing, in the slightest degree, any such conversation, or from handling and encouraging any such books as tend to throw discredit on the Gospel of God.

Better it were, like the mother and brethren of Jesus, to stand without, merely desiring to see Him, better to have been born in heathen lands where they neither see nor hear of Christ, than either to see or hear of his works, without humbly believing in his word. Not that by any waiting, expecting, or sending, not that by any application of others only, we can obtain the blessings of faith, or enjoy the privileges of true kindred with our Lord. No, it is by doing the will of God, by so hearing as to believe, by so believing as to practise, by so seeking as to go to Him, rather than wait for Him to come to us, it is by zeal and obedience such as this, that we might not only stand guiltless of blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, but be counted also for his mother and brethren by Himself. They stood without; let us press within. They called from afar; let us fall down as at his knees. They sought Him perhaps on some business of trifling moment. Let us apply for his grace unto the saving of our souls. Then, instead of the rebuke they met with, we shall receive the praise He promised. Brothers and sisters shall we be counted unto Himself; joint heirs with Him in eternal glory.

The parable of the sower.

1 And¹ he began again to teach by the sea side : and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, so that he entered into a ship, and sat in the sea ; and the whole multitude was by the sea on the land.

2 And he taught them many things by parables, and said unto them in his doctrine,

3 Hearken ; Behold, there went out a sower to sow :

4 And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it .

5 And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth ; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth :

6 But when the sun was up, it was scorched ; and because it had no root, it withered away.

7 And some fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit.

8 And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased ; and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some an hundred.

9 And he said unto them, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

¹ Mat. 13. 1.

§ 123. A Christian view of our natural advantages.

The sower here spoken of is our Lord Himself. The seed is the word of his Gospel. It is that word, as set forth in the Scriptures, or as it is preached faithfully from the sacred volume by his appointed ministers. Strange it is to think how day by day these glad tidings of salvation are proclaimed, and yet so many of the hearers remain unmoved, unconverted to a Christian life ! The parable before us assigns the true reason of this sad failure of the heavenly seed. It is part only of the ground that is good. It is part, and that only as one part in four, only as a small part of the ground that is good. Few only of those, which are thus called, are in the end found fit to be chosen. Few only of those who thus hear the word, are fit to bring forth fruit unto perfection.

Not that we may suppose any ground of itself to be good. God it is who both soweth, and giveth also the increase. He it is who by his grace maketh the ground capable of yielding true holiness, and peace, and joy. Only there is some ground which answers to his care ; and there is other, which yields no return. And this parable, therefore, plainly shews us that the fault, when the seed fails, is not in the seed, but in the ground ; not in the word preached, but in them that hear. The Author of salvation has appointed in his wisdom all fitting means for the edification of mankind. In his mercy He has applied to our hearts every motive they are capable of feeling, for our effectual turning unto Himself. Yet in some of us, as in a highway, the seed comes not up at all. In some, as in stony ground, it comes up, only at once to wither. In some, as among thorns, though it come up and grow, yet doth it yield no fruit. And only in the “good ground,” only in what our Lord is pleased graciously to call “an honest and good heart,” Luke 8. 15, doth it bring forth fruit unto perfection. The defect then is in the heart of the hearer. It is that corruption and perversity of will which we naturally inherit from fallen Adam ; but which it is utterly our own fault if we follow, or encourage in ourselves. For it is clear from this parable that the Sower does his part faithfully, bountifully to all, to all alike ; that He sows as if all might bring forth fruit. Nay, we doubt not that, under the influence of his grace, many, else most reluctant to do good, are made to bear some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

And this should check our too fond conceit of such natural advantages as each man is apt to reckon on in himself, to the disparagement of his neighbour's capacity. It is not only in respect to spiritual attainments that men are tempted to say in their hearts to God, “I thank thee that I am not as other men are.” Luke 18. 11. This reflection is no less common in regard to natural faculties, in regard to sense, or memory, or judgment, or ingenuity ; in regard to temper of mind, or even strength of body. These things make us more or less able to do God good service ; more or less capable of eminent usefulness to each other. These and other such like faculties, in which we either abound or are wanting, make us more or less resemble the different kinds of ground which are set forth in the parable before us. And so far we are apt each of us to esteem ourselves amongst the best, that there is perhaps no one who would be willing, on taking all things into account, to change his own head and heart for another's. Let us consider then of these advantages we so highly esteem, first, that they are the gift of God for our probation. Let us put to ourselves, if we are tempted to be proud of them, the question which St. Paul asks in another matter : “Who maketh thee to differ from another ? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive ? Now if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it ?” 1 Cor. 4. 7. Secondly, let us reflect that those to whom we seem in one thing superior, are probably in some other point as much superior to us ; are certainly, for aught that we can know to the contrary, as much objects of God's tender care as we are ourselves. And, thirdly, let us ever bear in mind how also we have to enter into a state where the distinctions which here prevail are unknown, where it shall be “as with the people so with the priest, as with the servant so with his master ;” Isai. 24. 2 ; where “whether there be tongues, they shall cease ; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away ;” 1 Cor. 13. 8 ; and they only shall be counted wise or strong, who have been found to be “wise unto salvation ;” 2 Tim. 3. 15 ; “strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.” Eph. 6. 10.

Christ expoundeth the parable of the sower.

10 And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve asked of him the parable.

11 And he said unto them, Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables:

12 ¹ That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them.

13 And he said unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will ye know all parables?

14 The sower soweth the word.

15 And these are they by the way side, where the word is sown; but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was sown in their hearts.

16 And these are they likewise which are sown on stony ground; who, when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladness;

17 And have no root in themselves, and so endure but for a time; afterward, when affliction or persecution ariseth for the word's sake, immediately they are offended.

18 And these are they which are sown among thorns: such as hear the word,

19 And the cares of this world, ² and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful.

20 And these are they which are sown on good ground: such as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some an hundred.

¹ Matt. 13. 14.

² 1 Tim. 6. 17.

§ 124. The responsibility of our Christian privileges.

As there are differences in our natural faculties and dispositions, so are there also in the degrees of light which we enjoy, in our opportunities of knowledge, and of grace. Unto us, we may say thankfully of ourselves, unto us, as opposed to many other countries, to many other families, to many other persons, unto us "it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God." In what age or nation could we conceive ourselves to have been born, in what station of life to be placed, of what church to be members, where more than in our own we may know, and, if it be not our own fault, may do also God's will? How great is the responsibility we thus incur! How precious the trust committed to us! How fearful the account we have to render unto Him who hath made known to us the parables of his Gospel, the offer of his grace, the hope of his inheritance in heaven!

And whilst we say this thankfully towards God, let us see that we say it also humbly of ourselves, and charitably also towards "them that are without," who are destitute of these manifold advantages. For here again we should call to mind who it is that maketh us to differ from others. See 1 Cor. 4. 7. To us it is given to know the mystery of the Gospel; but it is a mystery which to many is still hid. Christianity is to the heathen, and the true Christian life is to many a one called Christian, a parable which they cannot understand. They have sight to see, and yet perceive not. If heathens, they might know from the things they see, that truth of God which is invisible. See Rom. 1. 20. They might know it, if Christians, from the word of God. If they know it not yet, let us hope that they may know it soon. Let us consider how to us who know it now, who are now well acquainted with the will of the Father, and the way of access through the Son; let us consider how to us, if we do not that will, if we walk not in that way by the Spirit, to us it is the greater sin.

Great as are our privileges, we are not therefore the more safe. Nor have we any of us the more reason to presume. None there are but are exposed to the wiles of Satan, ever going about to take the word out of their hearts. None but are liable to "affliction or persecution" "for the word's sake;" to the discouragements of ill example, ill conversation, or evil communication; as hindering their progress in true piety. None but run risk of being engrossed by the "cares of this world," seduced by "the deceitfulness of riches," or led captive by "the lusts of other things entering in." Some of us are more exposed to one kind of temptation, and some to another. But in any case, if only we hear the word of the Gospel, there is sown in us the seed of life. Whether it be as on the way side, or as on stony ground, or as among thorns, the fault is ours; and on us, under such circumstances, that seed is sown in vain. Whilst they who, under like conditions, hear the same word and keep it, are for that very reason the good ground, because that through grace they keep it.

Having then this parable here explained to us by our Lord Himself, let us take heed that we apply it to the improvement of our hearts. Let us endeavour that from this hour his seed may never in us be sown in vain, his word never heard without amendment of life. For the more clearly it is given to us to know these mysteries of the Gospel dispensation, the more deeply must we answer for it if we neglect them. If thus seeing, so as to behold the truth, we perceive not, that is, behold not with faith; if thus hearing, so as to be aware of our duty, we hear not, that is, hear not so as to obey; so much the more surely will it be our sentence, for our punishment, that we shall not be converted, nor have our sins forgiven us.

God grant that the word sown in our hearts may spring up in us unto everlasting life! God make us, according to our ability, to bring forth fruit in due season! God teach us at once to make allowances for our brethren, and to distrust ourselves; at once to be thankful for the privileges we have received, and yet ashamed to think how little we have improved them!

The parables of the candle, the seed, and the mustard tree.

21 ¹ And he said unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a || bushel, or under a bed? and not to be set on a candlestick?

22 ² For there is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was any thing kept secret, but that it should come abroad.

23 If any man hath ears to hear, let him hear.

24 And he saith unto them, Take heed what ye hear: ³ with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given.

25 ⁴ For he that hath, to him shall be given: and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath.

26 And he said, So is the kingdom of God, as if a man should cast seed into the ground;

27 And should sleep, and rise night and day, and the seed should spring and grow up, he knoweth not how.

28 For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herself; first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear.

29 But when the fruit is [†] brought forth, immediately he putteth in the sickle, because the harvest is come.

30 And he said, ⁵ Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what comparison shall we compare it?

31 It is like a grain of mustard seed, which, when it is sown in the earth, is less than all the seeds that be in the earth:

32 But when it is sown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and shooteth out great branches; so that the fowls of the air may lodge under the shadow of it.

33 ⁶ And with many such parables spake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it.

34 But without a parable spake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his disciples.

¹ Matt. 5. 15.

⁴ Matt. 13. 12.

|| The word in the original signifieth a less measure, as Matt. 5. 15.

[†] Or, ripen.

⁵ Matt. 13. 31.

² Matt. 10. 26.

⁶ Matt. 13. 34.

³ Matt. 7. 2.

§ 125. The gentle growth and sovereign power of divine grace.

At the end of the parable of the sower, we are reminded of the use of parables, to make clear the truth, and to enforce it more effectually on our attention. As the candle, which for a time may be concealed, is intended rather to be set on a candlestick; so whatsoever is in Scripture hidden, whether in parable or prophecy, or in any other method, is covered only for some present good, and shall in the end be of a certainty made manifest. By reason of man's weak apprehension, of his incapacity to receive at once all that is good for him to know, many things are at first kept secret. Many things relating to the ways of God are withheld from one generation, and revealed to another, or to the very same persons are for a time only obscure, and afterwards the bright source of hope and joy. All this is so ordered only for our good, only that hereafter, either in this world or in the next, we may know God better, and love Him more.

Let us then, as our Saviour bids us, take heed how we hear. Let us consider that we have to answer for what measure of attention we pay to his blessed word. Let us study with diligence and soberness, even the most difficult of his sayings; knowing that his grace will be imparted, not according to the measure of our ability, but according to the use we conscientiously endeavour to make of it. For they who have, and use knowledge, will be sure to have the more bestowed on them. Whilst they who use not for the best what they already have, must expect to have it for their sin taken from them.

In the two parables which follow, we may learn by what gentle means and to what a wide extent the Gospel of grace is to be spread abroad, both over the world in general, and also in the heart of each single Christian. First, of the growth of Christian faith amongst the human race, we observe that it was sown by its divine Founder, in the brief ministry of scarce three whole years. During this period, and for some short space afterwards, the power of the Almighty was exerted in miracles to aid its establishment. Thenceforward it has been left, as far as man can discern, to grow as of itself. It has sprung up, like the corn, without any help that we can see. And in its growth it has already, like the mustard tree, from a small seed become greater than all herbs. From the congregation of one hundred and twenty, which we read of in the Acts, 1. 15, it has compassed the wide extent of many nations, and these the most powerful and enlightened of mankind.

But, secondly, it is in our own hearts, and in the effects there produced by the Gospel of Christ, that these parables should be most amply realized. There it is that, by the mercy of God, the gifts of grace have been bountifully sown. Cast they have been, as seed into the ground; not violently, forcibly planted, as some reckon, at full growth; but gently and gradually springing up; “first the blade, then the ear.” First conviction of sin may have been felt, and from conviction has come sorrow, from sorrow repentance, with repentance faith, and with faith that holiness of life, which is, as the full corn in the ear, ripe for the harvest of eternity. Thus by no sudden irresistible conversion, but by a growth, which, whether slow or rapid, is healthy, seasonable, and sound, thus should the very least of seeds, the preaching of the lowly Jesus, grow up to predominate in our hearts, over every other principle of action. The cross may seem at first a stumblingblock, at first we may esteem perhaps of small account the sufferings of Him who died thereon. But in proportion as we perceive that He bare our sins, and was wounded for our transgressions, then doth He become to us the one thing needful, and his kingdom as that greatest of all plants, under the shadow of whose branches we most desire to lodge. This world, how small it seems in the comparison, its cares how trifling, its pleasures how vain! Ourselves how vile! and He how precious! We helpless; and He all our strength! We lost; and He all our salvation! Happy are we when thus we see Him as He is; and find Him to be to us the tree of life; and eat; and live for ever!

Christ stilleth the raging of the sea.

35 ¹ And the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side.

36 And when they had sent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ship. And there were also with him other little ships.

37 And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and say unto him, Master, carest thou not that we perish?

39 And he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40 And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?

41 And they feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?

¹ Matt. 8. 23.

§ 126. That the terrors of the Lord are revealed for our good.

This miracle is the more striking by reason of the great power of winds and waves, which we are accustomed to consider amongst the most violent things in nature, and which were here rebuked and made calm. Whatever is done plainly beyond the course of nature is well suited to convince us that God is interfering. And the greater is the power interfered with, the more forcible is the evidence of God manifesting Himself. If then we would feel the whole force of the evidence here afforded, we should conceive ourselves in the situation of these apostles, overtaken during the darkness of the night by a sudden and violent storm; the waves all the while beating into the ship, "so that it was now full." Now in such an emergency what hope has a creature so weak as man? No power that he knows of on earth can be relied on to save him from instant death. A believer in Christ will trust, under the most fearful circumstances, that Providence ordereth all things for the best. But he will scarce expect to have allotted to him the continuance of life; or, if the means of escape should occur, he has no notion that the winds will on a sudden cease, or the waves at a word be still. On the contrary, he is well assured that both will take a long time to grow calm; and that if he should at length survive, it must be after the perils of wreck upon the shore, or after being tossed about at many risks in the shattered vessel. What then would be the force of our convictions, if in the midst of such an emergency as this, we were to see one in the form of a man arise, and rebuke the wind and the sea, saying, "Peace, be still?" What, I say, if we should see the wind and the sea obey Him? We could not doubt that this was done by the authority of One greater than man, even by the arm of God Himself. We could not refuse to receive what was taught by One who did this mighty work, as the revelation of the will of God. This then is the first lesson we should learn from so great a work; to adore the great Being through whose power it was done; to receive with faith that revelation of his which it was plainly wrought to sanction.

And, secondly, we may hence learn of the most formidable things this world exhibits, that there is nothing here so much to be feared as God who made them. The apostles, who had been frightened at the violence of the storm, were yet more impressed with awe at the suddenness of the calm. "They feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him?" Awful then as are the commotions of the angry elements, frightful as are the winds and waves, and lightnings and thunderings of the storm, let us learn to fear rather that boundless Power which could in a moment make them still. He it is, even God, who made all things, He who permits them thus to swell and rage together, He who controls for the good of his creatures their disturbance or their rest, their war or peace. Never then let us suppose He cares not "that we perish." Never let us doubt that even the terrors of the Lord are set forth out of his love for our souls, and out of his fatherly concern for safety.

Here we see, how in the storm of wind and waves, He contrived that by their sudden calming they should prove Jesus to be the Christ, and his word the will of God. Whenever then we witness the like war of elements, let us be reminded of this miracle, and of Him who said effectually, "Peace, be still." Let these his words bring to our hearts, if not to things around us, a cheerful calm. Let them make us firm and faithful under all the terrors this world can present. And when we read even of that lake "which burneth with fire," Rev. 21. 8, let us remember, that from that fire the same Power can protect us, and the same voice confirm the safety of the soul. He careth that we perish not. He made, He hath redeemed all. And all would He make holy by his grace, and seal as his saints from the wrath to come. Even that wrath He hath revealed only for our good; only that we might the more earnestly endeavour to escape it, only that through fear we might learn to love, and to love the more as we have from more been saved, through Christ our Lord.

Christ casteth out the legion of devils.

1 And ¹ they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes.

2 And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit,

3 Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains:

4 Because that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5 And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones.

6 But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshipped him;

7 And cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee ~~by~~ God, that thou torment me not.

8 For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.

9 And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion: for we are many.

¹ Matt. 8. 28.

§ 127. That we live in a world of spirits.

From St. Matthew we learn that there were two men thus possessed, though St. Mark and St. Luke mention only one of them. The dwelling of this poor man among the tombs, his violence towards himself, his crying day and night, all these represent to us the sad condition of any one who is subject to the possession of Satan. Can we then in any sense, in any degree, be thus possessed? Certain it is from Scripture that there are evil spirits who lie in wait for our souls; that they have power, in some manner unknown to us, to tempt us into sin; and that they rejoice, such is their malice, to hinder our eternal salvation. In the book of Genesis at the fall of man, and in Job at the account of his being tried, we hear only of one such adversary. Here we read, "My name is Legion: for we are many." St. Paul, too, very plainly warns us, Eph. 6. 12, that we have to wrestle, not only "against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers;" which he explains to mean those evil spirits, who rule over all that is dark and wicked in this world. No doubt then we are liable to be assailed by them. No doubt there can be, that if we resist them not, they will gradually gain more and more possession of our souls. The man thus devoted to destruction may perhaps neither cut himself nor cry out. But what wounds can be more deadly than those which he is daily inflicting on his spiritual frame by each act of sin? What ery more painful, than that which must soon burst from him in the appointed place, where "shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth?" Matt. 8. 12.

The conviction that we are encompassed with enemies, so numerous, so malignant, should fill our thoughts with deep anxiety to defend ourselves from their renewed assaults. Let us not, however, mistake the only method of success. Let us not fail to have recourse to that divine Saviour who alone can cast them out. No man could bind him that was possessed. So neither can any arm of flesh, any strength of our own motives and resolutions, restrain in our hearts those evil propensities which Satan therein stirs up. Vainly should we suppose, that any earthly considerations, as those of prudence, character, or the like, can enable us to avoid the commission of offence, or can suffice to make us pure, charitable, or just. The fetters of this world, the obligations of expediency which this world suggests, may restrain us within the bounds of outward propriety, but they afford no safeguard, either against sin in the heart, or against those evil spirits who aggravate continually its sinfulness. By these will such chains be soon plucked asunder, such fetters soon broken in pieces. Christ and his faith can alone deliver us; his word, and that only, can effectually command, "Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit." To Him then, and to his word, let us have recourse, whatever be our besetting sin; whether the spirit that would possess us work by pride or passion, by the mammon of this world, or by a cold and deathlike indifference to the next.

And observe what is really meant by coming or drawing nigh to Christ. It is thinking of Him more frequently, and so drawing nigh to Him in our minds. It is loving Him more fervently, and so drawing nigh to Him in our hearts. Nigh to us He is ever in reality, whether we perceive Him or not. Whilst our senses are full of this world's objects, we have around us ever another world; a world into which death will in one moment bring us; a world of spirits. Continually do they watch over our souls, some prompting us to evil, some ministering to us for good. But above them all, even as their Lord and Master, is He who once took on Him our flesh, that He might bring us nearer unto Himself. Let us then no longer see Him as afar off; but knowing Him to be near, let us live as though He were near, let us live as walking in the light of his countenance. We live in a world of spirits. Let us then mortify the flesh; and give to things spiritual our most earnest attention. Let us in spirit, in heart and soul, not in form only and outward profession, serve ever our Lord Jesus Christ, the "Son of the most high God."

Grant, Lord, that we in our distress may run from far to worship Thee; may spare no time, or toil, or speed, in finishing the work Thou givest us to do! Cast out from us all evil spirits, all pride and passion, covetousness and sloth! And fill us instead with all good gifts, with grace, and holiness, and peace, and joy!

The evil spirits enter into the swine.

10 And he besought him much that he would not send them away out of the country.

11 Now there was there nigh unto the mountains a great herd of swine feeding.

12 And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand;) and were choked in the sea.

14 And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

15 And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

16 And they that saw it told them how it befel to him that was possessed with the devil, and also concerning the swine.

17 And they began to pray him to depart out of their coasts.

18 And when he was come into the ship, he that had been possessed with the devil prayed him that he might be with him.

19 Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.

20 And he departed, and began to publish in Decapolis how great things Jesus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

§ 128. How we should endeavour to promote the faith of others.

The legion of evil spirits beg that they may not be sent out of the country of the Gadarenes. This was because they hoped yet to work much harm to the ignorant inhabitants. Would that they who endeavour to do good, might hence learn the duty of perseverance! Would that the children of light were as patient, as steadfast, as resolute, in their calling, as are in theirs the spirits of evil! They ask leave to enter into the swine; having contrived, as it should seem from the event, having contrived by this means, to tempt the owners of the herd to the sin of rejecting Christ. Our Lord suffers them to do so; "forthwith Jesus gave them leave." Hence we learn, that even under the dispensation of the Gospel, evil is still for a while permitted by God. And we cannot doubt, that if we faithfully eschew it and do good, it will redound in the end to our advantage. We may learn further from what befel the herd of swine, how malignant is the disposition of evil spirits, we may see to what swift destruction they would bring all and every one to whom they could have access. How greatly then are we indebted to that gracious Being, who preserves, from their power and malice, not our bodies only on earth, but our souls also in heaven! who permits their assaults for our greater good; and who giveth us, if only we be faithful to Himself, in spite of their utmost fury, giveth us the victory.

The Gadarenes were now more frightened by the healing of the demoniac, than they had been before by the apprehension of his violence. They saw him "sitting and clothed, and in his right mind; and they were afraid." So apt are the ignorant and the wicked to fear where no fear is, whilst they brave without alarm the terrors of eternity. "And they began to pray him to depart out of their coasts." Here we see how the wiles of Satan succeed with the covetousness of mankind. The evil spirits had besought Christ, saying, "Send us into the swine." They then destroyed the swine. And the people, feeling aggrieved at the loss of their herd, besought Christ to depart out of their coasts. They fell into the sin of preferring their vile herd to the preaching of the Gospel by the Lord of life. And we may conceive Him to have suffered the legion to tarry with so carnal minded a people, on purpose that their obstinacy might be made fully manifest, for a warning to the whole Christian world. If He suffer them to tarry among us too for our trial, let us so much the more take heed and beware of covetousness, let us so much the more beseech Christ to remain with us, and not to depart, but to come nigh and help us. Let our danger, and our sense of it, make us so much the more devotedly to put our trust in his power, and our hope in his grace.

And when happily by his goodness we are enabled to escape, when we are made sensible of what we owe to our Deliverer, let us learn further from his words on this occasion, the true method of expressing our thankful love. "He that had been possessed with the devil, prayed him that he might be with him. Howbeit Jesus suffered him not, but saith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." It is our Christian duty towards our friends, to impart to them our Christian knowledge, and our Christian hope; and we cannot do any service more acceptable to our Saviour, than to make known to those most near and dear to us his gracious work in the saving of the soul. And yet elsewhere, we know, He counsels us to leave father even, and mother, husband or wife, in order to follow Him. See Mark 10. 29. That is to say, He would have us ready to sacrifice our dearest affections, when they would lead us astray from his service; but when they may be made to promote his honour, then we are to go home, as it were, to our friends. We are to explain to them, and persuade them to adopt any thing we may have learnt of religion more than they. We are to urge it on their consciences, by the testimony of our own experience, and still more by the weight of our example. For of this we may be sure, that no argument we can use, will be one half so effectual, as our own visible improvement in humility, and truth, in sobriety, temperance, and charity, and in all other graces of the Gospel of Christ.

Christ healeth the woman of the bloody issue.

21 And when Jesus was passed over again by ship unto the other side, much people gathered unto him: and he was nigh unto the sea.

22 ¹ And, behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jairus by name; and when he saw him, he fell at his feet,

23 And besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live.

24 And Jesus went with him; and much people followed him, and thronged him.

25 And a certain woman, which had an issue of blood twelve years,

26 And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse,

27 When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched his garment.

28 For she said, If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole.

29 And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague.

30 And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?

31 And his disciples said unto him, Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

32 And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33 But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth.

34 And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

¹ Matt. 9. 18.

§ 129. It is through Christ that faith maketh whole.

Our Lord was on his way to the daughter of Jairus when this healing of the issue of blood took place. The ruler of the synagogue, in his daughter's extreme illness, had applied for the assistance of Christ, and had now to wait for his arrival. Thus the great and the wealthy, no less than the poor, are subject to the visitations of sickness and of sorrow; and must alike wait God's good time for their deliverance. As Jesus went, "much people followed him and thronged him." Some probably went out of curiosity; some perhaps out of a desire to find occasion of offence; but one at least, we know, out of need, out of faith, out of devotion. Thus many times in the Christian community, thus many times in the house of God's worship, numbers enter, or stay, through worldly considerations, for one that comes in the true sense of spiritual need, in the true faith that Christ can heal.

This woman, for her complaint, had suffered many things of many physicians, and "had spent all that she had." So ready are we for the body's health to sacrifice all other objects whatsoever; and yet so slow for the well being of the soul, so slow, either to suffer or to spend. Strange that for an issue of blood one should feel so deep affliction, and so confidently apply for its healing unto Christ; and yet that in our more afflicted state of frailty, our more foul and fatal issue of sinfulness, we should so faintly feel the need of healing, so feebly put our trust in Him from whom only virtue can come out! In applying to the physicians, this woman is to be thus far commended; for whatever be our infirmity or our need, we ought to use all human help we can. To neglect such means would be to tempt God. To put our trust in such means is a more common failing, but it is no other than to be living "without God in the world." Eph. 2. 12. 'This if we were to do in our spiritual infirmities, if we were to rely on our own strength, or on the help of our fellow creatures, we must look for no other success than the woman in her sickness, to be nothing better, but rather to grow worse.

Our Lord, we should here observe, knew in an instant the whole that had taken place; as well that virtue had gone out of Himself, as that the woman had through faith become whole. He sees then, let us remember for our comfort, not only our secret sins, but our most private acts of genuine faith. The more studiously we abstain from ostentation, the more highly will He approve, the more surely save us. The more humbly we fear and tremble, the more have we here encouragement to come forward unto Christ; and to lay hold on the garment of his healing love. "Thy faith hath made thee whole," is his cheering sentence; recorded for the consolation of all who believe. Though it was indeed the virtue that had gone out of Himself, yet does He ascribe the healing to the faith of the person healed. Though it is only through his grace, and the atonement of his death, that we can attain everlasting life; yet does He describe this great gift of God as the wages of our obedience to his will. He it is who alone can make whole, alone save from sin and death. And if He saith it is our faith, let us remember that even our faith is not our own, but his who giveth us the grace to believe.

And here we should mark how it is said of Jesus that He knew within Himself that "virtue had gone out of him." Whence it follows, that in Christ Himself dwelt the power by which all these miracles were performed. When the prophets or apostles did like wonderful works, we never read that the virtue came out of themselves. We are reminded rather, as in the Acts, c. 19. 11. that it was God who "wrought special miracles by the hands of Paul." But here the miracle wrought by Christ is ascribed to virtue in Himself. He therefore Himself was the Author of the healing. He, who had been the Maker of the world He overruled. Praised be his name, that virtue is gone out of Him to heal our infirmities, and that faith is given, if only we in earnest pray for it, the faith which can make us whole.

Christ raiseth from the dead the daughter of Jairus.

35 While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house certain which said, Thy daughter is dead: why troublest thou the Master any further?

36 As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he saith unto the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only believe.

37 And he suffered no man to follow him, save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38 And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly.

39 And when he was come in, he saith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth.

40 And they laughed him to scorn. But when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.

41 And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise.

42 And straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with a great astonishment.

43 And he charged them straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

§ 130. How we may be raised from the death of sin.

Whilst our Lord was being thronged by the crowd, and conversing with the woman who had so signally been healed, the daughter of Jairus, whom He was proceeding to visit, in the meantime died. We read not however that the ruler was impatient under the delay. And we shall do well to learn never to grudge any good happening to our neighbour out of the apprehension that it may interfere with our own. For it is usually so ordered by divine wisdom, that the advantage one receives shall not hinder, but rather promote, the benefit of another. And if the damsel was in this instance permitted even to die, it was only that by her restoration to life her father's joy might be increased, and our faith also effectually confirmed. "Be not afraid, only believe," are the words of our Lord, on hearing the sad tidings, "Thy daughter is dead." These words of his we may consider as applying to all those cases of impenitence, or spiritual death, which, whether in others or in ourselves, seem to be most hopeless. For such let us not fail to apply in prayer to Christ. For such, however deeply we fear God's displeasure, let us not for a moment be afraid of his power failing, if only it be his will to raise the dead.

Dead indeed are they who live in this world destitute of that principle of heavenly life which the Gospel is designed to implant. Dead are the hands which are not stretched forth to give. Dead is the tongue that utters not the voice of prayer and praise; dead the heart which feels no love for man, no thankfulness to Christ for his redemption, no joy unspeakable in the hope of heaven above. Many times we must have felt with sorrow this deadness in ourselves, must have wondered at our own coldness in things spiritual; must have mourned to think to what a crown of glory we are called, and how little we think of it, care for it, or desire it. Whether then our consciences thus testify of ourselves, or our anxiety is excited for those we are bound to love, let us in either case obey the injunction here given us by our Lord, "Be not afraid, only believe." An entire trust that God is able, a deep conviction that He is willing, through Christ, to bring unto the knowledge of Himself even those who are most widely estranged; this is what should allay our anxiety in behalf of others, these the motives with which we should continually stir up our own too reluctant hearts.

Then shall we find true also that other gracious sentence of our Lord, "The damsel is not dead but sleepeth." Not as though she was not then really dead; but that death, before Christ, and under the power of his hands, is but as a sleep, from which we shall be summoned by his word, "I say unto thee, arise." Thus may we find it true also in the sleep of sin. Thus may we in our helpless frailty be made by his grace to rise and to walk also in his righteousness and peace all the days of our lives.

Two things our Lord enjoined after this miracle. The first was, that no man should know it; that is, that it should not be so noised abroad as to rouse the jealousy of his enemies, or to imply in Himself any desire for distinction. And further, "He commanded that something should be given her to eat." This might be to prove that she was really alive again as before. It might be designed also to shew us that the special mercies of God do not exempt us from the necessity of using all ordinary means of support. The damsel raised from the dead had need to eat as before in order to sustain life. The soul once effectually converted by divine grace, must wait reverently on all ordinances for future help, for the nourishment of spiritual life and growth. Let something ever be given it to eat. Let prayer be put up for it, and by it, without ceasing. Let it be fed daily with the milk of the word. Let it be nourished with meditation on God's goodness, and on the redeeming love of Christ. Let it be strengthened by the conversation of the godly, by conference on things heavenly, and on heavenly hopes. And hungering, as it thus surely will, for righteousness, let it have ever for its meat and drink to do the will of our Father which is in heaven.

Christ is contemned of his countrymen.

1 And he went out from thence, and came into his own country: and his disciples follow him.

2 And when the sabbath day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue: and many hearing him were astonished, saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?

3 Is not this the carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his sisters here with us? And they were offended at him.

4 But Jesus said unto them, ¹A prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own house.

5 And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them.

6 And he marvelled because of their unbelief. ²And he went round about the villages, teaching.

¹ Matt. 13. 54.

² John 4. 44.

¶ The word signifieth a piece of brass money, in value somewhat less than a farthing, Matt. 10. 9. but here it is taken in general for money.

³ Matt. 10. 14.

⁴ Acts 13. 51.

⁵ Matt. 9. 35. Luke 13. 22.

⁶ Matt. 10. 1.

⁷ James 5. 14.

§ 131. The excuses and the strangeness of unbelief.

His own country, to which our Saviour is now said to have come, was Nazareth, not where He was born, but where He had dwelt from his infancy with Joseph and Mary. There, as it appears from this passage, He had wrought with his supposed father in the business of a carpenter. "Is not this," say they who dwelt there, "is not this the carpenter?" This circumstance may teach us to respect any honest and industrious calling. It may convince all, who work in this or in any other laborious employment, that they are not therefore the less objects of God's love, through Christ, who, whilst on earth, Himself thus wrought. And hence we may do well to turn our thoughts to the excellency of his divine workmanship; to the power and skill of Him by whom the worlds were framed, see Heb. 1. 2; 11. 3; and who saith both of the heavens and of the earth, of the heart of man, of his duty and of his hopes, "Behold, I make all things new." Rev. 21. 5.

That the work He had in hand might more readily be advanced our Lord began at this time to send forth by two and two his twelve apostles, giving them power over unclean spirits, and directions proper for the errand they had in hand. Here we should observe how absolutely He bestows this power as his own gift; as being Himself the Ruler of the universe, to whose will all things were subject, whether visible or invisible. And in the next place let us note how entirely He trusted the success of his apostles to the force of the doctrine they had to preach, and to the divine power which was to sanction it. They were to neglect all ordinary means of human provision. They were to take nothing for their journey, besides a staff to walk with, to be content to lodge at the first house they entered into, and throughout to proceed as persons who felt themselves under such plain guidance and support from God, as no one else has ever had reason to expect. A third thing to be remarked in this commission of the apostles is this: that it shall be more tolerable in the day of judgment for Sodom and Gomorrah, than for the cities which would not receive their preaching. What they preached was that men should repent. And what made men refuse their preaching, was that they chose not to amend their lives. And what made those who so refused more sinful than the men of Sodom and Gomorrah, in God's sight, was this, that they were preached to, not by patriarchs, but by the apostles of Christ, not by angels, but by the blessed Son.

For of our Lord Himself it is here recorded, that even the men of his own city would not receive Him. "They were offended at him." They excused themselves in neglecting the word of Christ by their familiar acquaintance with his former occupation. Whilst the Jews at Jerusalem on the other hand declared, "As for this fellow, we know not from whence he is." John 9. 29. So easy is it to find objections to the truth, if the heart is averse to receive it! So ready is the hearer of religious discourse to elude the conviction it affords, by trying to find fault with the preacher! As if the authority of Christ's miracles and word depended upon his having been previously either unknown or known! As if the deficiencies, or even sins of his ministers made it one whit less the bounden duty, one whit less the most important interest, of their hearers, to save their souls alive! "And he marvelled because of their unbelief." He wonders at what He would have us wonder at; namely, our folly and hardness of heart, in refusing, if we do refuse, the preaching of the Gospel. God calls us; and we will not come. Christ speaks; and we will not listen. The Holy Spirit moves us; and we resist. Heaven is before us, and we care not to enter in. Hell is at hand, and we fly not to escape.

God grant that we may not wonder only; but from wonder come to shame and sorrow; from sorrow to repentance, faith, and holiness of life.

Herod puts John the Baptist to death.

14 ¹ And king Herod heard of him; (for his name was spread abroad :) and he said, That John the Baptist was risen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do shew forth themselves in him.

15 Others said, That it is Elias. And others said, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.

16 ² But when Herod heard thereof, he said, It is John, whom I beheaded: he is risen from the dead.

17 For Herod himself had sent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in prison for Herodias' sake, his brother Philip's wife: for he had married her.

18 For John had said unto Herod, ³ it is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife.

19 Therefore Herodias had ⁴ a quarrel against him, and would have killed him; but she could not.

20 For Herod feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and ⁵ observed him; and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly.

21 And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birthday made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee;

¹ Matt. 14. 1.

² Luke 3. 19.

³ Or, kept him, or, saved him.

22 And when the daughter of the said Herodias came in, and danced, and pleased Herod and them that sat with him, the king said unto the damsel, Ask of me whatsoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee.

23 And he swore unto her, ⁶ Whatsoever thou shalt ask of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom.

24 And she went forth, and said unto her mother, What shall I ask? And she said, The head of John the Baptist.

25 And she came in straightway with haste unto the king, and asked, saying, I will that thou give me by and by in a charger the head of John the Baptist.

26 And the king was exceeding sorry; yet for his oath's sake, and for their sakes which sat with him, he would not reject her.

27 And immediately the king sent ⁷ an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the prison,

28 And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damsel: and the damsel gave it to her mother.

29 And when his disciples heard of it, they came and took up his corpse, and laid it in a tomb.

³ Lev. 18. 16.

⁴ Or, an inward grudge.

⁵ Or, one of his guard.

§ 132. The vanity of this world's judgment.

"Herod," it is said, "feared John, knowing that he was a just man and an holy, and observed him: and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly." Here we have a case of that stony ground, which receiveth the word "with joy." Ch. 13. 20. Here we see how little use it is to hear, even gladly, unless we obey also willingly. Many hear like Herod, and fear, and do many things; who yet do not the one thing needful. See Luke 10. 42. They put not away their favourite sin, they part with all, except that very Herodias, who will in the end bring them to destruction. Let us, when we hear God's word, do not only many things, but all; all things we hear to be our duty. All let us, at least, try to do, in good earnest; least of all, allowing ourselves in the neglect of that one, which we know to be to ourselves most hard.

It was on "a convenient day" that Herodias and her daughter compassed this guilty design. If the heart be bent on evil, it will not have long to wait for opportunity. It may be hard to find a season for well doing. It may be difficult to set apart a convenient hour for prayer, or reading of God's word, for visiting the sick, for clothing the naked, for setting free them that are in prison; or for giving our attention and help to any such good works as these. But if we have a passion to indulge, vanity or revenge to gratify, excess to commit, or slander to report; we find readily for sin, a convenient season. It was when "Herod on his birthday made a supper to his lords." So different were his feelings when he heard John preach, and when he saw the damsel dance! So wide apart, unless we duly watch, are our thoughts and purposes at a sermon, and at a feast! See how easily the most appropriate festivities may degenerate into sin! Who, that is duly thankful for the blessings of life, would fail to note with joy the day of his birth? Who, that has ability to entertain his friends, should be backward, on such occasions, to receive them hospitably? Only let us beware, that in our festive moments there be no forgetfulness of God. Only let us watch, lest, in an hour we think not, Satan catch away the word out of our hearts; entice us, out of regard to the praise of man, to transgress the commands of God. Only let us in our festivity never become like unto those, in whose feasts are "the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine;" but "they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hand." Is. 5. 12.

Whilst Herod and his nobles are feasting, whilst the daughter of Herodias is dancing before them, John the Baptist is bound in the prison. He who was sanctified from the womb, ushered into the world with prophecy and miracle, is now loaded with chains; his chamber is dark, and cold, and lonely; his food is "the bread of tears," and "plenteousness of tears to drink;" Ps. 80. 5; whilst the wicked are glorying in their shame, and enjoying the abundance of the earth. Hence we should learn not to take any one's lot in this life for an evidence of his place in the esteem of God. Hence we should accustom ourselves to consider, when surrounded by the comforts of affluence and ease, when beloved by friends, and respected by the world; we should consider that there may be those in the prisons near us, among the most abject and abandoned of mankind, who, in God's sight, rank higher than ourselves. And hence we should continually try to direct our views from the fallible judgment of man, and from the unfinished scheme of Providence on earth, to the end of all things in heaven; to the consummation of goodness, justice, and truth, in the judgment of Christ at the last day.

Christ feedeth five thousand with five loaves and two fishes.

30 ¹ And the apostles gathered themselves together unto Jesus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught.

31 And he said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leisure so much as to eat.

32 And ² they departed into a desert place by ship privately.

33 And the people saw them departing, and many knew him, and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him.

34 ³ And Jesus when he came out, saw much people, and was moved with compassion toward them, because they were as sheep not having a shepherd: and he began to teach them many things.

35 ⁴ And when the day was now far spent, his disciples came unto him, and said, This is a desert place, and now the time is far passed:

36 Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy

¹ Luke 9. 10.

² Matt. 14. 13.

³ Matt. 9. 36.

⁴ Matt. 14. 15.

|| The Roman penny is seven-pence halfpenny; as Matt. 18. 28.

§ 133. That we never lose by hearing and obeying the Gospel.

The gathering together of the apostles to Jesus, to tell Him what they had done and taught, may remind us how needful it is for ourselves, neither to do nor to say nay thing but what we would willingly tell to our blessed Lord. To Him we must in the end tell all things, give account of all before his judgment seat: of all that we have done ourselves, of all that by our conversation or by our example we have taught others to do. "And he said unto them, Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest a while." Even apostles must sometimes rest. Even the sacred calling of the Christian ministry is compatible with some kind of relaxation. Even the labours of each single Christian, our wrestling in prayer, our striving for the mastery, our patient continuance in well doing, are graciously tempered, according to the will of Christ, with intervals of refreshment and repose.

In their retirement they are soon surrounded by a multitude, who "ran afoot thither," so great was their zeal! "and outwent them," so eager their speed! So little should we spare fatigue of body, or patient attention of mind, when we may hear the preaching of the Gospel! So eagerly should we forestal the exhortations of our teachers; resorting rather of ourselves, than waiting to be invited and pressed, to God's house or to his sacraments, to the presence of Christ in our common prayers, to the communion of his blessed body and blood! "And he began to teach them many things." This was the first food He offered to these sheep without a shepherd, the edification of the soul. Let this be the first food we too care for, the daily bread we chiefly pray for, the meat we labour for, the wealth, the prosperity, the kingdom we seek for above all. Then shall all other things be added unto us, all things really needful for us; all things He judges to be needful, who alone knows what is for the best.

Thus did He in his good time, "when the day was now far spent," satisfy with food the hungry multitude, who had so long listened to his teaching. Feeding them abundantly with five loaves and two fishes, to the number of five thousand men, He inculcated on them, and through them on us, that, in all means of natural and of spiritual sustenance, it is God who "giveth the increase." 1 Cor. 3. 6. "And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties." This accounts for the numbers being so exactly mentioned; for they could thus the more easily be reckoned. And observe that Christ gave the food to the disciples, to set before the people. Not as though He could not as easily Himself have waited on five thousand, as have fed them with so few loaves and fishes. Not as though it were not as marvellous for the twelve apostles, who are here meant, as it would have been for any one of them, to minister so readily to so large a multitude. Rather may we observe in this circumstance the settled purpose of our Lord, to work often by human means, and to compass by the ministry of feeble man the work of Almighty God.

On the whole we learn from this passage, that we shall never lose by listening to the teaching of the Gospel, or by obeying the word and the will of Christ. We may often be made to wait: but we shall know both how to wait with patience, and how more to rejoice at the last. We should forget, like this multitude, for our Saviour's sake, the cravings of nature; and we shall have them supplied by the blessings of God's providence, or more than made amends for by abundance of his grace. We should be "careful for nothing," Phil. 4. 6, except for his favour; and we shall then be taken care of by Him, who "fillet the hungry," that is, the poor, and honest, and devout, "with good things; and the rich," meaning those who trust in wealth, those who seek it wrongfully, them He "sendeth empty away." Luke 1. 53.

themselves bread: for they have nothing to eat.

37 He answered and said unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they say unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred ||pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat?

38 He saith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and see. And when they knew, they say, Five, and two fishes.

39 And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies upon the green grass.

40 And they sat down in ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties.

41 And when he had taken the five loaves and the two fishes, he looked up to heaven, and blessed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his disciples to set before them; and the two fishes divided he among them all.

42 And they did all eat, and were filled.

43 And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fishes.

44 And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thousand men.

Christ walketh on the sea.

45 And straightway he constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before ¶unto Bethsaida, while he sent away the people.

46 And when he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray.

47 ¹ And when even was come, the ship was in the midst of the sea, and he alone on the land.

48 And he saw them toiling in rowing; for the wind was contrary unto them: and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the sea, and would have passed by them.

49 But when they saw him walking upon the sea, they supposed it had been a spirit, and cried out:

50 For they all saw him, and were troubled. And immediately he talked with them, and saith unto them, Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid.

51 And he went up unto them into the ship: and the wind ceased: and they were sore amazed in themselves beyond measure, and wondered.

52 For they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened.

53 ² And when they had passed over, they came into the land of Gennesaret, and drew to the shore.

54 And when they were come out of the ship, straightway they knew him,

55 And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds those that were sick, where they heard he was.

56 And whithersoever he entered, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the sick in the streets, and besought him that they might touch ~~it~~ [†]it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched [†] him were made whole.

¶ Or, over against Bethsaida.

¹ Matt. 14. 23.

² Matt. 14. 34.

† Or, it.

§ 134. That we must cherish a lively sense of our Saviour's presence.

It appears to have required some effort to persuade the apostles to part from their Master. "He constrained his disciples to get into the ship, and to go to the other side before." It is well when we thus love our Lord and Saviour; when we grieve, as we perform the voyage of this present life, to be apart from his blessed presence. In many respects may our existence be compared to this passage of the disciples over the sea of Galilee. We have a sea to cross, the waves whereof are many times high, the wind contrary. Our night is dark, as compared with the light in which God dwelleth; with the day of glory in which we hope to dwell for ever. "He constrained the disciples to get into the ship." We choose not for ourselves, but God chooseth for us, when we shall be born, and in what condition of life, under what degree of light and grace our faith and obedience shall be tried. "And when he had sent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray." Whilst we toil on earth, our Lord has ascended up on high, and in heaven is making intercession for us. "And he saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary." We must not think to pass over without toil. We have to strive, to wrestle, to run as in a race, to row as against waves and wind. And the wind is contrary. The current of affairs in this world sets strong against our heavenward course. Readily it would help us the other way. Swiftly would the cares and pleasures of life hurry us, unless we toil and strive against their influence, far distant from the haven where we would be.

But though we grieve to be thus absent from our Lord, let us remember, for our comfort, He sees our toil, and in the hour of peril He will come nigh to help. At a distance, and in the dark, He saw the disciples in their difficulty. He seeth afar off, even in heaven, his dwellingplace. He seeth us, and those purposes and struggles of ours, which we deem most secret in the soul. And "He cometh unto them walking upon the sea." Well might they have applied to Him that Scripture, which must have often occurred to them in their former occupation. "Thy way is in the sea, and thy paths in the great waters." Psalm 77. 19. But instead of knowing his footsteps, they "were troubled." They had not sufficiently "considered the miracle of the loaves." He, who could multiply food for their support, could walk also on the waters for their assistance. He can, in some way we know not, come nigh to us in all our trials, walk as on the waves of our affliction, and say to our troubled hearts, "Be of good cheer: it is I; be not afraid."

Hence let us for ourselves conclude, first, that all we do, and all we suffer, we do and suffer under the eye of God; under the eye of our Saviour Christ; who seeth us, and willeth not that we perish, but rather that we should be converted and live. Let us accustom ourselves to think of his presence, not with fear only, but with hope and joy; not to cry out, as though it were a spirit, that is, with superstitious terror, but to apply to Him as to a friend, who is able "to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him." Heb. 7. 25. Secondly, let us learn not to be cast down, though in many things we seem not immediately to enjoy the help or comfort of his presence. He "would have passed by" the disciples. That is, as we read in another instance, "He made as though he would have gone further." Luke 24. 28. Though He hide away his face from us for a time, though we feel within ourselves no cheering consciousness of his assisting grace, He is not less sure, if only we have faith, to give us, in the end, salvation. And thirdly, the more lively is our own faith, the more deeply we are convinced of our Saviour's presence for our good; so much the more diligently let us, like the people of Gennesaret, when we know Him ourselves, make Him known to others. Let us, by our life and conversation, make plain to all around us, that heaven is the harbour we are toiling to attain; and that He, through whose help we hope to reach it, is Jesus Christ our Lord.

Christ reproveth the Pharisees for finding fault with the disciples.

1 Then ¹ came together unto him the Pharisees, and certain of the scribes, which came from Jerusalem.

2 And when they saw some of his disciples eat bread with ^{||} defiled, that is to say, with unwashen hands, they found fault.

3 For the Pharisees, and all the Jews, except they wash their hands [†] oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders.

4 And when they come from the market, except they wash, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the washing of cups, and [†] pots, brassen vessels, and of [§] tables.

5 Then the Pharisees and scribes asked him, Why walk not ~~the~~ disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?

6 He answered and said unto them, Well hath Esaias prophesied of you hypocrites, as it is written, ² This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.

7 Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.

8 For laying aside the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

9 And he said unto them, Full well ye [¶] reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition.

10 For Moses said, Honour thy father and thy mother; and, Whoso curseth father or mother, let him die the death:

11 But ye say, If a man shall say to his father or mother, It is ³ Corban, that is to say, a gift, by whatsoever thou mightest be profited by me; he shall be free.

12 And ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother;

13 Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered; and many such like things do ye.

¹ Matt. 15. 1. ^{||} Or, common.
about a pint and an half.

[†] Or, diligently: in the original, with the first: Theophylact, up to the elbow.
[§] Or, beds.

² Is. 29. 13. Matt. 15. 8.

[¶] Or, frustrate.

³ Matt. 15. 5.

§. 135. That we must beware of sin without condemning the sinner.

The Pharisees and scribes were displeased with the disciples for eating with unwashen hands. For they, it appears, had a tradition, that is, a rule or custom, handed down from father to son, of washing often, when they ate their meals. This practice they did not so much as pretend to derive from the law of Moses; but they set up, in these matters, the tradition of man, as of equal authority with the revelation of God. Accordingly they "found fault," asking our Saviour: "Why walk not thy disciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwashen hands?" He applied to them, in answer, a prophecy of Isaiah: "Howbeit in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." And next He proved the truth of this application, by an instance where the word of God, and the tradition of the Jews, were at variance. For the Law commanded all to honour and succour their parents. But the Jews had a tradition which allowed them to evade this duty by dedicating their substance to God.

And this is the common course, when men take upon them to add any thing as of equal authority with God's commands. They come at last to enjoin what is directly the reverse. First, they give to their own devices an undue importance. Next, they lay aside the commandment of God. Then they contradict and overturn it. This was the course of the Jews in their traditions. Adding these to the Law, they soon set them above, and also against, the Law. This has been the course of that corrupt church, of which Rome is the head. Adding to the Scriptures her own authority, as of equal weight, her rulers keep out of sight God's word, and teach also things exactly the reverse. This too is the course of those extravagant teachers, who, whether in any church, or in none, preach under the notion that they are themselves inspired. Their own fancies, the doctrines and duties of man's invention, they add to the Gospel of Christ, and in the end make to supersede it.

Let us beware of these fatal errors, which make of none effect the word of God, obscure that sun which should give light unto the soul, and blunt that two edged sword, which alone can pierce our hardened hearts. See Heb. 4. 12. But whilst we note what is wrong in order to avoid it, let us at the same time avoid judging, or censuring, or condemning, those who avoid it not. Whilst we flee from evil ourselves, we must endeavour to think no evil of others; but to make for them all charitable allowances, to entertain for them all charitable hope. For in the instance of these scribes and Pharisees, we may see how hateful a thing it is, to be looking out for sins in others, whilst we are blind all the while to our own. Their censure is turned by our Lord against themselves. They set up for judges, and are pronounced to be hypocrites. The disciples might have violated the tradition of the elders. But the scribes and Pharisees had transgressed God's law. Nothing so much helps us to overlook our own deficiency, as this prying into the faults of our neighbours. Whilst we would pull out a mote from our brother's eye, we cannot so much as see the beam that is in our own. When we shall have become faultless ourselves, when we in all things honour our parents, and obey in all things those who are in authority over us, when we believe in Christ entirely, repent thoroughly, and obey perfectly; then will be time, but it is a time that will never come, then will be time, but we shall then have no longer any taste, for finding fault. Meantime let us search into and reform our own lives. Meantime let us pray for our neighbours, both that they may be no less good than ourselves, and that we may esteem them better. See Phil. 2. 3.

Christ teacheth what things defile the man.

14 ¹ And when he had called all the people unto him, he said unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and understand :

15 There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him : but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man.

16 If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.

17 And when he was entered into the house from the people, his disciples asked him concerning the parable.

18 And he saith unto them, Are ye so without understanding also ? Do ye not perceive, that whatsoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him ;

19 Because it entereth not into his heart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats ?

20 And he said, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man.

21 ² For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders,

22 Thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness :

23 All these evil things come from within, and defile the man.

¹ Matt. 15. 10.

² Gen. 6. 5. & 8. 21. Matt. 15. 19.

§ 136. That out of the heart are the issues of life.

The doctrine here laid down is to be considered as most important to all of us ; for our Lord, before He declared it, “called all the people unto him,” and “said unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and understand.” It is not enough for us to hear. It is not enough even to hearken, or hear with attention. It is not enough day by day to listen to God’s word here read, or week by week to wait upon the preaching of his word in the church. We must also understand. And for this end we must take very earnest pains. We must prepare ourselves for hearing, with some such thoughts as these : I am about to hear the words of life and death, doctrines which, according as I believe in them or not, will minister to the saving, or condemnation of my soul. I have no business on earth to be compared for importance with this. I have no prospect of advantage so great, as what I may in this book hear of. I have no peril so awful, as that against which I may here be warned. If my thoughts would wander to any projected employment of the coming hours, to any expected pleasure, or apprehended pain ; let me consider, that here I may be told of employment far more deeply concerning me ; of pain far more grievous, and how to avoid it ; of far more exalted pleasure, and how to enjoy it for ever. Thus then, “if any man have ears to hear,” thus “let him hear.” Thus let us hearken to the doctrine which our Lord has here laid down.

It is not the food we eat, the drink we partake of, but the intemperate desire, or the sensual indulgence, with which we crave or receive these things, this it is that renders us in God’s sight unclean. It is not whether our hands are washed or unwashed, but whether they have taken or not taken that which is not ours, that which is not needful for our healthful support, whether they are actuated by a selfish or by a charitable spirit, whether they are lifted up for violence, or stretched out in works of mercy ; on these things we here learn it mainly depends, whether we be defiled or pure, in the estimation of our heavenly Judge. Try to understand this thoroughly, and apply it to your practice continually. And whilst yet you understand not, so as to act accordingly, apply like the disciples, with prayer to Christ ; ask Him concerning the parable, beseech Him to enlighten your thoughts, and to incline also your hearts to obey.

It is the heart, as He here teaches you, that God looks to, the faith which is there cherished, the works of faith which thence come forth. If in it are entertained, or out of it proceed, “evil thoughts,” that is, so much as wicked wishes, these “defile the man.” If in the heart there be “adulteries, fornications,” or any kind of uncleanness, “murders,” or even hatred of a brother, “thefts,” or any dishonesty, “covetousness,” or the love of the world, “an evil eye,” or a disposition to find fault ; if in the heart there be “blasphemy,” whether by swearing, cursing, or lying, “pride,” whether in spiritual or in worldly advantages, or “foolishness,” and especially that wisdom of this world which is “foolishness with God,” 1 Cor. 3. 19 ; if out of the heart these proceed, or are in it, however secretly entertained, they do “defile the man,” they make him to be vile, foul, and hateful, as he is seen by Almighty God.

From these, then, wash yourselves ; from these pray God that you may be washed clean in the fountain of his mercy through Christ. From these defilements pray that his grace may preserve you spotless. From these keep “with all diligence” each his own heart ; for “out of it,” as saith Solomon, Prov. 4. 23, “are the issues of life.” Within are the defilements, within must be the cleansing also. There, where conscience speaketh. There, where the Holy Spirit moveth. There, where Christ, if He dwell at all with you, dwelleth. There you must first be holy, there clean, there pure ; and then, behold, all things are pure unto you. See Tit. 1. 15.

Christ complieth with the prayer of a Syrophaenician woman.

24 ¹ And from thence he arose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entered into an house, and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid.

25 For a certain woman, whose young daughter had an unclean spirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet:

26 The woman was a || Greek, a Syrophenician by nation; and she besought him that he would cast forth the devil out of her daughter.

27 But Jesus said unto her, Let the children first be filled: for it is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs.

28 And she answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs.

29 And he said unto her, For this saying go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.

30 And when she was come to her house, she found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed.

¹ Matt. 15. 21.

|| Or, Gentile.

§. 137. How we should love and how pray for each other.

Our Lord visiting for some good end these strangers of Tyre and Sidon, "entered into an house, and would have no man know it: but he could not be hid." This should be our aim in what little good we are enabled to do for each other. We should enter as by stealth into the abode of poverty, making no parade of our alms, or of our prayers; of our zeal for God's honour, or for the good of man. And in cases where it is our duty to make our light shine before men, we should take care that we do so, with no desire that they may more highly esteem ourselves, but with the sole intent that they may more greatly glorify our Father which is in heaven. Then only are we safe in being made manifest, when, like our Saviour, we would be, but cannot be, hid.

To the woman who applied in behalf of her daughter, our Lord made answer, as though He would not have complied with her request. "Let the children first be filled;" the children of Israel, the people with whom Jehovah had made a special covenant, and to whom, according to the promises made unto their fathers, Jesus Christ was especially a minister. See Rom. 15. 8. The woman was a Greek, that is, a Gentile, not one of the family of Abraham. And our Lord's reply to her may serve to shew us, that in a choice of duties, we should carefully consider to which we are most bound by our own proper place and calling. A wayward inclination may prompt us to labour in some other field. But "let the children first be filled." Let us do good to those to whom we are sent, to our own families and friends, to them who are of the household of the same faith, see Gal. 6. 10; and so in order and degree to all mankind. "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it unto the dogs." It is our duty to relieve strangers. But it is not meet to relieve them at the expense of our neighbours; to the detriment of these stronger claims on our assistance. It is our duty to love all mankind. But it is not meet so to spread our affection over the world, as to dilute the strength of the regard which is due to those most near to us. Let us love as warmly, and help as readily, our nearest friends, as they do who love and help none others; whilst at the same time we both cherish a true concern for all men, and exercise also according to our ability a readiness to do all men good.

The woman "answered and said unto him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs." Where God gives much faith, as in this woman, He tries it much. And where He tries it much, this is in order that it may be strengthened, as we see in her, and be blest with a proportionate reward. If often He thus deal with us in our prayers for spiritual healing, if He deny us for a time the gifts of grace, let us learn so much the more highly to value them, so much the more earnestly to plead for them. Let us learn to persevere in prayer; and let us own all the while with humility, that we are unworthy so much as to gather up the crumbs that fall from our Master's table. Then will He "for this saying," if we say it honestly, if we feel it deeply, then will He bid us go our way in peace; He will give us to our souls' health, the bread of life.

Hence, too, we may learn the duty of praying, not only for ourselves, but for each other. It was for her daughter that this woman applied. And He who from her daughter cast forth the devil, can relieve also from the possession of evil desires, from the miseries of sin and death, our parents or children, brethren or sisters, relations and friends. But He requires that we should pray for them, and that urgently. Thus would He bind us to each other by a new and spiritual relationship. Thus do the kind offices of Christian kindred extend beyond the benefits of this present world, beyond the term of this transitory life. Connected we are together by a hope of immortality. And daily should we pray for each other, above all things, that we may be saved; that, as we hope ourselves to dwell with God in heaven, it may please Him to prepare for that blessed place, and to receive into his holy company, the souls of those with whom we here abide.

God help us now to dwell together in love, that then we may dwell together in glory! God make us to be of one mind in an house, and that mind the mind which was in Christ Jesus! God grant, that by forbearance, and forgiveness of injuries, by godly counsel, by kindly help, and by fervent and effectual prayer, we may set forward the salvation of each other!

Christ healeth one that was deaf and dumb.

31 And again, departing from the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the sea of Galilee, through the midst of the coasts of Decapolis.

32 And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech; and they beseech him to put his hand upon him.

33 And he took him aside from the multitude, and put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue;

34 And looking up to heaven, he sighed, and saith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened.

35 And straightway his ears were opened, and the string of his tongue was loosed, and he spake plain.

36 And he charged them that they should tell no man: but the more he charged them, so much the more a great deal they published it.

37 And were beyond measure astonished, saying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to speak.

§. 138. How we may be made, through Christ, both to hear and to speak.

Isaiah had long before set it down, among the signs of the Messiah's coming, that "the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped," "and the tongue of the dumb sing." Is. 35. 5, 6. Here we have these prophecies very exactly fulfilled. They bring to our Lord "one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech." "And he took him aside from the multitude." This we may conceive to have been done to prevent any confusion, any possibility of mistake as to which was the man. Next He "put his fingers into his ears, and he spit, and touched his tongue." This method our Lord used, to shew that it was He and his power that wrought this cure. He then looked "up to heaven;" as teaching whither we too ought to look in any difficulty we are beset with, in any work we undertake. "He sighed;" it may have been in the earnestness of prayer; according to what the apostle writes to the Hebrews, 5. 7, that "in the days of his flesh he offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears." Or it may be, that at the sight of this sufferer, He expressed, by sighing, his kind compassion for the misery that is in the world through sin.

Nor is it here unworthy of our remark, that He thus might signify his concern for the many temptations to which the man was likely to be exposed, by the recovery of his speech and hearing. Better it were for the ears to be ever deaf, than that they should listen with aught of satisfaction to the communing of the wicked. Better that the tongue were for ever tied, than that it should revile, or lie, or swear, than that by any idle word it should utter the irreverence of the heart, or make the hearer to offend. The senses and the faculties God has endued us with are a charge of fearful responsibility. According as here we use them, according to our improvement or neglect of the talent committed to our charge, we shall inherit or be shut out from eternal life. And yet with all the risk of this alternative, the ability to speak and hear, the opportunity of good, are blessings for which we are bound to be most thankful. And the being deaf or dumb, like any other disease of our mortal frame, must be counted for an evil to be deplored, an injury which an enemy has been permitted to inflict. And our Lord, though He might sigh to think how often our senses are abused, was yet, according to his character, doing all things well, in making both the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak.

Hence, then, let us direct our thoughts to that opening of the ears and of the mouth which is vouchsafed to ourselves in the Gospel; to the opportunity we enjoy of hearing God's word, the ability we receive to speak his praise. Because we are sons, as St. Paul writes to the Galatians, and in proportion as we are obedient sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father. See Gal. 4. 6. So also we may in Christ's words hear God speaking to our souls; "for he whom God hath sent speaketh," as Christ Himself tells us, "the words of God." John 3. 34. And in like manner through Christ also has the soul new sight, that faith which is the sight of things unseen, and which the Father hath given us through the Son. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." John 1. 18. These are privileges most high, things which the prophets and kings of old desired in vain to witness, blessings the possession of which entitles us to be reckoned elect of God, predestinated according to his purpose. Let us then very carefully observe that the greater is the excellency of God's mercies, the more perilous is in us the abuse of them. Let us ask ourselves as we rejoice in this enlightening of the spiritual sense, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" Heb. 2. 3. Let us manifest our deep sense of God's goodness in these gifts, not only by the pains we take to improve them in ourselves, but by the zeal with which we publish them amongst others. For whatever privacy our Lord aimed at in his miracles; whatever silence we may observe as to our own proficiency, we should endeavour always, in spreading abroad the knowledge of salvation, to make others, however deaf, to hear; and force ourselves, however dumb, to speak.

Christ feedeth four thousand with seven loaves and a few fishes.

1 In those days¹ the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jesus called his disciples unto him, and saith unto them,

2 I have compassion on the multitude, because they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat:

3 And if I send them away fasting to their own houses, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far.

4 And his disciples answered him, from whence can a man satisfy these men with bread here in the wilderness?

5 And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? And they said, Seven.

6 And he commanded the people to sit down on the ground: and he took the seven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his disciples to set before them; and they did set them before the people.

7 And they had a few small fishes: and he blessed, and commanded to set them also before them.

8 So they did eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left seven baskets.

9 And they that had eaten were about four thousand: and he sent them away.

¹ Matt. 15. 32.

§. 139. That we should love each other as God hath loved us.

Twice it is recorded of our Lord that He fed by a miracle a hungry multitude. And the first instance of his doing so is mentioned in all four of the Gospels. This miracle then we may conclude is of more than common importance; and we ought to take more than common pains to understand it rightly, and to meditate on it frequently. In the first of the two cases, Jesus had five loaves to feed five thousand with. Here seven loaves were used for four thousand. This reminds us of what took place with the manna in the wilderness, "He that gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack." Exod. 16. 18. There was no sort of proportion between the means and the end, between the ability to gather and the quantity gathered, between the number of loaves used, and the number of people fed. Wherein we may the more plainly see that it was neither the five loaves which fed the five thousand, nor the seven the four thousand, but the power and goodness of that great Being, who at the first made all things of nothing, and maketh them continually to increase and multiply. Let us then in all the food we take, in every blessing we enjoy, endeavour to discern his gracious hand. Let us feel Him to be the Giver of all good things, of health to the body, of strength and salvation to the soul.

Jesus had compassion on the multitude because they had nothing to eat. He considered mercifully, that "divers of them came from far." And He was willing to relieve their bodily wants as well as to minister to their spiritual necessities. Hence we learn that we are bound to give assistance to each other in both sorts. And though the more we feel the necessity of caring for the soul, the more anxiously we shall desire the eternal good of our fellow creatures; yet are we here taught to promote also, to the utmost of our power, the improvement of their worldly condition. Indigence is herein the true title to our alms; not the merit of the sufferer, but his want. Jesus had compassion on the multitude, even on all both bad and good, because they had nothing to eat. At the same time we must always so administer our assistance as to discourage profligacy, idleness, and waste, both in those whom we relieve, and in those who witness our behaviour. And especially should we give God the glory in all that we are enabled thus to bestow; offering thanks after the pattern of our Saviour in this miracle, for the food which we impart to others, as well as for that which we ourselves enjoy.

When the multitude were filled, our Lord "sent them away." He coveted not their thanks. He needed not their praise. And He hath taught us hereby not to seek any such return for what good we have the privilege of doing to each other. Our desire should be, not to please men but by doing good to men, to the evil and to the good, to please, if it might be, our Father which is in heaven. Our thought should be what He will think of us, He, who dwelling in heaven, yet looketh down upon the children of men, sendeth rain, and also mercy, on the just and on the unjust, and hath taught us that we should, above all things, love one another, even as He hath loved us.

In the wilderness of this world He giveth to the sinful soul of man all food convenient for it; health, unless sickness be rather for our good; wealth, unless poverty may rather redound to our edification. In poverty He giveth contentment, cheerfulness, thankfulness. In affliction He maketh us to rejoice, that herein we may become like unto Christ, who Himself went not up to joy, but first He suffered pain, who entered not into his glory before He was first crucified. Through the cross He suffered, through the death He died, God giveth us yet more than health or wealth, even pardon for our sins, and grace to lead a holy and a Christian life. He gave for us his Son. How utterly then should we devote to his service our time, our strength, our substance, even all that we possess! How carefully should we observe, that then only will they be counted to be given unto Him, when we design, in all we do, the good of all we have to do with.

Christ refuseth a sign to the Pharisees, denouncing their leaven.

10 And straightway he entered into a ship with his disciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha.

11 ¹ And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, tempting him.

12 And he sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, There shall no sign be given unto this generation.

13 And he left them, and entering into the ship again departed to the other side.

14 ² Now the disciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ship with them more than one loaf.

15 And he charged them, saying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees, and of the leaven of Herod.

16 And they reasoned among themselves, saying, It is ³ because we have no bread.

17 And when Jesus knew it, he saith unto them, Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your heart yet hardened?

18 Having eyes, see ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember?

19 When I brake the five loaves among five thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They say unto him, Twelve.

20 And when the seven among four thousand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? And they said, Seven.

21 And he said unto them, How is it that ye do not understand?

¹ Matt. 16. 1.

² Matt. 16. 5.

³ Matt. 16. 7.

§ 140. How we ought to pray, and how to understand.

Our Lord refuses a sign to the Pharisees, because they asked "tempting him." Here we see, that when we ask, the success of our prayers depends on the frame of mind, and on the purpose of heart, with which we offer them. "And he sighed deeply in his spirit." Whence we learn that He was greatly concerned at their hardness of heart. And we may conclude, that no conduct of ours can be more grievous in our Saviour's sight, than that we should ask in any spirit save that of devotion. Prayer repeated without thought, without desire, what is it but mockery of God? what is it but tempting Him whom we address, provoking Him to decree of the blessings we implore, that there shall no such be given unto us?

Christ would now, as usually He did, improve the opportunity which this conduct of the Pharisees afforded, for a warning to his disciples. "Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees." That is, take heed of their ill temper and evil doctrine; which, unless you are on your guard, will contaminate your own. Strange it seems, that by the use of the word leaven, they should think He alluded to their having forgotten to take bread. Carnal thoughts, it appears, were uppermost in their minds. And it is well if they are not often in ours also uppermost, at the very time when we are listening to the words of Christ. If we were to express all of us, with the simplicity of the disciples, the things we were each thinking of when this very text was read, how many of us would with shame have to confess, that their minds were running on the bread of this world, on its business, or cares, or enjoyments, whilst their ears heard, without hearing, that blessed word which is the bread of life eternal!

"How many baskets full of fragments took ye up?" is a question that should engage us to our present duties, by reminding us of our past mercies. The many instances of providential care we have already experienced, in "our creation, preservation, and all the blessings of this life," these are what should prevent in us too anxious thought for the morrow of this transitory world. The many miracles of grace, that have been wrought for the refreshing of our souls, for their support in temptation, for their deliverance in death, these are what should exalt our inmost thoughts to God, and warn us, as we hear his word with affectionate desire to know his will. Not merely because we would enter into heaven, not merely that we may escape the snares of hell, but because God hath loved us, and given his Son to die for us, because Christ hath died for us, and because "greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends," John 15. 13, therefore should it be our heart's desire to hear, and understand, and do, all that He hath revealed in the Gospel.

Thus might we escape the reproving question, "How is it that ye do not understand?" If our hearts were intent on learning it, our minds would be enlightened by the heavenly wisdom which shines throughout the book of the revelation of God. Many things there are in it difficult, many things which we must own to be mysterious. Yet many things there are also, which it is our plain duty to know; many which it is a sin not to understand. Let no one dare plead ignorance for neglect of duty, when the ignorance itself is sinful. Let no one by way of excuse say he knows no better, when he might have known better, but for his own fault. "How is it that ye do not understand?" is a question which will present itself again, at an hour when all hearts shall be open, all desires known. And for many there will be then no other reply, than that they cared not to learn, and desired not to improve. Let us, whilst it is called to day, turn ever to the best account we can, the light we have the happiness to enjoy; and above all other knowledge, let us study ever most earnestly to know and to do the things that belong unto salvation.

Christ giveth a blind man his sight.

22 And he cometh to Bethsaida; and they bring a blind man unto him, and besought him to touch him.

23 And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had spit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he saw ought.

24 And he looked up, and said, I see men as trees, walking.

25 After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was restored, and saw every man clearly.

26 And he sent him away to his house, saying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

§ 141. That things spiritual must be spiritually discerned.

Our Lord took the blind man out of the town before He healed him. And He sent him away when healed, saying, "Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town." This has been considered as a reproof to the people of Bethsaida, who had, as we learn elsewhere, see Matt. 11. 20, beheld without repentance and faith the mighty works of Christ. In this miracle, which is mentioned only by St. Mark, we may profitably observe how it was performed by degrees, or at twice. On first looking up, the man remarks, "I see men as trees, walking." His eyesight was restored; but he knew not how to use it. And though no one would readily have thought of this beforehand, it is evident, on reflection, that a person born blind could not at once know how to use, if he had it, the power of seeing, but would be perplexed and confused, as we find children are, about the shapes and distances of the things they see. At first, then, this blind man, though enabled to see both trees and men, seems scarce to have known which was which. Upon this, Jesus again put his hands upon his eyes; "and he was restored, and saw every man clearly." This was indeed no less than a second miracle. The man was at once endued with the same skill in the use of eyesight, as if he had all along been enjoying it like other men.

The like appears to have been the case in other miracles of our Saviour. Else they, who from birth had been deaf and dumb, would not have been at once able either to understand words or to speak them. These they must have taken some time in learning, had not He who healed them at once given the proper faculties of speech or hearing, and bestowed also, at the instant, experience in their use. Thus did he make the deaf not to hear only, but to understand; and the dumb not only to speak, but so to speak as to be understood. Not only was the ear opened, but the mind informed; not only the tongue loosed, but the utterance guided. And those means of conversing with each other, which it ordinarily takes years to make us familiar with, were placed at once within the power of men who knew nothing of them before.

Nor is it otherwise in that healing of our spiritual blindness, whereof this miracle may be taken for a sign and figure. Christ it is, who of his goodness first gives us sight. By the word of the Gospel He opens the eyes of the soul. He enlightens the spiritual vision by the revelation of divine truth. But it is one thing to have thus, as it were, a new spiritual sense; it is another thing to use it aright. It is one thing to have been told of heaven and hell, of Satan's fury and of God's great goodness, of Christ's great love, and of his most precious death. It is another thing to fear his judgment, to hope in his mercy, to believe in the precious atonement of his blood, and so to love his service as to do his will. Yet these latter if we do not, we do but half see. In vain have we the privilege of spiritual light, if we walk not as the children thereof. We do but as it were see men as trees walking. We see heaven indeed, and hell; but we discern them not so effectually apart as to press forward for the one, and to fly eagerly from the other. We see evil angels and good; for we know that we are beset with the wiles of the devil, and encompassed with a cloud of the heavenly witnesses. But we know them not so as to know one from the other; so as to see in the one the enemies of our peace, in the other the ministers to our salvation. What profit then is our new faculty of seeing things spiritual, unless we also spiritually discern them? if we are all the while alike liable to all the ills of blindness, to stumble, to fall; and that, for ever? If Christ hath already once put his hand on us for good, if He hath given us, as we trust He hath, the sight of his truth in the Gospel, let us pray Him that He yet once more touch our eyes; that He may renew in us the faculties of our fallen nature, not to see only, but to see clearly; not to know merely good from evil, but to know good, and to love it: and loving it, to do it.

Grant, Lord, that we may both receive our sight, and have grace to use it according to thy will. Make us to love light rather than darkness. Make us to believe what we cannot see, and to be assured of what we do but hope for; to love the thing which Thou commandest, and to desire that which Thou dost promise; (see Liturgy;) here to behold thy presence in righteousness, see Psalm 17. 16, and hereafter the presence of thy glory. See Jude 24.

Christ acknowledgeth his title ; exhorteth to selfdenial.

27 ¹ And Jesus went out, and his disciples, into the towns of Cæsarea Philippi: and by the way he asked his disciples, saying unto them, Whom do men say that I am?

28 And they answered, John the Baptist: but some say, Elias; and others, One of the prophets.

29 And he saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Peter answereth and saith unto him, Thou art the Christ.

30 And he charged them that they should tell no man of him.

31 And he began to teach them, that the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief priests, and scribes, and be killed, and after three days rise again.

32 And he spake that saying openly. And Peter took him, and begun to rebuke him.

33 But when he had turned about and looked on his disciples, he rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind me, Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men.

34 And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them, ² Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

35 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it.

36 For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?

37 Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

38 ³ Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation; of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels.

¹ Matt. 16. 13.

² Matt. 10. 38.

³ Matt. 10. 33.

§ 142. The Gospel alternative.

Jesus first asks his disciples, "Whom do men say that I am?" and afterwards, "whom say ye that I am?" as if purposely implying that what the world said was probably wrong. This should teach us not to mind too anxiously what men say, and to consider how often the testimony of the world is in opposition to the testimony of truth. Upon Peter's answering, "Thou art the Christ," "he charged them that they should tell no man of him." This charge was the more necessary by reason of their notions about the Christ, whom they expected to find a triumphant king. So that the rulers would have been jealous of his title, and the people might very probably have taken Him, and endeavoured to make Him the sort of King they wished for. In order to suppress in them these notions, and to explain to them by degrees the true nature of his kingdom, He warned them that the Son of man, meaning, as they knew, Himself, must suffer many things, and be rejected, and be killed. This was necessary for the great object of this spiritual reign, which must needs be founded on the atonement of his blood. And greatly ought we to rejoice in these tidings; since it is by his death, and by his death alone, that we have hope of eternal life.

But to the disciples this account seemed strange and hard. And to St. Peter it was so unwelcome, that he ventured to rebuke, that is, to remonstrate with, our Lord on the subject. "Get thee behind me, Satan," is the answer of the devoted Saviour. And his meaning is this, that the words of Peter were a snare and suggestion of Satan, tempting him to avoid the sufferings and death by which it was God's will that we should be healed. Satan it is, our adversary the devil, who continually to us also holds out the inconvenience and irksomeness of obedience. He it is, who on the other hand suggests the pleasure of sin, its ease, its pretended safety. When we would renounce the world, it is his voice that whispers, "Be it far from thee." Matt. 16. 22. When we would resist himself, it is he again that pleads, "Be it far from thee." When we design to deny the flesh, and to take up the cross our Saviour bore, by mortifying each ruling passion of our hearts, he it is, even Satan, that still whispers to our ruin, "Be it far from thee." He tells us how pleasant is a worldly life. He urges how painful is God's service, and its end, as he would have us think, a hopeless death.

But in the midst of these suggestions let us never forget, that though life be sweet, and death be bitter, yet is eternal death far more bitter, and eternal life far more sweet. Our Lord would not conceal from us the cost of saving the soul alive. He warns us, that for this end we must deny ourselves, and take up our cross, and follow Him; that we must be ready even to lose our lives, and to forego the gain even of the whole world, rather than take it in exchange for life eternal. Thus does He plainly tell us the cost. But at the same time He no less plainly declares the awful alternative. Either we must thus walk in Christ's service, thus glory to share his cross, or of us will He be ashamed, as will He refuse to acknowledge for his own, "when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels." Then will the falseness of the tempter, and the fallacy of all his words, be made manifest to the assembled world. Then shall we feel the force of our Saviour's question, "What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" What will all he has here amassed, all he has here enjoyed, all he has here attained to, avail to redeem it from destruction? On that hour then let us frequently reflect, and endeavour now beforehand to feel, as we shall then, these words of our Lord and Judge. Let us be now on earth content to be as He was here: content, if it be his will, to be afflicted, rejected, persecuted; content to be weary, to be poor, to be sorrowful; content to suffer sickness, pain, and death; that hereafter we may share with Him an inheritance in heaven for ever.

Christ is transfigured.

1 And he said unto them, ¹ Verily I say unto you, That there be some of them that stand here, which shall not taste of death, till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power.

2 ² And after six days Jesus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themselves; and he was transfigured before them.

3 And his raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

4 And there appeared unto them Elias with Moses: and they were talking with Jesus.

5 And Peter answered and said to Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias.

6 For he wist not what to say; for they were sore afraid.

7 And there was a cloud that overshadowed them:

and a voice came out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.

8 And suddenly, when they had looked round about, they saw no man any more, save Jesus only with themselves.

9 And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they should tell no man what things they had seen, till the Son of man were risen from the dead.

10 And they kept that saying with themselves, questioning one with another what the rising from the dead should mean.

11 And they asked him, saying, Why say the scribes that Elias must first come?

12 And he answered and told them, Elias verily cometh first, and restoreth all things; and ³ how it is written of the Son of man, that he must suffer many things, and be set at nought.

13 But I say unto you, That Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatsoever they listed, as it is written of him.

¹ Matt. 16. 28.

² Matt. 17. 1.

³ Is. 53. 2, &c.

§ 143. That we should live as in the presence of Christ.

It was a high privilege for Peter, and James, and John, that they witnessed this transfiguration of their Lord, this foretaste, or first beginning, as we may conceive it to have been, of what He had just before been speaking of, "the kingdom of God come with power." It was a high privilege for them to witness it; nor is it a small matter for us to hear their account of it, as set down in these words of the Gospel. This is among the things which many prophets and kings desire to see, and saw not. See Luke 10. 24. This is what many millions of our fellow creatures are still ignorant of, that the kingdom of God is come with power; that Christ the Son of man is glorified, and that they who believe in Christ, and here suffer with Him, may be also glorified together. See Rom. 8. 17. And thus it is that we should, through faith, discern what is here revealed to us, by learning how near we are, or might be, to the like glory. When we read how suddenly Jesus was transfigured, how soon, together with Moses and Elias, He was seen in this altered state, in this heavenly condition, we should be made sensible how vain are all this world's objects; how false their lustre; how transitory their continuance; and how certainly, behind the veil they make, there is existing ever close to us a kingdom of God, a world of excellence unutterable. To that order of things we might be introduced, as were these disciples, in a single moment, by the summons of our Lord. There we should find Moses and Elias, and other just men made perfect, in constant communion with Christ. Then we should feel, as we ought now to be persuaded, that it would be good for us to be there.

The longer we can uphold ourselves in such thoughts as these, the more we shall be inclined to desire this heavenly change. The more we meditate on that spiritual universe, in the midst of which we have our being, the better we shall be prepared to enter into its enjoyment. And the better we are prepared for that blessed company of saints and angels and of Christ Himself, the sooner, and more surely, as we may safely hope, He will take us to dwell therein for ever. But this state of feeling, this abstraction of the mind, from things seen, to things unseen, is necessarily and frequently interrupted. Suddenly we look around, and we find ourselves on the earth. We see no man any more of all that goodly company; but, in their stead we are beset with the cares and companions of this lower world. We turn from meditation and prayer, from this reading of the Gospel of Christ, from these tidings of his bright transfiguration, to our meals, or to the work of our calling, to the thought of this life's pleasure, to the talk of this world's news. Only, as the apostles when they lost sight of all the rest still saw Jesus "with themselves," only let us also endeavour, in all we do, and say, and think, still to see Christ, by faith, as present in our company.

He, we should remember, He, if only we be faithful in his service, He is with us "always, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28. 20. Of Him then we should always think as present to our souls; of Him always so think as in all things to obey Him. Each hour of our lives, each duty we have to do, each meal to eat, each word to utter, we should act as under a sense of his presence, as under the influence of his counsel, as in the hope of his glory. Then should we haste, as St. Peter bids us, "unto the coming of the day of God," 2 Pet. 3. 12; anxiously look forward, and press forward, to the attainment of his eternal joy. And at the same time we should not murmur at having to wait for a while, or at suffering many things in this mortal life, as did his messenger Elias, and as did Christ Himself, until the time of death and resurrection. For what should be of greater comfort to a Christian than to be made like unto Christ in suffering? And what can be more encouraging to our zeal, than the assurance that "now are we the sons of God;" and that, though "it doth not yet appear what we shall be, we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is!" 1 John 3. 2.

Christ casteth out a dumb spirit.

14 ¹ And when he came to his disciples, he saw a great multitude about them, and the scribes questioning with them.

15 And straightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him saluted him.

16 And he asked the scribes, What question ye || with them?

17 And one of the multitude answered and said, Master, I have brought unto thee my son, which hath a dumb spirit;

18 And wheresoever he taketh him, he † teareth him: and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth, and pincheth away: and I spake to thy disciples that they should cast him out; and they could not.

19 He answereth him, and saith, O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? how long shall I suffer you? bring him unto me.

20 And they brought him unto him: and when he saw him, straightway the spirit tare him; and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming.

21 And he asked his father, How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child.

22 And oftentimes it hath cast him into the fire, and into the waters, to destroy him: but if thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us.

23 Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth.

24 And straightway the father of the child cried out, and said with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief.

25 When Jesus saw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul spirit, saying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf spirit, I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him.

26 And the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him: and he was as one dead; insomuch that many said, He is dead.

27 But Jesus took him by the hand, and lifted him up; and he arose.

28 And when he was come into the house, his disciples asked him privately, Why could not we cast him out?

29 And he said unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and fasting.

¹ Matt. 17. 14.

|| Or, among yourselves

† Or, dasheth him.

§ 144. That we must add to our faith prayer and selfdenial.

On our Lord's coming down from being transfigured, "the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed." This we may suppose arose from somewhat of heavenly glory, like to what we read of in the case of Moses, see Exod. 34. 30; still shining in his countenance. During his absence the disciples had occasion to experience their entire dependence on his help. For whilst a great multitude were gathered together, the scribes were questioning with them, because they could not succeed in casting out a dumb spirit. This was one of the many ways, in which the devils were permitted at that time most evidently to possess the bodies of mankind, so as to give proof to the outward sense both of their own evil agency, and of the power also of Him by whose word they were cast out. In this instance the malice of the devil is shewn in the violence of the person possessed, in his foaming and gnashing with his teeth, and in his pinning away. And the power of Christ is illustrated in his healing one who had been so long deemed incurable, one whom his apostles in vain had tried to heal.

The father indeed, desponding at their want of success, doubts almost the ability of our Lord Himself. "If thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us. Jesus said unto him, If thou canst believe." Such is the infirmity, the perversity of man! We question in our healing the power of Christ; when we ought to question only our own faith. We think as though God could not redeem us from sin, could not make us keep our good purposes, could not confirm us in holiness of life. We ought to think that He both can do so, and will; if only we believe. We ought to feel that it is our faith, and that only, which is wanting to the casting out of all evil spirits that possess us. We ought to know that the only question is, not whether God is able, but whether we are willing; willing to be made whole, willing to believe that we can be healed. We ought to remember, that "all things are possible to him that believeth."

Whilst the father of the child seems to have been wanting in faith, the disciples had been neglectful of fasting and prayer. This accounted for their failure; and this probably will account for our's, where-insoever we are conscious that we fall short of what by God's grace we might attain. Either we have not faith, or we exercise not our faith in the denying of ourselves, and in praying unto God. Our faith, if it thus work not, is dead. Our faith if we neither pray nor practise, is no faith at all. To mortify the flesh, to renounce the world, to refuse ourselves the indulgences we have a mind to, however slight be our ground to suspect that they may hinder our Christian progress, to put our whole trust in the strength of God, and to ask for it in most deep humility of heart, these things must be made good on our parts, for Christ to take us by the hand, and lift us up. These things if we make good, and that through faith in Christ, then is there no spirit so powerful, no sin so deeply rooted, but what He will charge it both to come out of us, and to enter in no more. Thus may we also become "as dead," dead to sin; relieved from its influence for the present, and for the future so supported against it, that it shall have no more dominion over us.

Let us then at once profess heartily our faith, and sincerely acknowledge its infirmity. Let us say with this "one of the multitude," "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief." Take, Lord, what faith we have, and make it more! Accept what poor service we perform, and make it better! Regard with mercy what faint love we feel; and make it more devout, more pure, more worthy of Thyself, more like to thine!

Christ foresheweth his death, exhorteth to meekness and humility.

30 ¹ And they departed thence, and passed through Galilee; and he would not that any man should know it.

31 For he taught his disciples, and said unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day.

32 But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him.

33 ² And he came to Capernaum: and being in the house he asked them, What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?

34 But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves, who should be the greatest.

35 And he sat down, and called the twelve, and saith unto them, If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

36 And he took a child, and set him in the midst of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he said unto them,

37 Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me.

¹ Matt. 17. 22.

² Matt. 18. 1.

§ 145. How we should avoid falling out by the way.

Our Lord in passing through Galilee avoided all public notice. And where He might have received men's homage for his mighty works, He rather occupied Himself in preparing the disciples to expect his approaching sufferings. "The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they shall kill him." So would it be well for us also, when most we are in the way of praise or prosperity, to call to mind that we have a death to die; and to turn from the enjoyment of this world's happiness to contemplate the glories of the next. For to the tidings of his death our Lord adds, by way of comforting the disciples, the assurance of his resurrection: "and after that he is killed, he shall rise the third day." But they understood not that saying, and were afraid to ask him." When we understand not Christ's word, the fault is commonly our own; we consult not as we ought his Scriptures, we ask not as we ought of Himself in prayer. And commonly also it is this very fault, that we are afraid to ask Him; afraid to acquaint ourselves with the truth, afraid lest it should condemn our pride, confute our prejudices, and constrain us to renounce the practice of our sins. Oh that we may have grace to ask, and diligence to search, and a holy courage to adopt, and to perform, the will of our Saviour Christ!

Whilst the disciples should have been applying this discourse of their Lord to their spiritual edification, they had been, it seems, disputing by the way, "who should be the greatest." Thus they had transgressed at once in two most plain points of Christian duty, humility and love; humility in their each desiring to be the greatest, and love in their disputing about it. And this they did even when Christ was near at hand to them, though probably, as they reckoned, out of hearing. They considered not, as we too are very apt not to consider, that He heareth every idle word we utter, and will call us to account for them hereafter. See Matt. 12. 36. He will demand, of our vain conversation, of our wranglings and quarrellings, in the journey of life, "What was it that ye disputed among yourselves by the way?"

What answer shall we hereafter have to give? What confession can we now make, but that we are contending for being the greatest; that our bickerings arise from our own ill tempers, and that our own ill tempers are selfishness and pride. We would fain have the first place in the dispute. We are determined therefore to have the last, the loudest word; to say the severest, the most irritating thing. We exalt ourselves, by depreciating our neighbours. We vex their vanity, that we may indulge our own. From these and other like beginnings, from our lusts that war in our members, from these spring not disputes only and quarrellings in families, but all wars also, and fightings in the world. See James 1. 4. Few and evil as are the days of our pilgrimage; see Gen. 47. 9: what folly can be greater than that we should thus embitter them with jealousies and animosities amongst each other?

Let us learn from the words of Christ, that this conduct is not only the height of folly, but is at the same time the height of sin. Let us remember the sentence He has here pronounced, "that if any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all." Let us look to the instance He set before us in a child; "Whosoever shall receive one of such children in my name, receiveth me; and whosoever shall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that sent me." To be the last of all, will be the lot of those who here desire to be the first. And to be now the servant of all, is the way to be hereafter exalted. For this is the limit of our allowed ambition, that we should here labour, as in service, for the good of all mankind. And our rule, if we would be counted to have received Christ, is this, that we here receive each other, treat each other, as we would little children. This we are to do in point of gentleness, and forbearance. We are to put up, as we would in the case of children, we are to put up with the ignorance, the waywardness, the perversity, and the selfishness of others; as we have many times deep need that they should bear with us in our own.

Oh, that we might so heartily desire to be here the last, that we may hereafter be found among the first! Oh, that we might give place to each other, not by constraint only, and subjection, see Gal. 2. 5, but by preference of choice! Oh, that we might as servants be obedient to each other, "not answering again;" Tit. 2. 9; as children be humble; and as to children, be compassionate and kind!

Christ speaketh of offences and of hell fire.

38 ¹ And John answered him, saying, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us: and we forbad him, because he followeth not us.

39 But Jesus said, Forbid him not: ² for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me.

40 For he that is not against us is on our part.

41 ³ For whosoever shall give you a cup of water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward.

42 ⁴ And whosoever shall offend one of these little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were cast into the sea.

43 ⁵ And if thy hand || offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

44 ⁶ Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

45 And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched:

46 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

47 And if thine eye † offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire:

48 Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.

49 For every one shall be salted with fire, ⁷ and every sacrifice shall be salted with salt.

50 ⁸ Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his saltiness, wherewith will ye season it? Have salt in yourselves, and have peace one with another.

¹ Luke 9. 49.

² 1 Cor. 12. 3.

³ Matt. 10. 42.

⁴ Matt. 18. 6.

⁵ Matt. 5. 29. & 18. 8.

|| Or, cause thee to offend.

⁶ Is. 66. 24.

† Or, cause thee to offend.

⁷ Levit. 2. 13.

⁸ Matt. 5. 13.

§ 146. That we must serve God through grace or perish everlastingly.

St. John seems to have thought that he and the disciples had done well, in forbidding some one else, who followed them not, to cast out devils in the name of Christ. Or it may be that he mentioned it by way of owning that they had already transgressed our Lord's injunction of receiving even a little child in his name. In either case, the answer teaches us, first, never to forbid those who do, or attempt to do, any thing really good in Christ's name; but rather to esteem as on our side in his cause all who are not actually against us. So that we should resolve, however much we may differ in smaller matters to give the right hand of fellowship to all, who design and endeavour to do good for the sake of our blessed Lord. For, secondly, we must not only not forbid, we must encourage and assist those who thus belong to Christ. We must act under the persuasion that any kindness shewn to them, though it were no more than a cup of cold water to drink, any kindness shewn to them by us, out of regard to their belonging to Christ, will in no wise lose its reward. And, thirdly, we learn here the guilt and punishment of offending one of these little ones; that is, tempting to sin, any one, however unworthy, out of those, who truly believe in Christ. Whatever may be their deficiencies, and how know we but that our own are greater? whatever their mistakes, and how know we but that our own are more censurable? whatever be their errors or their failings, we are bound to feel for them a brother's anxiety, that they should not perish. And if they perish through our fault, through our ill persuasion, or ill example, we shall have to answer as for a brother's blood.

From the peril of thus offending a brother, our Lord turns our attention to the risk of being ourselves offended by hand, or foot, or eye; led, that is to say, by any member into sin, made by it to transgress the will of God. Rather He advises and commands us to cut them off, pluck them out and cast them from us, rather actually to maim ourselves, if necessary, than sin. And that for this one plain consideration: it is better to enter into the kingdom of God, destitute of these limbs or functions, than with the possession of them all in perfection to be cast into hell fire. It is better to have no sense of feeling here, no power to walk, or work, or see, than by seeing or working, or walking sinfully to come to the fire of that hell, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched; where the suffering to be endured will last for ever and ever.

"For," adds our Lord, "every one shall be salted with fire." That is to say, every one who is thus to be punished will, by the very nature of that eternal punishment, be preserved to endure it for ever; even as the flesh of the sacrifices, according to the law of Moses, is salted with salt, which preserves it. Thus "every sacrifice shall be salted with salt." Every one who perishes, under the divine displeasure, every one who is cast into hell fire, must suffer in that fire for ever. "Salt is good;" that is, salt signifies also that principle of holiness, shed abroad by God's grace in the heart, which may preserve us, through Christ, from perishing everlastingly. But "if the salt have lost his saltiness," if we have neither faith, nor grace, nor holiness, we are good for nothing but to be cast out. Either we must have in ourselves salt in this sense, the salt of purity and peace with each other, or else we shall be liable to the fearful question, "Wherewith shall ye season it?" Either we must present ourselves, our souls and bodies, living sacrifices unto God, holy, acceptable unto Him through Christ, or we must be cast, as were the sacrifices, into the fire, so must we be sentenced to perish from the presence of God, in the place "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

The Lord season us with the salt of heavenly grace, that we may escape the salt of hell fire! The Lord make us to have peace one with another, that we may rest in peace with Him! The Lord preserve us from offending any one of them that believe in Him! The Lord make us heartily to feel, that in his cause, whosoever is not against us is on our part!

Christ answereth the Pharisees on divorcement.

1 ¹ And he arose from thence, and cometh into the coasts of Judæa by the farther side of Jordan: and the people resort unto him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again.

2 And the Pharisees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him.

3 And he answered and said unto them, What did Moses command you?

4 And they said, Moses suffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away.

5 And Jesus answered and said unto them, For the hardness of your heart he wrote you this precept.

6 But from the beginning of the creation God made them male and female.

7 For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife;

8 And they twain shall be one flesh: so then they are no more twain, but one flesh.

9 What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

10 And in the house his disciples asked him again of the same matter.

11 ² And he saith unto them, Whosoever shall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery against her.

12 And if a woman shall put away her husband, and be married to another, she committeth adultery.

13 ³ And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them.

14 But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God.

15 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein.

16 And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.

¹ Matt. 19. 1.

² Matt. 5. 32. & 19. 9.

³ Matt. 19. 13.

§ 147. That we may not sever what God has joined together.

St. Matthew, in describing this visit of Jesus to the farther side of Jordan, says of the people who resorted to Him, that "he healed them there." Matt. 19. 2. St. Mark speaking of the same time and circumstance, says, that, "as he was wont, he taught them again." Hence we collect, that He both taught and healed them. And we may here observe also, that these two offices were in Christ all as one; that his healing was itself the most forcible of teaching, and his teaching the best of healing, the healing of the soul. And thus always are those passages truly consistent, which seem at first sight to be at variance, in the different Gospels. And usually also we may derive from their comparison, some such lesson of instruction in our Saviour's conduct, or in our own Christian duty.

Whilst our Lord was thus employed in doing good, He was tempted by the Pharisees with a captions question on the subject of divorce. They would gladly have obtained his sanction for their own licentiousness of practice. And they supposed that He could not refuse it, without plainly contradicting the Law, as revealed by Moses. We should note the wisdom of a reply, which left them neither excuse in their conduct, nor matter of accusation against his own words. He shews them from the writings of their lawgiver, the principle on which marriage is inviolable. He refers them to its first institution as recorded by that same Moses, by whose law they professed to abide. He quotes what is there said of a man's leaving his father and mother, in order to cleave to his wife; see Gen. 2. 24; leaving us to infer, that therefore a man must not for any other, leave her, for whose sake he leaves all else. He teaches that it is God who joineth together them that are married; and points out how wrong it must therefore be for men to put them asunder.

This last principle we may apply to all things which God has in his word united. And we should thus reflect how sinful it is for man to put asunder faith from works, grace from holiness of life, the happiness of heaven from obedience on earth. Many would as it were divorce this close connexion between our duties and our privileges. Many would hold with so much only of the Gospel, as they can wrest in favour of their own indulgences; and repudiate that portion of it, which demands of them selfdenial and amendment of life. But let not us so put asunder what God hath joined together. Either we must admit the whole Gospel, with all its parts, in their due proportions, or we have no ground to hope that any of it will profit us. Either we must receive its most hard sayings, its most severe threatenings; or else its most gracious promises will not avail to our safety. For to the whole Gospel we may in this sense apply what is said by the apostle of one book of it: "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life." Rev. 22. 19.

To the Pharisees, who tempted Him, our Lord answered with out displeasure, as plotting only against Himself. With the disciples who rebuked those who brought the children, "he was much displeased," "for of such is the kingdom of God." He was displeased because of his love for the children. He was displeased because of his love for the disciples. He would have had them kind to the children. And the children He wished to take up in his arms, and bless. Then only may we without sin feel displeasure, when it is for the wrongs which others suffer; when we love none the less sincerely those whom we would censure, and all the more affectionately help and pray for those in whose behalf we are displeased.

Christ answereth one inquiring of the way of life.

17 ¹ And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?

18 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is, God.

19 Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother.

20 And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth.

21 Then Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me.

22 And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

23 And Jesus looked round about, and saith unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

24 And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!

25 It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, Who then can be saved?

27 And Jesus looking upon them saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible.

¹ Matt. 19. 16.

§ 148. How hardly the rich enter into the kingdom of heaven.

We learn from St. Matthew, 19. 20, that it was a young man who here asked of our Lord the way to inherit eternal life. It appears also, that he had been brought up from infancy, in what he reckoned to be obedience to the commands of God. "Then Jesus beholding him loved him." So free is He to love, where we do but ill deserve! So amiable in the sight of our blessed Lord is even the comparative innocency of youth! So much to be desired, at all times of life, is that frank and ingenuous disposition which should flow from right training in our early years!

But often, when we most think that we have obeyed, we are far from the obedience which our Lord intends for us. And to convince this young man of his deficiency, and through him to convince us of ours, our Lord "said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross, and follow me." And this proposal, so grievous to the hearer, is recorded in the same verse in which Jesus is said to have "loved him." So that it is compatible with most true affection to suggest what for the time may make us sad, in order that it may be better for us in the end. And not only is this consistent with true Christian love, but it is one of the most excellent ways in which it can be shewn. Nothing being more painful to our own evil nature than thus to remonstrate with our friends. And nothing being more profitable to them than such godly counsel and reproof, when faithfully and affectionately administered. And this is the right account of every hard saying in the word of God, of every difficult command set forth in Scripture by our "Good Master." They are tokens that He loveth us. They are proofs, as are also his severest chastisements, whether sickness, or sorrow, or privation, proofs that He careth for our welfare, and taketh pains to secure our salvation.

And especially is this true of the hardships of poverty, of the privations which are endured, by far the greater part of mankind, in the absence of this world's wealth. For these, we may in many cases see, are helpful to the attainment of the Christian character; as of riches, on the other hand, it is notorious, and as Christ does here very plainly teach of them, that they make it the more hard for us to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Not that this is true of the mere possession of riches, but, as our Lord goes on to explain it, of the trusting in them; and so far only true of their possession, as that very many who have them, trust in them. "How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!" How hard to become holy and heavenly minded! How hard to attain unto everlasting life! How hard for them that trust in riches! Harder for them that have ever so little wealth, and trust in it, than for those who have ever so much, and trust not! But must we not here add, how hard is it to have much, and not to trust; not to be puffed up by the deference and attention which wealth ensures from others; not to be enamoured of the manifold conveniences which it enables us to procure for ourselves! Let each, therefore, as he is reminded of these dangers of the rich, be content with such things as he hath; see Heb. 13. 5; with such portion of this world's good as God has thought fit to bestow. Let none long to have their store increased, but strive rather that they may have a good account to give of what they already possess. Let us consider that God looks not to how much we have, but how honestly we obtain it, how rightly use it. And let us acknowledge, whilst we hear with joy that "with God all things are possible," let us acknowledge, that without his grace preventing and assisting us, in all we do, to enter into the kingdom of heaven would be to all, whether rich or poor, to all alike "with men impossible."

Make us, good Lord, more anxious to improve our gifts, than forward to increase our store; if rich, more careful to find objects for our alms, than if poor, helpers for our need. Teach us that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Acts 20. 35. Instruct us both how to abound, and how to suffer want. And enable us, through thy grace, in whatsoever state we are, therewith to be content. See Phil. 4. 11.

Christ on the way to Jerusalem.

28 ¹ Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee.

29 And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's,

30 But he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

31 ² But many that are first shall be last; and the last first.

¹ Matt. 19. 27.

² Matt. 19. 30.

32 ³ And they were in the way going up to Jerusalem; and Jesus went before them: and they were amazed; and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things should happen unto him,

33 Saying, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of man shall be delivered unto the chief priests, and unto the scribes; and they shall condemn him to death, and shall deliver him to the Gentiles:

34 And they shall mock him, and shall scourge him, and shall spit upon him, and shall kill him: and the third day he shall rise again.

³ Matt. 20. 17.

§ 149. That there is no safety in ignorance of danger.

It was on hearing how hardly they who trust in riches enter into the kingdom of heaven, that St. Peter was tempted to reflect in somewhat of a vainglorious spirit, "Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee." Our Lord in reply first asserts, that they who do in earnest so leave all for his sake, and the Gospel's, shall receive, with their persecutions, "an hundredfold now in this time." He then remarks, in reference, as we may justly suppose, to this gracious retribution, that "many that are first shall be last; and the last first." Many, that is, who may here be thought, or may think themselves, to have done most for the sake of Christ, are by Him accounted to have done least. Whilst they who deem most humbly of their own good works, will find them to be by Him most highly valued. And this may help to account for what we are apt to deem the unequal distribution of this world's good and evil. They whom we reckon first being often in God's sight last; and they whom we mistake for the last, first.

This clause thus understood, seems to have been designed also for a reproof and a warning to St. Peter; a reproof of his boastful words, a warning of his future fall. Or at all events we may do well to apply it in this sense to ourselves, and to the estimate we form within our own hearts of our title to the divine mercies. We are bound indeed to acknowledge how hundredfold this life's blessings, when enjoyed with the grace of thankfulness, outweigh its utmost evils when borne with resignation. We are bound also to feel deeply how hundredfold the consolations of religion, the sense of being accepted of God through Christ, the assurance of hope, the hope of heaven, overpay the persecution or privations which our religion requires us to bear. But we must be cautious lest we too readily set down to our own credit, and to the cause of the Gospel, sufferings which in many instances arise from our own folly and fault. The real hardships of poverty, for instance, how rarely do they occur, save through idleness, wastefulness, or improvidence! The pains of sickness, how almost uniformly may they be traced to our own carelessness of health, to our indolence, our intemperance, or the indulgence of too thoughtful anxiety for this life's transitory blessings? Never then let us dare, whilst suffering from causes such as these, either to murmur at the chastisements of God, or, setting them down to the score of self-denial, to reflect within ourselves, or boast as to our Lord, "we have left all, and followed thee." A sentiment such as this will ill become us, till we have continued, as we can scarcely hope to do, without falling, faithful to the end; or have been enabled, as we never can be, like Him to suffer as He foretold He should, to be delivered unto death, with mockery, and scourging, and spitting, all borne in meekness, for the benefit of mankind.

These things He now mentioned beforehand, as He went up, on his way to Jerusalem; and whilst the disciples who followed Him "were afraid." There is no safety in ignorance of danger. The more they feared, the more He thought it meet to apprise them of how much both He and they had hereafter to go through; how sorely they would be tried in their fidelity and affection, when He should be condemned to death. But to these sad tidings He at the same time adds, that on the third day He should rise again. If it be well that we should know our danger, it is well that we should be also informed of our deliverance. It is well that to a salutary fear of evil we should add, for the perfecting of true Christian courage, a lively hope of good. It is well, that in the sufferings of this present time, we should learn to put our trust in God's promise for the future; and to set our hearts, with the full assurance of faith, on "the glory which shall be revealed in us." Rom. 8. 18. Thus might we best enjoy in this life the manifold blessings which arise from "houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands." And thus, though persecution be added to our lot, though affliction in any form or amount be dispensed to us by the will of God, we have the present and powerful consolation, that there is laid up for us, according to the same divine will, "in the world to come eternal life."

Jesus answereth James and John.

35 ¹ And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, come unto him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

36 And he said unto them, What would ye that I should do for you?

37 They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory.

38 But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?

39 And they say unto him, We can. And Jesus said unto them, Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized:

40 But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand is not mine to give; but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared.

41 And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

42 But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, ² Ye know that they which || are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

43 But so shall it not be among you: but whosoever will be great among you, shall be your minister:

44 And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all.

45 For even the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

¹ Matt. 20. 20.² Luke 22. 25.|| Or, think good.§ 150. Christian precedency.

We see here a great perversion of the Christian's privilege, "Ask, and ye shall receive." John 16. 24. We hear apostles praying for precedency in the kingdom of Christ, as in some earthly dominion. And some perhaps will reason, that if pride might thus find place in St. James and St. John, it may the better be excused in themselves. Rather we may hence profitably conclude, that we are all in great danger of its manifold temptations; rather be led by what we read of in their hearts, to suspect what may be lurking in our own. Their failings were not excusable in them; much less are the like sins excusable in us who have their fall set before us for our warning.

Most unreasonable was the request preferred, as St. Matthew tells us, by the mother of these apostles, and, as here we read, urged also by themselves; to sit, the one on the right hand, and the other on the left, of their heavenly Lord. No less vain and sinful are our frequent attempts, to secure for ourselves the first, the best, and the most honourable things, of all that seem to lie within our reach. Let not, however, the pride and selfishness of one move jealousy or anger in another. Whilst we avoid the ambition of the two apostles, let us avoid also the displeasure of the ten. The faults and follies of our brethren, even when they operate to our personal hindrance, should be the subject not of our wrath, but of our tender concern. The displeasure of the ten seems to shew that they entertained somewhat of the same ambition as St. James and St. John; else why should they have felt hurt by their request? It is a proof of pride to be made angry by the pride of others. The remonstrance of our Saviour implies, that all such feelings, whether openly expressed, or secretly entertained, are alike unworthy of the Christian character. We must neither ourselves push forward for undue precedency, nor be vexed with those who do so. And the more readily we yield to others even a preference which is not their due, the more surely we shall secure for ourselves that eminence which cannot else be ours.

Authority, for the like reasons as wealth, makes it hard for them that possess it to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Authority, and honour, and rank, tempt to vanity, and arrogance, and presumption. They are privileges which are beset with snares; talents of which a strict account will be difficult to give, though sure to be required. And this is true even of spiritual attainments, which it is well to desire, but not well to be proud of when attained; well to strive after, but not well to endeavour to reach by any measures injurious to the welfare of our neighbours. Whosoever then would be great, whosoever would be the chiefest, let him be as the servant of all, let him be as the minister of all. Let him set before himself the pattern of the Son of man, who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Greater is he who submits, than he who assumes to himself the power of command. Greater is he who forgives a wrong, than he who is displeased at it, who resents it. But greatest and chiefest of all are they, who in a spirit of affection to their Saviour Christ, set themselves to be the servants of all around them, by bearing with their ill tempers, ministering to their wants, and doing them all good to the uttermost. And who that is so engaged, who that is in earnest seeking to be first in extent of service to God and man, hasting not to grow rich or great, but only to grow fit for the coming of the day of God, see 2 Pet. 3. 12; who that is so seeking to advance himself, would wish to advance himself to the detriment of his brother; or would grudge that his brother should share with him to the full, or if it so seem good to God, should be advanced before him, in the good work he has to do on earth, or in those better things which he hopes to enjoy in heaven?

Christ giveth sight to blind Bartimæus.

46 ¹ And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his disciples and a great number of people, blind Bartimæus, the son of Timæus, sat by the highway side begging.

47 And when he heard that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and say, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me.

48 And many charged him that he should hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy on me.

49 And Jesus stood still, and commanded him to be called. And they call the blind man, saying unto him, Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee.

50 And he, casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus.

51 And Jesus answered and said unto him, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? The blind man said unto him, Lord, that I might receive my sight.

52 And Jesus said unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way.

¹ Matt. 20. 29.

|| Or, saved thee.

§ 151. How we should draw near to Christ.

This Bartimæus was one of the two blind men who are mentioned by St. Matthew, 20. 30, as having been healed at this time by our Lord. His faith was shewn both in his persevering to pray, and in his acknowledging Jesus to be the Son of David. "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me." This prayer he continued to repeat, even when "many charged him that he should hold his peace." Thus ought we to continue steadfast in prayer, and firm in our profession of the Christian faith, however many of those we live with may urge us to live more unto the world. Many are the pleas with which those who delight not in piety themselves endeavour to discourage it in others. They will tell us that our prayers are too many, or too long, our conscience too scrupulous, our study of God's word too careful, that our conversation is too serious to be agreeable, and the life we aim to live, incompatible with the convenience of the world we have to live in. Whosoever thus they charge us to hold our peace, whosoever they would silence that painful testimony which the works, as well as the words, of the faithful, ever bear against the practice of sin; let us only "cry the more a great deal, Thou son of David, have mercy on me." Let the temptations which arise from evil communication, such as we must often encounter in this present life, make us so much the more to have recourse in prayer to Him by whose grace we stand. If thus we persevere in calling faithfully upon Christ, He too will in his good time call us. He will draw us nearer and nearer to Himself. In each hindrance we experience, in each fall we meet with, a voice of comfort will be heard within our hearts: "rise, he calleth thee." Are we afflicted with this world's sorrow, visited with sickness, mortified by the disappointment of our favourite plans, vexed with the ill temper or ill treatment of those from whom we most look for kindly aid? Are our hearts sad within us at the many miseries of our lost estate, at the pain in which the whole creation now groaneth and travaileth together? See Rom. 8. 22. In these moments of despondency let us betake ourselves to earnest prayer, and we shall receive for our reply: "Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee." He calleth thee to a life which is no longer vanity, a life of holiness acceptable to God, and full of satisfaction to thyself. Or is it at sin we mourn, at our own many failings and large frailty, at our backwardness to love God, and to love our neighbour as ourselves, at our unworthy thoughts of the heaven we hope for, thoughts how unworthy of a hope so high! Do these spiritual afflictions made sad our hearts? Let them also make frequent, and make earnest, our prayers. And then shall we again receive for our reply: "Be of good comfort, rise; he calleth thee." He calleth thee from earth to heaven. He calleth thee to suffer for a while, to be estranged a short space from the light of his countenance, only that after the more perfect trial of thy faith, thy more patient continuance in well doing, He may give thee the more exalted place in the glory that shall be revealed.

At these words of encouragement, blind Bartimæus, "casting away his garment, rose, and came to Jesus." And afterwards, when he had obtained his sight, he made use of it in the following of Christ: "immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way." So should we, as we have the grace to draw near unto our Lord, lay aside every weight, rid ourselves of every hindrance, and especially renounce and resist the sin that doth most easily beset us; see Heb. 12. 1; that particular offence, whatever it may be, which, as a garment, cleaves to us, and elogs us in our course. And so also, when our faculties have been through grace enlightened, and our souls have been made to see the things that belong unto our peace, so must we follow Jesus in the way, in the way that He hath gone before us, in the narrow way that He would have us walk in.

God grant that we may both have grace to see, and seeing may have grace to walk in the way that leadeth unto life! God grant that we may hate even "the garment spotted by the flesh;" Jude 23; and may be clothed instead in that "fine linen," which "is the righteousness of saints!" Rev. 19. 8. God help us, when we fall, to rise; when sad, to be of good comfort; the more we are hindered, the more to persevere; and the more discouraged, the more to pray!

Christ rideth in triumph into Jerusalem.

1 And ¹ when they came nigh to Jerusalem, unto Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he sendeth forth two of his disciples,

2 And saith unto them, Go your way into the village over against you: and as soon as ye be entered into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon never man sat; loose him, and bring him.

3 And if any man say unto you, Why do ye this? say ye that the Lord hath need of him; and straightway he will send him hither.

4 And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without in a place where twq ways met; and they loose him.

5 And certain of them that stood there said unto them, What do ye, loosing the colt?

6 And they said unto them even as Jesus had commanded: and they let them go.

7 And they brought the colt to Jesus, and cast their garments on him; and he sat upon him.

8 And many spread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and strawed them in the way.

9 And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord:

10 Blessed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest.

11 And Jesus entered into Jerusalem, and into the temple: and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the eventide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve.

¹ Matt. 21. 1.

§ 152. The humility, the foreknowledge, and the prudence of our Lord.

See how our Lord chooses for his triumph, that He may fulfil the words of the prophet, to ride upon "a colt the foal of an ass." Zecl. 9. 9. See in his riding on a colt "whereon never man sat," the fulfilment of those types in the Law, the heifer for sacrifice "upon which never came yoke," Num. 19. 2, and the two mule kine, "on which there hath come no yoke," appointed for the drawing of the ark. 1 Sam. 6. 7. See how, when He most nearly approached to the show of worldly state, He was content, for example of humility and love, to ride upon a borrowed colt; as He ate also the passover in a borrowed chamber, and was hurried in another man's sepulchre! How dare we then so earnestly covet to possess always something of our own? How dare we so proudly be ashamed to borrow, so hardly consent to lend? Let us practise both parts of Christian charity. Let us be willing to be beholden to our neighbours, in the presumption that they are glad to give us aid. And let us give freely to them that ask of us, and from him that would borrow of us turn not away. See Matt. 5. 42. Thus might we the nearest approach in practice to the spirit of those primitive disciples, who had, we read, "all things in common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men as every man had need." Acts 2. 44, 45.

In this account of our Lord's entry into Jerusalem, we may remark also his singular exercise of divine knowledge, in directing his two disciples to the exact place where they would find the colt tied. He knew also, it seems, beforehand what would be said to them by the people of the village: "What do ye, loosing the colt?" And He knew also that on being told, "the Lord hath need of him," they would straightway send him. Herein we see one chief attribute of God our Saviour; He understandeth our thoughts "long before." Psalm 139. 1. He heareth, when we think He heareth not. He seeth, when we seem to be out of sight. He seeth where we are, and what we do, and whether our inclinations are conformed to his will. If then there be many evil things which we feel ashamed to do before men, how much more should we be ashamed before God to think any evil thoughts! How much more should we fear to harbour any evil wish, to do, however secretly, any evil deed, when we consider that our blessed Lord is privy to all that passes in our inmost souls! Let us pray all the more earnestly for the past, that He may forgive us our secret sins, even those also which are unknown to ourselves. And for the future, let us both pray and strive, that He may hear from our lips, and see in our hearts, only that which is good!

Having thus entered into Jerusalem, Jesus stayed not to sleep there; but when he had first looked round about upon all things, in the evening He returned unto Bethany. Thus the daytime He employed in public duty; He spent it in the tumult of the city, in the courts of the temple. In the evening He retired, with the twelve, to the peaceful village, and to his friends. His work was such as courted the light. His enemies were such as wrought in the darkness. He withdrew Himself, therefore, during the night, from useless risk; and, where He could be doing no good, was not willing to expose Himself to harm. Such, at least, is the lesson we may do well to learn from this passage in the history of our Lord. And thus may we best walk in his steps, if, whensoever the occasion requires it, we boldly maintain God's cause, in the face of his enemies, and in the light of day; and gladly also withdraw ourselves, when the exigency of his service allows, to the sober and seasonable enjoyment of reflection, retirement, and friendly conversation.

Christ maketh the fig tree wither, cleanseth the temple.

12 And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry :

13 ¹ And seeing a fig tree afar off having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet.

14 And Jesus answered and said unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his disciples heard it.

15 ² And they come to Jerusalem: and Jesus went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves;

16 And would not suffer that any man should carry any vessel through the temple.

17 And he taught, saying unto them, Is it not written, My house shall be called of all nations the house of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves.

18 And the scribes and chief priests heard it, and sought how they might destroy him: for they feared him, because all the people was astonished at his doctrine.

¹ Matt. 21. 19.

² Matt. 21. 12.

⁴ Matt. 7. 7.

19 And when even was come, he went out of the city.

20 ³ And in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots.

21 And Peter calling to remembrance saith unto him, Master, behold, the fig tree which thou cursedst is withered away.

22 And Jesus answering saith unto them, || Have faith in God.

23 For verily I say unto you, That whosoever shall say unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea; and shall not doubt in his heart, but shall believe that those things which he saith shall come to pass; he shall have whatsoever he saith.

24 Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.

25 And when ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses.

26 But if ye do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your trespasses.

³ Matt. 21. 19.

⁶ Matt. 6. 14

|| Or, Have the faith of God.

§ 153. That we should pray with faith, and with forgiveness.

The fig tree, which to our Lord when hungry yielded "nothing but leaves," though "the time of figs," that is, of fig gathering, was not yet, so that there might naturally have been figs found on it; this barren fig tree is here made by his grace and goodness to bear fruit of edification to his disciples for ever. Thus does the wisdom of God in every eas out of evil derive good; and his judgments, no less than his more obvious mercies, minister to the increase of our faith and love!

The sentence of barrenness is pronounced by our Lord, when on his way from Bethany to Jerusalem. By the next morning the fig tree is "dried up from the roots." But in the meantime He had visited that city and people of the Jews, which was in like manner barren of good works, and alike devoted to destruction. There He taught the important lesson that the house of God is "the house of prayer;" casting out from the temple all those who frequented its sacred courts for any other purposes but those of devotion. Let us hence be warned against the sinfulness of attending divine service from any mere worldly motive, merely to please men, merely to do as our neighbours do. Much less let us ever resort thither with a view to meeting with our friends and neighbours, for worldly business, or for worldly talk. Much less let us, when there, buy or sell even in thought, transact even in imagination our ordinary work; but devote our whole attention in singleness of heart to the gains of godliness, to the enriching of our souls by the gifts of grace.

The lesson, which we are to learn from the fig tree being dried up, is nearly the same with this which is interposed in the midst of that miracle. It is the lesson of prayer. It is the lesson of faith in praying. "Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." It is the lesson also of forgiveness towards each other, when we pray to be forgiven ourselves. "When ye stand praying, forgive, if ye have ought against any: that your Father also which is in heaven may forgive you your trespasses." Here, then, besides the careful exclusion of all other topics from our thoughts in prayer, we have also two chief points insisted on towards praying effectually; whether we pray in the temple, or in the closet, or in the congregation of an assembled family. First, we must pray with faith, not doubting in our hearts that God is able and willing to dry up the root of sinfulness within us; or to remove from us that burden of our iniquities, which, as a mountain is too heavy for us to bear. In the second place, whilst we pray for forgiveness, we must practise also to forgive. We must exercise towards the offences of our fellow creatures that mercy which we depend on in our own. In the daily intercourse of each family, many occasions are presented for the practice of this important duty. Many hasty words there are to be borne with meekness; many trifling wrongs to be requited with acts of unmerited and kind attention. In these cases it should be our constant endeavour to "overcome evil with good." Rom. 12. 21. Or if we have not the grace to do so at the time, let us at least, when we kneel down in prayer, cast away from us all remaining thought of bitterness. Thus will it be our joy to think that we are forwarding our present pardon, and promoting our hope of mercy in the day of the manifestation of God's mercy through Christ. Whilst, on the other hand, we have this infallible warning against harbouring a revengeful spirit, that if we do not forgive, neither will our Father which is in heaven forgive our trespasses.

Christ asketh of the Scribes one question.

27 And they come again to Jerusalem: 'and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief priests, and the scribes, and the elders,

28 And say unto him, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority to do these things?

29 And Jesus answered and said unto them, I will also ask of you one question, and answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things.

30 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? answer me.

31 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him?

32 But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed.

33 And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell. And Jesus answering saith unto them, Neither do I tell you by what authority I do these things.

¹ Matt. 21. 23.

|| Or, thing.

§ 154. How we should inquire after the truth.

The Jewish rulers were labouring under a notion that the Messiah was to be a kind of temporal prince, whose authority would supersede their own. This we must suppose to have been one main ground of their constant opposition to our Lord. But, in excuse of their unbelief, they raised doubts of his divine mission; and they now asked Him who gave Him his authority, as though they were not already aware that He professed to derive it from Almighty God. Our Lord replies by asking them also one question. And by attending to their reasons for not answering it, we shall see the real motives of their conduct, and may be warned against the influence of like motives in our own. "If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then did ye not believe him? But if we shall say, Of men; they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed. And they answered and said unto Jesus, We cannot tell." They did not, it seems, at all consider how they might answer this question truly; they did not, on being asked, take pains to learn whence the baptism of John did in reality come. The truth of a matter, which to know was of deep importance to their practice, this they did not care to inquire into. They weighed only how their answer would tell in the world. And they would fain have so framed it, as to give no ground for offence to the people, and no opening to Christ for a practical application.

This is the way in which the disputers of this world argue commonly; for victory, and not for truth. They consider, in their conversation, what will best shew off themselves, their own candour, talent, or civility; and care not any further for the result of their discussions, than their own reputation is concerned. And these are the two chief considerations which beset in all ages the faithless inquirer; who searches into the things of God, without honest purpose to obey his will. One while he considers, ere he adopts any doctrine proposed, what will the people think of it? what credit or discredit will he get in the world, by that devotion of his life to heavenly things, which he is inclined to suspect must be necessary? Or, in the second place, he calculates what sacrifice it will cost to his own corrupt nature; what duties he will have to perform, what self-denial to undergo, if he admits his baptism to be indeed from heaven, and to bind him to the actual fulfilment of all that the Gospel teaches, by no less an obligation than a covenant with God. These, it is true, are important considerations. And the more we are called upon to bear from others, and the more to deny within ourselves, the more carefully we may be allowed to inquire whether we have or have not followed "cunningly devised fables." 2 Pet. 1. 16. But in conducting that inquiry, we must proceed on the principles of reasonable conviction; only so much the more watchfully guarding against the risk of error, in proportion as we have here the more at stake. And we must both ask and answer, if we would have credit for honesty in our search, with no reference to the cost of our conclusion.

All such mean and ensnaring reflections let us resolutely discard from our minds, when we inquire of any proposed doctrine or duty, whether we shall admit it to be from heaven or not. Let us neither fear what the people will think of us, for the opinion we may ultimately form; nor heed what sacrifice of interest or convenience it may threaten in the result to cost us. Let us in honesty of purpose inquire only into this one great question, Is it the revealed will of God? This, if once we ascertain, as far as may be, by examination of Scripture with prayer, and by consulting our spiritual guides, with deference to the opinions of wise and good men, in all ages of the church; this, if once we ascertain of the thing we have in hand, after the use of all means of inquiry, that it is the will of God in Christ Jesus; then should we at once resolve to adopt it, as the rule of our lives. Then, whether it be a laborious duty, or a doctrine of ill repute in the estimation of the world, it is enough for us to be assured that it is the will of Him, who ordereth all things for the best, and who maketh all things, if we truly love Him, work together for our good. See Rom. 8. 28.

Make us, heavenly Father, to search for truth, with single purpose to obey thy will! Make us indifferent to the fear of men, but willing to defer to their enlightened judgment. Make us resolve to count all things but loss, even all we most love on earth, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord. See Phil. 3. 8.

The parable of the vineyard and the husbandmen.

1 And ¹he began to speak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and set an hedge about it, and digged a place for the winefat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country.

2 And at the season he sent to the husbandmen a servant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard.

3 And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away empty.

4 And again he sent unto them another servant; and at him they cast stones, and wounded him in the head, and sent him away shamefully handled

5 And again he sent another; and him they killed, and many others; beating some, and killing some.

6 Having yet therefore one son, his well-beloved, he sent him also last unto them, saying, They will reverence my son.

7 But those husbandmen said among themselves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance shall be our's.

8 And they took him, and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard.

9 What shall therefore the lord of the vineyard do? he will come and destroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others.

10 And have ye not read this scripture; ²The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner:

11 This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?

12 And they sought to lay hold on him, but feared the people: for they knew that he had spoken the parable against them: and they left him, and went their way.

¹ Matt. 21. 33.² Psalm 118. 22.§ 155. That we should render unto God the fruit of righteousness.

It was the object of our Lord, in many of the parables which have been recorded in the Gospels, to foreshew the rejecting of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. We may conclude, therefore, that these are matters well suited for our frequent consideration. And in the present instance, we may first observe how sufficiently the Almighty always furnishes mankind, for the service He requires at their hands. The vineyard represents the great blessing, and the many privileges, of a divine revelation, such as the Jews enjoyed. These were let out to them as to hire, entrusted to them on covenant, for certain fruits to be paid to the Almighty owner. They are furnished by his care with a hedge, a winefat, a tower; with all things necessary for the management and the security of the business committed to their charge. And it was "at the season," not till they were therefore able to pay, that they were required to make good their agreement. So true and righteous are God's dealings with mankind, under every dispensation! So equitably does He demand of us no more, and so graciously does He accept of us through Christ, far less, than He has Himself enabled us to pay!

In the conduct of the husbandmen we have faithfully represented both the behaviour of the Jews under the Law, and that to which Christians are tempted under the Gospel. As those wicked men slew the servants and the son, when sent unto them with a just demand, so the Jews also put to death their Messiah; and so do we transgress, whenever we would take the benefit of Gospel mercy, without fulfilling the precepts of Gospel righteousness. We may not enjoy the privileges of the vineyard, without paying the prescribed rent. We may not take hold of the offer of mercy, whilst we refuse to present in return the fruits of repentance and faith, in all reverence, and holiness, and love. We cannot secure to ourselves the benefits of God's revelation, whilst we neglect to perform the duties it enjoins. We cannot share the knowledge of his will, and the opportunity of grace to fulfil it, without becoming liable, if we fulfil it not, to be visited in his wrath with the greater condemnation. This did our Lord very plainly tell the Jews of their covenant; intimating not only that they should be rejected, but that the Gentiles should be invited to supply their place. The lord of the vineyard should give it unto others; and that, for this very object, as is added in St. Matthew's account of this parable, that they should "render him the fruits in their seasons." Matt. 21. 41.

Those others are the Gentiles; and of the Gentiles, so privileged, are we. As Christians, as members of the holy catholic Christian church, we have a vineyard let out to us for hire, abundantly furnished with all means and helps, for rendering unto God the fruits of righteousness. And must we not be aware, with the Jews, that Christ hath spoken this parable in some measure against us? Do we feel no suspicion that it applies to our too eager clinging to God's promised mercy, our too thrifty payment of the service He demands? Do we never feel disposed to encroach on his goodness; to sin, on the strength of the pardon promised, instead of being moved thereby from thankfulness to love, and from love to zeal and to obedience? If thus we do, if thus we seek in all to profit for ourselves, and in nothing to repay our Lord, let us be aware that He hath spoken against ourselves the parable we have now been considering. Oh, whilst thus He speaks to us, may we have the grace to hear! Never like those whom He thus first addressed, who "left him, and went their way," never may we turn from the words of his reproof, to the ways of our own selfishness and sin! Never may we hear without conviction! Never be convinced, without grace to repent! Never repent without faith, believe without obeying, or obey without love to persevere unto the end!

Christ answereth on the lawfulness of tribute.

13 ' And they sent unto him certain of the Pharisees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words.

14 And when they were come, they say unto him, Master, we know that thou art true, and carest for no man; for thou regardest not the person of men, but teachest the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?

15 Shall we give, or shall we not give? But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why tempt ye me? bring me. || a penny, that I may see it.

16 And they brought it. And he saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cæsar's.

17 And Jesus answering said unto them, Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.

¹ Matt. 22. 15.

|| Valuing of our money sevenpence halfpenny, as Matt. 18. 28.

§ 156. How we must pay what is due both to Cæsar and to God.

It was in order "to catch him in his words" that the Pharisees and the Herodians put this question to our Lord: "Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, or not?" For He could not fail to give offence, as they thought, by his reply, either to the people, if He allowed the lawfulness of the tribute, or to the Roman government, if He denied it. "Shall we give, or shall we not give?" say they; as though anxious to learn for their own information. "But he, knowing their hypocrisy, said unto them, Why tempt ye me?" How impious then, and not impious only, but utterly vain is any attempt to veil from his allseeing eye our inmost thoughts. He knew their hypocrisy. He knoweth, if there be in us any, He knoweth ours. He knoweth if in any thing we make a show of inquiring his will, with other purpose than to learn and do it. "Why tempt ye me?" is the answer we provoke, whenever we read his word without hearty affection, and sincere intention to fulfil what there we find. Or if we ask of Him in prayer, without longing for his grace, if we pray even for grace, without purpose to work with it to the uttermost ourselves, what other reply can we expect to our petitions, than the same words of sorrow and condemnation: "Why tempt ye me?" It is not only what our lips may utter, or what our eyes may read, no, nor even what our thoughts are dwelling on, but rather what our hearts are purposing to do; this is what, whilst we ask in prayer, He knoweth and chiefly noteth; and by this it is that He judgeth whether we ask in hypocrisy or in truth, whether we shall receive a blessing or a rebuke.

Besides exposing their hypocrisy, our Lord avoided also the snare of these Pharisees, by putting it to themselves to own that the tribute money was already in some sort Cæsar's; and then concluding with this counsel, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; and to God the things that are God's." Which words well furnish us with a plain rule of conduct, in a duty which men are often tempted amongst themselves either indirectly to evade, or openly to violate. That each should pay his proper share of the public burdens, is here shewn to be a part of common honesty. These things are Cæsar's. They are the right of the government for the good of the community. And they should be paid to the chief magistrate of the state, who is invested with the power of receiving them, and whose very image on the coin we use is a sign of his acknowledged sovereignty; they should be paid to him as fully, as punctually, as cheerfully, as what is due from each man to his neighbour. Whom indeed but our neighbour do we defraud by any direct or indirect evasion of such rates, taxes, or duties, as are borne by the community at large? And how can one penny thus unfairly saved argue the less dishonesty in him who gains it, because the loss is divided amongst hundreds or even millions of his neighbours, than if by some more simple fraud or falsehood he had taken it from the pocket of only one?

And further, in this reply of our Lord, besides this instance of duty towards our neighbour, we are instructed also in one main branch of our duty to God. We are to "render unto God the things that are God's." This precept seems to apply more to what the Pharisees in secret thought, than to what they had openly asked. It was on pretence that their property was sacred to Jehovah, that they would have withheld their tribute from Cæsar; but in reality, it was in order to spend what was so saved on themselves. For on other occasions, and with like vain excuses, they were equally ready to withhold from God that tribute, which in the way of help to their parents, or alms to the poor, was strictly due to Him. Let us then be here warned in both particulars. And whilst we faithfully pay all men, and especially the government, their due, let us see that we bestow largely on the poor that which is God's, and which He hath bidden us to lay out in his name on them. This is God's portion, even all which we can properly afford to give, for feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and instructing the ignorant. As lent unto Himself He graciously describes it. See Prov. 19. 17. But his, all the while, it really is. For what have we that we have not received? And his it will hereafter be shewn to be, when our Lord shall say to those who so bestow their goods: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25. 40.

Christ convinceth the Sadducees.

18 ¹ Then come unto him the Sadducees, which say there is no resurrection; and they asked him, saying,

19 Master, Moses wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

20 Now there were seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and dying left no seed.

21 And the second took her, and died, neither left he any seed: and the third likewise.

22 And the seven had her, and left no seed: last of all the woman died also.

23 In the resurrection therefore, when they shall rise, whose wife shall she be of them? for the seven had her to wife.

24 And Jesus answering said unto them, Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God?

25 For when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels which are in heaven.

26 And as touching the dead, that they rise: have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?

27 He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye therefore do greatly err.

¹ Matt. 22. 23.

§ 157. How much we may here know of heaven.

It appears from this passage that the Jews must have had, before our Saviour's time, some knowledge or notion of a resurrection; for else there could have been no Sadducees, to say "there is no resurrection." And it may help to confirm our dependance on that glorious consummation of our hopes, to reflect that it is a thing to which God's chosen people have looked forward in all ages of the world. Many indeed have also, in all ages, attempted to question its certainty. Having enjoyed perhaps their good things in this world, or being aware that they should hereafter have many bad actions to answer for, they have attempted to persuade others, or if not others, themselves, that no future resurrection can take place. As if any speculation of reason could avail, in a matter which no reason could discover; and which being once discovered to us by God, no reason can possibly gainsay! As if any one except Him who will raise us from the dead, could either at the first have intimated, or at the last plainly revealed to us, the certainty that we shall so be raised!

If, then, we should ever hear or meet with such objections, if we should ever be perplexed with the difficulty of conceiving how beings so weak and wicked as mankind, can inherit the pure joys of heaven, let us call to mind our Lord's answer in this place: "Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the Scriptures, neither the power of God?" Distrust in God's power, the power of Him, who made, as we own, the world we see, and ignorance of the Scriptures, which are his word, these are the two chief hindrances, to which we must refer the manifold difficulties of unbelief. Knowing this, let us in all our doubts both make ourselves better acquainted with God's word, and enliven our convictions of his power by considering that with Him "all things are possible." And in regard to the difficulty of the resurrection of the dead, let us remember what He hath here said of his faithful servants, that "when they shall rise from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels which are in heaven." In that blessed condition we must expect to exercise no love less large, no affections less pure, than those with which angels wait upon the Lord, and "minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." Heb. 1. 14. That state cannot be judged of from our present faculties; though we know, that if we rightly use them, they will, in a measure, help us to attain it.

Nor is there any thing either in Scripture very plainly told us, as to what heaven actually is. Only we know, in some respects, what it is not. It is not a place where the wicked prosper. It is not a place where sin can enter. There will be no tears, no pain, no sorrow. And the happiness there to be experienced will not consist in such pleasures as here we meet with, or be abated with such alloy of imperfection as here mars the very best we can possess. Thus much we may know certainly of what heaven is not. But what it really is we must wait to know; we must wait until, with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, we shall be taken into the bright presence of God most high. And meantime we should greatly err in requiring as a necessary part of that felicity the renewal of our earthly connexions, or supposing that these could add to the satisfaction which the divine presence can alone inspire. Our affection we are sure to retain. For charity which is love, "never faileth." 1 Cor. 13. 8. But how we shall then feel it, is no where revealed. And it is enough for us to know, that in any case our happiness will be as great, as a Father who is Almighty can confer on children forgiven and accepted, through merits infinite, and mercy everlasting. Let us then not so much inquire what heaven is, as search how we may best secure its enjoyment. Let us here aim to love God above all our relatives, and to love all men as ourselves. That so we may hereafter more readily love Him only, or love with Him, alike truly and affectionately, all whom we shall then behold.

Christ answereth one of the scribes.

¹ 28 And one of the scribes came, and having heard them reasoning together, and perceiving that he had answered them well, asked him, Which is the first commandment of all?

29 And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel; The Lord our God is one Lord:

30 And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment.

31 And the second is like, namely this. Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

32 And the scribe said unto him, Well, Master, thou hast said the truth: for there is one God; and there is none other but he:

33 And to love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength, and to love his neighbour as himself, is more than all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices.

34 And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durst ask him any question.

¹ Matt. 22. 35.

§ 158. The love of God and of our neighbour.

The answer of our Lord to the scribe sets before us, as the two chief rules of our conduct, the love of God and the love of man. And these, we are to understand, not as set above all other commandments, but rather as including them. All are in this sense the first or the second, that they belong either to the first or second here laid down. We are to fix uppermost in our thoughts a due sense of Almighty God, as the Father creating us, as the Son redeeming us, as the Holy Ghost making us holy. Thus regarding Him, we are to love Him, as He first loved us; and for his sake, and according to his word, we are to love heartily all our fellow creatures. And then shall we need no further information, as to which commandment is first, or which last, when we feel no less in earnest anxieties, than we are most deeply bound, to fulfil them all.

Are we then elsewhere bidden to have no other gods than one? It is enough that we would not wish to have any other, for we love the one we have. Are we bidden to bow down before no image? It is enough that we love God who is a Spirit; and we shall need no image to help our devotions. Are we forbidden to take his name in vain? Nay, we delight to reverence it; for we love Him whose name it is. Are we forbidden on the sabbath day to do any manner of work? Nay more, we shall choose of ourselves, whilst we rest from labour, to labour in prayer and praise; for we love Him whose day it is; we love his day, we love his worship. And in like manner of our duties towards each other, of children to parents, of parents to children, of a humane regard to the life and health and welfare of our brethren, of purity in all our words and works, of truth, both in our solemn testimony, and in our ordinary talk, and of not coveting, much less taking to ourselves, any thing that is our neighbour's; in all these things, if we but love our neighbour as ourselves, if we but do unto him as we would he should do unto us, we shall do all that God would have us do, all that He hath commanded to be done. Whatever sin besets us, whatever action we have to perform of self-denial, or diligence, or benevolent exertion; we have only to consider which way should I best please God, or which way would I most wish my neighbour, in like case, to do unto me? And for this we need no more than sincerely to love. And thus "love is the fulfilling of the law." Rom. 13. 10. Love makes humble, instead of haughty; kind instead of selfish; free to give, as we have freely received; and ready to forgive, as we have been ourselves forgiven. Love makes us not look to the letter of the law, but inclines us to adopt its spirit; to bear, if possible, more than we are required; to do, if practicable, more than we are commanded. Love makes equal the widow's mite, and the rich man's golden talent. Love puts upon a par the poor man's labour, with the great man's office, and the wise man's words. Love lifts up the prayer of the penitent and the devout, however low their station, however small their means, above "all whole burnt offerings and sacrifices."

And to this the scribe here mentioned appears to have assented. And for so assenting, he was pronounced by our Lord to be "not far from the kingdom of God." So great is the privilege to know the truth! so near does this knowledge bring us to the gates of the city of salvation! Only let us remember, that to be near and then to fall short, to be not far off, and yet never to reach unto holiness and heaven, this will but aggravate our regret, this will but increase our condemnation. To assent is one thing; to adopt the truth, to love it, and to live it, is another. To assent without love, to know without believing, to answer discreetly without obeying entirely, these things do no more than make us "not far from the kingdom of God." To be in it we must do, as well as learn our duty, we must keep the commandments we assent to. We must love God, and we must love our neighbour. We must love "God with all the heart, and with all the understanding, and with all the soul, and with all the strength." We must love our neighbour as we love ourselves.

God help us to love Him as He hath loved us! God help us to love each other as our own flesh! See Isaiah 58. 7. God make our love to be "without dissimulation;" that we may "abhor," as well as avoid, "that which is evil;" that we may not do only, but "cleave to that which is good;" that we may in honour prefer "one another," distribute to the necessity of the saints, "bless them which persecute" us, "live peaceably with all men," "avenge not" ourselves, and "overcome evil with good." Rom. 12. 9—21.

Christ refuteth the scribes, and commendeth the widow's mites.

35 ¹ And Jesus answered and said, while he taught in the temple, How say the scribes that Christ is the son of David? tence make long prayers: these shall receive greater damnation.

36 For David himself said by the Holy Ghost, The Lord said to my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

37 David therefore himself calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his son? And the common people heard him gladly.

38 And he said unto them in his doctrine, ² Beware of the scribes, which love to go in long clothing, and love salutations in the marketplaces,

39 And the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts:

40 ³ Which devour widows' houses, and for a pre-

41 ⁴ And Jesus sat over against the treasury, and beheld how the people cast [†] money into the treasury: and many that were rich cast in much.

42 And there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two [†] mites, which make a farthing.

43 And he called unto him his disciples, and saith unto them, Verily I say unto you, That this poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury:

44 For [†] they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

¹ Matt. 22. 41.

² Matt. 23. 5.

³ Matt. 23. 14.

⁴ Luke 21. 1.

[†] A piece of brass money: See Matt. 10. 9.

[†] It is the seventh part of one piece of that brass money.

§ 159. The conduct valued by the inward disposition.

The question of our Lord, how Christ could be the son of David, appears to have greatly perplexed the scribes. Meanwhile "the common people heard him gladly." This may mean that they were glad, as is too often the case, to see those who were above them put to shame. Or rather we should interpret it of the ease and joy, with which they apprehended the mystery here revealed. For thus do many amongst the multitude understand, to their comfort, what to the more learned is full of perplexity; and this is, wherever learning is obscured by pride, and its absence is supplied by zeal and humility. Where these qualities abound, there no doctrine, out of all that are helpful to salvation, is above the reach of the most plain understanding. We see often how readily the unlearned apprehend matters much more obscure than Gospel truth, where their interest or livelihood is concerned. Let us, then, never give up a difficulty in religion, as too hard for us either to learn or practise, till we have called to mind how much we have at stake, in knowing, and doing, the will of Christ. David's Son He was after the flesh; David's Lord after his divine nature. Wherein we see, both that Christ was man, and also that Christ was God; as man, able to die for our sins, and as God, able to make atonement for them.

As in the last question the learning of the scribes was put to shame, so in the words following, their hypocrisy is condemned. Jesus warns the people to beware of them, on the ground of their pretending to be devout, whilst their conduct was full of iniquity. The wearing "long clothing" they meant for a sign of gravity and dignity. The "salutations in the marketplace" they loved to give as a display of their courtesy, to receive as a token of their estimation. They sought "the chief seats in the synagogues, and the uppermost rooms at feasts," as a manifestation of their rank and importance. And all the while they scrupled not to devour widows' houses. They imposed on the most forlorn of their fellow creatures. They oppressed those who could least help themselves. "And for a pretence," by way of screening their injustice, they used to "make long prayers;" they used purposely to make a show of their public devotions. These, adds our Lord, "these shall receive the greater damnation." Let all, therefore, who are tempted to take unfair advantage of such as are least able to defend themselves, remember, that God "is a father of the fatherless, and defendeth the cause of the widows." Psalm 68. 5. If they thus, however secretly, transgress, no prayers they may utter can otherwise avail, than to increase their condemnation for ever. The longer they pray, and the more in public, the more do they aggravate their concealed sins before Him, who seeth each action of their hands, each thought of their minds, each purpose of their hearts.

That the quality of our actions, as viewed by God, depends mainly on the inward disposition in ourselves, we have further assurance in the praise our Lord here bestowed on the contribution of a widow to the treasury. This was a fund appropriated to sacred uses. And whilst "many that were rich cast in much," "there came a certain poor widow, and she threw in two mites, which make a farthing." This was an amount in itself most trifling. And to ordinary beholders it would seem to be scarce better than mockery. But over against the treasury there sat at that time One who was aware that it was "all that she had, even all her living." And He knew, therefore, that it argued in her the greater disposition to give. And truly might He in this sense say of her: "This poor widow hath cast more in, than all they which have cast into the treasury." And graciously will He repeat that saying, pronounce that praise on the very poorest of us, in proportion as we approach to the pattern of this widow, and are willing, in any works of almsgiving or love, to cast in even all that we have.

Christ prophesieth the destruction of the temple.

1 And as he went out of the temple, one of his disciples saith unto him, Master, see what manner of stones and what buildings are here!

2 And Jesus answering said unto him, Seest thou these great buildings? there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

3 And as he sat upon the mount of Olives over against the temple, Peter and James and John and Andrew asked him privately,

4 Tell us, when shall these things be? and what shall be the sign when all these things shall be fulfilled?

5 And Jesus answering them began to say, Take heed lest any man deceive you:

6 For many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many.

7 And when ye shall hear of wars and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for such things must needs be; but the end shall not be yet.

8 For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be earthquakes in divers places; and there shall be famines and troubles: these are the beginnings of sorrows.

9 But take heed to yourselves: for they shall deliver you up to councils; and in the synagogues ye shall be beaten: and ye shall be brought before rulers and kings for my sake, for a testimony against them.

10 And the gospel must first be published among all nations.

11 But when they shall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought beforehand what ye shall speak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatsoever shall be given you in that hour, that speak ye: for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost.

12 Now the brother shall betray the brother to death, and the father the son; and children shall rise up against their parents, and shall cause them to be put to death.

13 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved.

¹ Matt. 24. 1.

² Matt. 24. 3.

|| The word in the original importeth the pains of a woman in travail.

³ Matt. 10. 19.

§ 160. Christian encouragement in times of trouble.

At the sight of the temple the disciples express their admiration at the great stones and buildings. They thought, perhaps, that it would be as a palace for their Master when He should establish the kingdom they were looking for on earth. Jesus, in his answer, leads them to look for his reign elsewhere; and teaches the transitory nature of this world's grandeur, by assuring them that of the buildings they admired there should not be left "one stone upon another" that should not be cast down. Nor does He speak this with any of the same concern which He elsewhere manifested for the rejection of the Jews. So much more grievous a sight to Him is a lost soul than a fallen temple! And in proportion as we are like to Him, so much less, even in God's house, should we care for the size and splendour of the buildings, than for the truths and spirit of the service there performed! Let us learn hence, that of all adorning of churches, devotion in our worship is the best! Let us reflect how perishable are all outward helps, not of worship only, but of all earthly state and greatness! And let us so much the more study to prepare ourselves for the enjoyment of a building of God, "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

To the question of the disciples put privately, as in confidence, "When shall these things be?" our Lord replies, not by revealing the time, but by teaching how to prepare for its arrival. Hence we learn that we ought never to consult his word for the gratification of an idle curiosity; but for the improvement of our hearts, for the direction of our conduct. How long this world may last, or how soon it may come to an end, what matters this to us, compared with how we may best abide that end whenever it arrives, how best be fitted to stand before the judgment-seat of Christ. This then let us inquire of Him sincerely, and we may be sure He will vouchsafe us a gracious answer.

Thus from the instructions here given to the apostles, for their use in times of persecution, we may derive, amongst other lessons, applicable to all times, the two following of great practical importance. First, it appears here, that the Gospel does not propose to afford us undisturbed peace in this present world. It rather leads us to expect, as the consequence of our faithful services, the opposition, and even the hatred, of those amongst whom we live. Let not us therefore, if such treatment should ever be our lot, let not us be there by disheartened. Let us consider rather, that it is no more than our blessed Lord hath plainly warned us of beforehand. The very worst that can in this way befall us is a proof of his truth, and of the Gospel's. For it will not be worse than He foretold to his disciples, and through them to their followers for ever, "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake."

And, secondly, let us here note, that in the midst of these unwelcome tidings there shines forth this consolatory assurance: "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." Let us look then in all our troubles, let us look to the end. Let us consider both how soon it comes, and how great is the joy that comes with it. "The same shall be saved." He shall be saved from sin and death, shall partake with Christ of everlasting glory. Sad it is to hear of wars; but joyful is the rumour of their coming, if after them comes peace with God through Christ. Awful is the thought of famine or earthquake. But easy will be the shock, and short the pangs, that end in eating of the tree of life, and resting on the Rock of ages. See Isai. 26. 4. * Willing we should be to lie in prison, if God will there make us free; and glad to be hated of all men if we may thereby be blessed with his love!

Christ admonisheth the disciples how to act in their troubles.

14 ¹ But when ye shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand,) then let them that be in Judaea flee to the mountains:

15 And let him that is on the housetop not go down into the house, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his house:

16 And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment.

17 But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days!

18 And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.

¹ Matt. 24. 15.

19 For in those days shall be affliction, such as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created unto this time, neither shall be.

20 And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved: but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days.

21 ² And then if any man shall say to you, Lo, here is Christ; or, lo, he is there; believe him not:

22 For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall shew signs and wonders, to seduce, if it were possible, even the elect.

23 But take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things.

² Matt. 24. 23.

§ 161. Further directions in circumstances of difficulty.

As Jerusalem was a city whose calamities were in some sort a figure of those which should afterwards befall the Christian church; so the afflictions with which the Jews were visited represent those which will be dispensed to Christians until the end of time. And in our similar circumstances of difficulty and trial, we may profitably apply to our own conduct the directions here given to the disciples. Thus, from the instructions as to what they should do, when the prophecy of Daniel was visibly fulfilled, we learn the duty of studying the prophetic Scriptures, and comparing them with the signs of the times. And as we would not presumptuously pry into that which God has concealed of the future; so neither should we overlook the proofs of his foreknowledge, in what is daily taking place around us, nor the hints which we might hence derive for our behaviour, in any particular case or season.

Next let us here observe the warnings against turning back, when the time for flight should have arrived. Let us apply them to our prescribed flight from sin, our fleeing from the wrath to come. If we be as on the house top, a post which, from the construction of the houses in the east, might be favourable to speedy flight, if we be advanced in holiness, eminent already in God's good gifts of grace; let us not go down to take any thing out of the house, let us not, by any looking after or longing for the satisfactions of our earthly tabernacle, retard our escape to the mountains of salvation. And in like manner let us pray that our heavenward flight be not in the winter, may not happen in the season of old age; that we may not put off our repentance and faith, till that time of life when the days are shortest, and the ways are worst, the hindrances of travelling most numerous, and the night comes on before we are aware. For then, if we were overtaken by the approach of death, or by the coming of Christ to judgment, then should we have affliction to encounter such as in no other instance we could experience, from the beginning unto the end of our days. Then should we become sensible of the necessity of repentance, and yet feel it to be too late to repent; convinced of sin, when the time of pardon is no more; and most anxiously concerned to obey, when the night is come wherein no man can work.

And now note, in the assurance that the days of suffering shall be shortened for the sake of the elect, note how great is the gain of godliness, not only to the godly themselves, but to all who dwell with them in the same family, the same city, the same world. So closely are we connected with each other in our various social relations; so manifold are the influences of our words and works on the principles and practice of each other! No man can sin without communicating to his neighbours some risk, if not certainty of harm. Whilst, on the other hand, the obedience of the faithful, our election, if we, in our faith and obedience, are according to God's purpose elect, draws down, from our Father which is in heaven, a blessing on all them that dwell around us.

And lastly, by what is here said of false Christs and false prophets, let us be warned against the delusion of the many false religions, which are spread abroad amongst mankind under the authority of Christ's name. "Behold, I have foretold you all things," is our rule. Let us abide by what our Saviour hath set down in his word. Therein beforehand He hath told us all things, all things necessary for us to know; so that "whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man, that it should be believed as an article of the faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation." (Article 6.) "To the law and to the testimony," Isa. 8. 20; to this touchstone of truth, let us bring all strange doctrines that beguile the world, and we shall know readily the pretended from the real prophets, the false Christs from the true One.

Lord, teach us in thy word to look for Thee! Lord, help us, in the study of thy prophets and apostles, to discern thy wisdom, and our own salvation! Guide us by thy Holy Spirit, guide us into all truth! Make us to fly when it is the time for flight, and to stand when it is a duty to resist. Count us, for thine own sake, elect; and shorten, for thine elect's sake, the days when there should else no flesh be saved!

Christ telleth of his second coming, commandeth to watch.

24 'But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light,

25 And the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken.

26 And then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory.

27 And then shall he send his angels, and shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven.

28 Now learn a parable of the fig tree : When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is near :

29 So ye in like manner, when ye shall see these things come to pass, know that it is nigh, even at the doors.

30 Verily I say unto you, that this generation shall not pass, till all these things be done.

31 Heaven and earth shall pass away : but my words shall not pass away.

32 But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father.

33 'Take ye heed, watch and pray : for ye know not when the time is.

34 For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch.

35 Watch ye therefore : for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockerowing, or in the morning :

36 Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping.

37 And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch.

¹ Matt. 24. 29.

² Matt. 24. 42.

§ 162. That we must watch for our Lord's coming.

The previous instructions in this chapter we have considered partly as addressed to the early disciples to prepare them for their approaching troubles, and partly as applicable to our own preparation for the coming of Christ to judgment. To this latter object these concluding verses more clearly if not exclusively refer. We are warned of a period when "the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light." The outward world on which now our senses rest with confidence, will in an instant cease to be. The greater light will be no longer seen to rule the day, nor the lesser light to rule the night. The stars also, which we hold to be so bright, so great, so distant, so signal a proof of the power of Him who made them, "the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken."

In that hour of universal desolation, in that hour of shame and confusion of face to every impenitent offender, one object, and one only, shall engross the attention of mankind. "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory." And the end for which He will then come is to gather together his elect; to take unto Himself all those who, having been chosen to enjoy the knowledge of his truth, have in proportion to their knowledge obeyed and loved it. Let us endeavour to feel an interest in his coming, worthy of the great blessings He has in store for them that love their Lord. Let us behold in each tree which "putteth forth leaves," whence we know "that summer is near," a token that in like manner, as time goes on, and as the prophecies of our Lord are gradually fulfilled, "it is nigh," the great day He foretold is nigh, "even at the doors." And when we behold the sun, and moon, and stars, let us bethink ourselves how soon their glory shall decay; let us consider of the brightness we admire, how utterly dark it will become, when the Sun of righteousness shall again arise, when Christ shall come to judge the world.

"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." There is a sense in which the Son is "inferior to the Father, as touching" namely "his manhood." (Athanasian Creed.) There is a sense in which the Son Himself doth not know the hour of future judgment. How then shall man think to ascertain it? And why should we be curious to know the hour, instead of careful to be prepared for it whenever it may arrive? To "take heed, watch, and pray," this is our wisdom; these are the duties which most plainly follow from our knowing not "when the time is." Duties they are which we grievously neglect; but which we should be much more tempted to overlook, if we knew the day of our Lord's coming. For now that we know not when it is, we can never feel safe from its arrival. Never therefore can it be safe to cease from prayer. Never can it be safe to leave off watching. Never can it be safe to sin.

We are set as porters at a door, and our commandment is given us to watch. Our Master is "as a man taking a far journey." He has left his house. We see not in this world his glorious presence. We speak as if He were not near to hear. We act, and think, as if He were not immediately beholding our works, and wishes, and intentions. Of his coming, of his being made manifest to our sense, we know not when it will be. Only this much we may from many signs conclude, that "it is nigh, even at the doors." "Watch ye therefore." Watch, for this very reason, that "ye know not when the master of the house cometh." Watch against this very thing, "lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." Watch daily, as in the morning light the stars are seen to disappear; watch, for how know you that they shall shine again; and what will be your feelings when they fall? Watch, daily, as the sun goes down. How know you that you will see his light return? And how would you venture to be sinfully asleep, that night when the sun shall set never to rise again?

Christ is anointed by a woman ; is betrayed by Judas.

1 ¹ After two days was the feast of the passover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief priests and the scribes sought how they might take him by craft, and put him to death.

2 But they said, Not on the feast day, lest there be an uproar of the people.

3 ² And being in Bethany in the house of Simon the leper, as he sat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head.

4 And there were some that had indignation within themselves, and said, Why was this waste of the ointment made?

5 For it might have been sold for more than three hundred † pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured against her.

6 And Jesus said, Let her alone; why trouble ye her? she hath wrought a good work on me.

7 For ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good: but me ye have not always.

8 She ~~hath~~ done what she could: she is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.

9 Verily I say unto you, Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached throughout the whole world, this also that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her.

10 ² And Judas Iscariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief priests, to betray him unto them.

11 And when they heard it, they were glad, and promised to give him money. And he sought how he might conveniently betray him.

¹ Matt. 26. 2.² Matt. 26. 6.|| Or, pure nard, or liquid nard.

† See Matt. 18. 28.

² Matt. 26. 14.§ 163. That we must do, in Christ's service, what we can.

This most solemn of all their festivals was the last occasion, on which we might have expected that the Jewish rulers would have compassed the death of Christ. And they were indeed reluctant to have Him taken at that time. "They said, not on the feast day." But why? Not by reason of the sinfulness of what they designed. Not for fear of aggravating their sin before God. But for fear of men; "lest there be an uproar of the people." How much also of our deference, for things sacred, and for sacred days, might we trace, if we were to look well into our hearts, rather to a respect for man's opinion, than to a reverence for Almighty God! How often, when we say of any projected amusement or work, Not on the Sabbath, not on the Lord's day must it be done; how often is this said, and the day observed, rather for our character or example's sake, than out of our desire to obey our Lord! As if it mattered what men think of us, compared with how God esteems us! As if in any thing we were more bound to set an example to others, than in the same thing to edify ourselves!

Whilst the enemies of our Lord were seeking "how they might take him by craft," it occurred to one of his devout followers to do an act in preparation for his approaching death. "She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying." Such was the kind construction put by Jesus, on what might else have seemed an instance of inconsiderate waste. "There came a woman having an alabaster box of ointment of spikenard very precious; and she brake the box, and poured it on his head." This was a custom of the rich in that age, and in many countries, to use ointments of great value in profusion. It was a part of their luxurious living; and was reckoned to be at once an ornament of the body, and one of the chiefest delights of the sense. How wisely did this woman prefer to spend what was thus precious in the honouring of Christ! How well may we learn from her breaking of the box, and pouring it out all on his head, to spare in the service of our Lord no cost however great, no offering however valuable! How gladly should we refrain from spending on ourselves what we might better give as unto Him! and break, or burn, or otherwise destroy, rather than part with to the detriment of others, all such helps, as are lewd books and pictures, profane devices, and wicked stimulants, to vain luxury or to pleasurable sin!

"She hath done what she could," is the praise here given to this woman by our Lord. Let us hence learn that it is expected also of us to do what we can. Whatever be our information, opportunities, or abilities, we are bound to make the most of them in the service of Christ. If we can no longer anoint his body to the burying, if we have not the means to spend upon the poor who are in his stead, that which is precious in kind, or of large value in amount; we may surely find some luxury or comfort that we can ill afford to spare, and which we may thus spare with the better grace for his sake. Whilst the lovers of pleasure, and the lovers of money, are engaged with Judas in the guilty attempt to betray their Lord "conveniently;" whilst they seek to get for themselves as much, and to give to others as little as they may of this world's good things; let us do what we can, and desire to do more than we can, towards honouring of Christ, by ministering to the poor. Blessed be his name that He doth never require of us more than we might always do! Sufficient will it be for our eternal joy, if He shall say of the very poorest and most unworthy of us all, "She hath done what she could." The little which the very best of us can do, the unprofitable service we can at the utmost offer, He will, if we do it in earnest, honestly for the best, He will count it for more than we humbly think for; and reward it with the praise which it does in no wise deserve.

Christ eateth the passover, and ordaineth his supper.

12 ¹ And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou mayest eat the passover?

13 And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him.

14 And wheresoever he shall go in, say ye to the goodman of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

15 And he will shew you a large upper room furnished and prepared: there make ready for us.

16 And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

17 And in the evening he cometh with the twelve.

18 ² And as they sat and did eat, Jesus said, Verily I say unto you, One of you which eateth with me shall betray me.

19 And they began to be sorrowful, and to say unto him one by one, Is it I? and another said, Is it I?

20 And he answered and said unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dipperth with me in the dish.

21 The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but woe to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! good were it for that man if he had never been born.

22 ³ And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body.

23 And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it.

24 And he said unto them, This is my blood of the new testament, which is shed for many.

25 Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

¹ Matt. 26. 17.

|| Or, sacrificed.

² Matt. 26. 20.

³ Matt. 26. 26.

§ 164. How God suffereth evil, and how we should enjoy his good gifts.

We have many instances to prove that our blessed Lord knew all things, future as well as present, distant as well as near. And in pointing out where He would eat the passover with his disciples, He gives here, in a very striking manner, this evidence of his divine foreknowledge. That the disciples should meet a particular man in the city, that he should be bearing a pitcher of water, that he should be able to accommodate them with a large upper room; these, it must be owned, are trifling circumstances. And yet, in the innumerable contingencies of the world, no wisdom less than God's could tell, that just these would just then happen. And in the allowed exercise of human choice, no other power than divine could compass, that they should all then of a certainty take place. "And his disciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had said unto them." So is it in each least thing we do; God knoweth it beforehand. And hereafter we shall find, if we do it as He hath told us, we shall find as He hath said unto us, that we shall in no wise lose our reward. See chap. 10. 42.

"And they made ready the passover." In the midst of this solemn feast their Lord announced to them the sad intelligence, "One of you which eateth with me shall betray me." And then, to relieve the anxiety He had thus raised in the others, He pointed out Judas by the sign of his dipping at the same time with Himself into the dish. And at first it may seem strange, that our Lord, knowing his evil intentions, should suffer him to dip in the same dish, and partake of the same feast; or should have used his services as an apostle at all. But herein we should rather observe with reverence, how God often bears with evil for the sake of good. Thus He puts up with human frailty in the ministers of his true religion. And having settled to make use of such earthen vessels, in the establishment or continuance of his Gospel, He alters not their common nature. He suffers amongst his bishops, priests, and deacons, that some should very grievously offend; as He suffered the apostles to be often in error, and sometimes, no doubt, all of them in sin; and as He also suffered this one of them to become the betrayer of his Lord. Acquiescing in this divine dispensation, let us not expect in the ministers of the Gospel more than their due share of Christian grace. Let us never in them be scandalized at their proportionate degree of human frailty. Let us be content in the due evidence of their outward appointment, to leave the rest to Him who seeth the heart. The inward grace is what we can never truly estimate. And if we could, we may here see in Judas, that this was not in every instance a necessary qualification for discharging, to some useful purpose, even the more sacred office of an apostle.

Towards the close of their eating the passover, we find the institution of the blessed sacrament of the body and blood of Christ. This latter feast was not given to the apostles till they had received their natural food. Whence we may justly conclude for ourselves, that it is designed for the replenishing of our spiritual hunger and thirst. And as Christ declared at the end of it that He would "drink no more of the fruit of the vine," until the day when He should "drink it new in the kingdom of God;" so should the partaking of these heavenly mysteries give us also a distaste, in the comparison, for all worldly and carnal satisfactions. Never then let us abuse, to the purposes of intemperance, that fruit of the vine, which we have once drunk of as his blood, in remembrance of our Lord! Never let us eat in greediness, or waste in selfish luxury, that bread which we have once taken of and eaten as his body! But whether we eat, or drink; whether it be bread, or wine, or any other of God's good gifts, that we enjoy; let us do all to the glory of God, let us enjoy all with a view to the enjoyment of Christ's blessed presence in heaven! See 1 Cor. 10. 31.

Christ prayeth in Gethsemane.

26 And when they had sung an || hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

27 ¹ And Jesus saith unto them, All ye shall be offended because of me this night: for it is written, I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered.

28 But after that I am risen, I will go before you into Galilee.

29 ² But Peter said unto him, Although all shall be offended, yet will not I.

30 And Jesus saith unto him, Verily I say unto thee, That this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou shalt deny me thrice.

31 But he spake the more vehemently, If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise. Likewise also said they all.

32 ³ And they came to a place which was named Gethsemane: and he saith to his disciples, Sit ye here, while I shall pray.

33 And he taketh with him Peter and James and John, and began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy;

34 And saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch.

35 And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed that, if it were possible, the hour might pass from him.

36 And he said, Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take away this cup from me: nevertheless not what I ⁴will, but what thou wilt.

37 And he cometh, and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? couldest not thou watch one hour?

38 Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation. The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak.

39 And again he went away, and prayed, and spake the same words.

40 And when he returned, he found them asleep again, (for their eyes were heavy,) neither wist they what to answer him.

41 And he cometh the third time, and saith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your rest, it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners.

42 Rise up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

|| Or, psalm.

¹ Matt. 26. 31.

² Matt. 26. 33.

³ Matt. 26. 36.

§ 165. That in our weakness we should be humble and watchful.

When Christ warned his disciples that one of them should betray Him, they asked with concern, "Lord, is it I?" v. 19. When afterwards informed of a less heinous offence, "All ye shall be offended because of me this night," they are ready to join with Peter in saying, "If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise." In the result we may plainly see, how much better against the hour of trial, is a humble distrust of our resolution, than a presumptuous security in our strength. However heinous be the sin we are informed of, far be it from us to venture to declare, that we shall never so dishonour our Saviour Christ. When the oath of the swearer bursts upon our ears, when the drunkard meets us in the way, when the adulterer is exposed to public shame, when the felon is led forth to execution; far be it from us to profess unto our Lord, I will never so deny Thee. Rather let us say, each within himself, Have not I, in proportion to my light and knowledge, been guilty of no less grievous sins? Am not I still in danger of so sinning? And is it not by grace alone that I can stand? And what grace can I expect without humility of heart?

Sad was the proof of what our weakness is, and fearful the evidence of what agony sin may make us to endure, as shewn forth by the sufferings of the blessed Jesus in the "place which was named Gethsemane." It was as man that He "began to be sore amazed, and to be very heavy." It was as man that He "saith unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful unto death." It was the taste of our sins which made that cup so bitter, that hour so full of horror, and that willing Saviour so intent to pray, that they might, if it were possible, pass from Him. Oh how should it embitter to us the taste of sinful pleasure, to hear Him pray against our cup of woe! Oh how should it convince us of our dependance upon God, to see our Saviour falling on the ground, offering up supplications "with strong crying and tears," Heb. 5. 7; and owning of Himself, as of his disciples, "The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak."

And joyful we may be to think, that as in his own pure nature He could not possibly have been liable to such agony, so does it necessarily follow that He bare all this for us, and for our salvation. Yet must we not also be ashamed to reflect, how truly our own indifference to so great mercy is represented by the case of the disciples, who could not watch with Him even a single hour? Only the brief duration of this transitory life does our Saviour demand our service. And that service may be truly described to be no more, than that we should watch with Him. He goes forward, and prays for us. He contends for us, and prevails over sin and death. He bears the main weight of the contest. He supplies the main strength for the victory. Only He asks of us that we meantime watch; that we should ourselves be awake unto righteousness; that we should feel a lively interest in his blessed work, devote ourselves to follow in his steps, and watch and pray that we be not tempted to the sleep of sin. Oh how easy is his yoke through grace to bear; and his burden how light, through watchfulness to support! Oh, how deep must be our shame and confusion of face, if we deserve, as we do often, for our spiritual sloth, to hear from his lips the affectionate reproof: "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?"

Christ is taken ; is forsaken by the disciples.

43 ¹ And immediately, while he yet spake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude with swords and staves, from the chief priests and the scribes and the elders.

44 And he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he ; take him, and lead him away safely.

45 And as soon as he was come, he goeth straight-way to him, and saith, Master, master ; and kissed him.

46 And they laid their hands on him, and took him.

47 And one of them that stood by drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear.

48 And Jesus answered and said unto them, Are ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and with staves to take me ?

49 I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not : but the scriptures must be fulfilled.

50 And they all forsook him, and fled.

51 And there followed him a certain young man, having a linen cloth cast about his naked body ; and the young men laid hold on him ;

52 And he left the linen cloth, and fled from them naked.

¹ Matt. 26. 47.

§ 166. How we may follow Christ unto the end.

Which shall we count the worst of our Lord's enemies, the multitude who came against Him " with swords and staves," or Judas, who had " given them a token, saying, Whomsoever I shall kiss, that same is he ?" Which sin shall we most abominate in ourselves ; the wrath which assaults with violence, or the malice that flatters only to betray ? Far be from us the traitor's treason ? Far be from us the people's rage ! Far be from us alike the love of strife, the stain of falsehood, or the guilt of blood ! Never may we follow the multitude to do evil ! Never may we with our lips draw near to Christ, whilst our hearts are all the while far from Him ! Never may we say, Master, Master, and do not the things He hath commanded !

" And they laid their hands on him, and took him." In this emergency " one of them that stood by" thought to defend his Master by dint of bloodshedding. He " drew a sword, and smote a servant of the high priest, and cut off his ear." Whilst Jesus, instead of resisting them by force, meekly reasoned with them that such force as they applied was needless : " I was daily with you in the temple teaching, and ye took me not ;" meaning that they might have taken Him easily at any time without violence. Here we see how we might best meet force with meekness ; how turn away wrath with a soft answer. Who might not better thus reason gently with a brother that offends, than either rebuke him sharply, or obstinately resist him ? And who that has in him " the same mind which was also in Christ Jesus," who would not rather offer to the midnight robber, his wealth or life with resignation, than draw the sword in their defence ; than spend, in striving unto blood, those moments, which either to himself or his assailant may probably be the last that will be granted, for prayer and repentance before God ?

" And they all forsook him, and fled." All ; even they all, who so lately had agreed to declare, " If I should die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wise." All ; even he also, who in the vehemence of his zeal had drawn a sword in his Master's defence. So often will men fight for their religion, who notwithstanding refuse to suffer for it ! So ready are they, in their pride or anger, to draw the sword of war or controversy ! So slow to abide, in the hour of trial, the scorn of the haughty, or the triumph of the great ! They follow Christ as far as their own passions are inclined, as far as their own credit for courage or consistency may be thereby upheld in the world. But they follow not unto disgrace. They follow not unto bonds. They follow not to the cross, to the patient endurance of mockery, and stripes, and death. They follow, as did the young man here mentioned, who continued till the officers would have seized him ; and then left the linen cloth they held by, and, rather than not escape, " fled from them naked." So do many follow Christ up to risk of inconvenience ; and then turn and fly, at all risk of shame.

How then may we better love our Redeemer ? how follow Him to our own eternal honour, now that neither our life nor our credit is endangered by the service He requires ? Let us be ready in spirit to lay down either, or both, at his feet. Let us go on where others stop, go with Him when others fly ; counting ourselves there only to begin to follow, where we find the path narrow, and the gateway strait. Let us sacrifice, what to many is dearer than life, our own pleasure, our own inclination, our pride, our lusts, our evil thoughts, our wanton or idle words. Let us encounter, when it so happens, for his sake, even the displeasure of those we love, and the loss of their accustomed esteem, rather than do what we should be ashamed to own to God, what will make us naked in his sight hereafter.

The Lord, in his mercy, incline our hearts to follow Himself unto the end ; to fear no shame but his reproof ; no ill will, but his displeasure. The Lord make us meek to answer when assailed ; and slow to strike when smitten ; averse to flatter, faithful to defend, and only afraid to sin !

Christ is condemned by the council of the Jews.

53 ¹ And they led Jesus away to the high priest: and with him were assembled all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes.

54 And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high priest: and he sat with the servants, and warmed himself at the fire.

55 ² And the chief priests and all the council sought for witness against Jesus to put him to death; and found none.

56 For many bare false witness against him, but their witness agreed not together..

57 And there arose certain, and bare false witness against him, saying,

58 We heard him say, I will destroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands.

59 But neither so did their witness agree together.

60 And the high priest stood up in the midst, and asked Jesus, saying, Answerest thou nothing? what is it which these witness against thee?

61 But he held his peace, and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him, and said unto him, Art thou the Christ, the Son of the Blessed?

62 And Jesus said, I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

63 Then the high priest rent his clothes, and saith, What need we any further witnesses?

64 Ye have heard the blasphemy: what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

65 And some began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to say unto him, Prophecy: and the servants did strike him with the palms of their hands.

¹ Matt. 26. 57.

² Matt. 26. 59.

³ Matt. 24. 30.

§ 167. How we are in danger of dishonouring our Lord.

We have here an account of the trial and condemnation of Jesus by the high priest and assembled council. Wherein we may first observe how eminently sinful it must be to bear false witness; seeing that this was a chief means by which the sentence against our Lord was brought to pass. True it is of all sin, that it lays on us, according to its degree, according to how much we know, and how little we do, of our Christian duty, the guilt of compassing the death of Christ. And here this is most obvious of false witness. Let us therefore, with redoubled watchfulness, refrain our lips from evil, and our tongue that it speak no guile. See Psalm 34. 13. Henceforth let us be more than ever on our guard, that we neither invent nor repeat the slightest misrepresentation of the actions and motives of our neighbours; that when called upon to give evidence, we tell of them the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and when speaking of them in our common conversation, we detract not in jealousy aught from their good qualities, nor aggravate their failings to extenuate our own.

Secondly, it is to be observed in this account, how entirely our Lord's innocence is made manifest in all that the false witnesses laid to his charge. This was needful to satisfy us that He died not for any offence He had himself committed, but only for our sins; only for us men, and for our salvation. And it should greatly help to support our patience under the burden of a false charge or imputation, when we see how Jesus "held his peace, and answered nothing," how "when he was reviled," He "reviled not again," 1 Pet. 2. 23; how when "many bare false witness against him," and "their witness agreed not together," He endured in silence and submission "such contradiction of sinners against himself." Heb. 12. 3.

Thirdly, we have here our Lord's own testimony that He was "the Christ, the Son of the Blessed." "Jesus said, I am." These were the very words, the very name by which God had in the Old Testament described Himself. "And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM; and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." Exod. 3. 14. To this assertion that He was the Christ, and this probable intimation that He was at the same time God, He adds, "and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Whilst then we consider our Lord as the spotless sacrifice offered once for sin, let us at the same time regard Him as the God who will hereafter bring sinners to judgment. He died for our salvation, for the saving us from sin and death. He liveth also, He liveth for ever, to call us to account for our transgressions of his will: "I am," saith He, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. 1. 18.

"Behold, he cometh with clouds;" even He who stood silent before the council, He who was of them despised, and they esteemed Him not. "Behold, he cometh with clouds," as it is written in those last Revelations which He has been pleased to grant unto his church, "and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him," Rev. 1. 7; even they also who "began to spit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him." Oh, let us now take earnest heed, that by our sins we pierce Him not! Oh, let us now watch, lest whilst we pray unto Him and praise Him with our lips, our lives do, as it were, buffet Him with indignity, and cover his face from regarding us with love! For what is it short of mockery and contempt, first to know and to own Him for the Christ, and then wilfully, and perversely, and notoriously, to violate his precepts, to do despite unto his grace, and to reject his counsel for the saving of the soul?

Christ is thrice denied of Peter.

66 ¹ And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high priest:

67 And when she saw Peter warming himself, she looked upon him, and said, And thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth.

68 But he denied, saying, I know not, neither understand I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew.

69 And a maid saw him again, and began to say to them that stood by, This is one of them.

¹ Matt. 26. 69.

² Matt. 26. 75.

70 And he denied it again. And a little after, they that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto.

71 But he began to curse and to swear, saying, I know not this man of whom ye speak.

72 ² And the second time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jesus said unto him, Before the cock crew twice, thou shalt deny me thrice. ¶ And when he thought thereon, he wept.

¶ Or, he wept abundantly, or, he began to weep.

§ 168. How the sin of Peter was suggested, persisted in, and repented of.

The behaviour of St. Peter, here so faithfully recorded by his constant companion St. Mark, may be considered as a warning to all Christians of the perils and progress of falsehood. For who is there that dare reckon himself to be safe, when so grievous a fall is set down, against one to whom our Lord had previously declared, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona?" Matt. 16. 17. And what avail these records of shame and sin, published against God's most faithful servants, if they move not us in our less fervent zeal to renewed humility and watchfulness? Think we that for any less gracious purpose, the good Shepherd and Bishop of our souls would have suffered the frailties of his saints to remain on the page of inspiration; encountering the scoffer's laugh, and risking the scandal of the weaker brethren? No; it is that we might hence derive ever fresh conviction of our own infirmity; turn ever with fresh prayer and praise to Him for help divine; own firmly of ourselves in common that "there is none that doeth good, no, not one;" Ps. 14. 2; and profess devoutly to Him alone: "great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." Rev. 15. 3.

And now note how this untruth of St. Peter's was prompted by fear, was persisted in with hardihood, and was at length repented of with tears. He was afraid to own that he had been with Jesus of Nazareth, lest he should be called before the council to account for it. He was afraid to own that he knew his Lord, that Lord who had called him by the name of friend. See John 15. 15. Let us learn how near falsehood is to fear. Let us never be afraid, when our friends are in trouble or disgrace, to acknowledge, as we hear their censure spoken, that we also have been with them. To be silent is, in such a case, to deceive. It allows, perhaps tempts, the speaker, to go on with charges, which our testimony might be able to refute. It is not doing as we would be done by. It is deceiving, because we are afraid. It is being afraid, because we love not.

But further see the progress of deceit. See how this apostle was led on from one falsehood to another. To the denial of his having been one of the followers of Christ, he adds of his own accord the assertion, that he knew not, neither understood what was said. He added further, by way of beguiling them that stood by, that He even knew not the man of whom they spake. Thus did he persist in hardihood, in the hope of covering one sin by another; in the necessity, so peculiar to the practice of untruth, of sinning in order to be thought sincere.

Well was it, for his profitable conviction of sin, that he heard at length that repeated sound, by which our Lord would have him warned of his transgression. Let us for our warning ever imagine, when we are tempted to deny the thing that is, or to say the thing that is not, let us imagine that with Peter we hear the cock crew twice; let us with Peter call to mind the words of Christ; let us with Peter go out, and weep. We think, perhaps, that such sorrow is easy of attainment. We are tempted, perhaps, as many are, to go on in sin, under the notion that we may think better of it hereafter, when we choose; and may weep, when we have a mind, in penitence and prayer. But let us consider, ere we settle on a ground so vain, to delay a reform so needful, let us consider, out of the many instances of deceit we have ever practised or designed, let us count up of the many sins we have committed in the presence of Almighty God, let us count up how many, as far as He was concerned, have drawn hitherto from our eyes a single tear?

Lord, let us not be led into temptation! Let us not by temptation be induced to sin! Let us not by sin be drawn into repetition of offence! But from offence let us proceed to sorrow, from sorrow to repentance; to sorrow such as may cost us tears, to repentance such as may ensure us pardon!

Christ is brought bound, and accused unto Pilate.

1¹ And straightway in the morning the chief priests held a consultation with the elders and scribes and the whole council, and bound Jesus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate.

2 And Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answering said unto him, Thou sayest it.

3 And the chief priests accused him of many things: but he answered nothing.

4² And Pilate asked him again, saying, Answerest thou nothing? behold how many things they witness against thee.

5 But Jesus yet answered nothing; so that Pilate marvelled.

6 Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired.

7 And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made insurrection with him, who had committed murder in the insurrection.

¹ Matt. 27. 1.

² Matt. 27. 13.

§ 169. The risk of being numbered among the enemies of Christ.

In this sad history, whilst we admire the meek behaviour of the accused, we must view with abhorrence the injustice of the judge, and the frantic violence of the accusers. "Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them." He consented, rather than offend the populace, to let loose the guilty. And for the like reason "he delivered Jesus, when he had scourged him, to be crucified." He yielded up the innocent to death; that very one of whom he had so lately asked "Why, what evil hath he done?" Nor had he first spared any means, however unfair and harsh, to convict ere he condemned our Lord. "Pilate asked him, Art thou the King of the Jews?" This was calling on Him to eriminate Himself. Nor would any crime have more surely exposed Him to the severity of the Roman government, than the setting up to be a king in their dominions. Let us never, unless we would share the guilt of Pilate, seek to drive matters to extremity against those even who are justly accused. Let us never take advantage of our station or ability to put any unfair question, even to those whom we may probably suspect of wrong. But if ever such inquiries are made of us ourselves, then we must be true to answer what we might not be free to ask. We must reply with our Lord, "Thou sayest it," if true: though, if false, we may answer nothing. "Thou sayest it." That is, I am a King; though not such a king as you suppose me to set up for; I am the King of the Jews. I am the King they ought to serve, the King who is described as reigning "in righteousness;" Isaiah 32. 1; the King, not of this people only, but of all who are Jews inwardly, "whose circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not of the letter, whose praise is not of men, but of God." Rom. 2. 29.

"And the chief priests accused him of many things." How doubly sinful was such violence in those ministers of religion whose office was one of peace and mercy; who are described by the apostle as having compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way! See Heb. 5. 2. And how doubly hateful was their sin, that they should not only themselves accuse Christ, but move also the people to desire of Pilate, "that he should rather release Barabbas unto them." Thus were they blinded by their rage, and knew not the messenger of the covenant, whom they ought to have delighted in. See Mal. 3. 1. Thus did they choose a rebel and a murderer, whilst they rejected Him who was at once the Prince of peace, and the Lord of life.

Let us beware lest we ever approach to the character of their offence, by preferring in our choice of friends, the profligate to the devout; or in our choice of life, the path of riot, or the temper of that hatred which is murder, see 1 John 3. 15, to the ways of holiness and peace. "Crucify him," was the cry of the infatuated Jews, when Pilate asked them what they would that he should do to Christ. "Crucify him," is the answer which the world presents to those who would consult the practice of the world, for guidance in their behaviour to their Lord. "Crucify him," is the true interpretation of each wanton oath we hear, of each idle word expressive of indifference to sins which cost the blood of Christ. "Crucify him," is the note of revelry that sounds from the haunts of drunkenness, the tone of conversation that prevails amongst the idle, the covetous, and the cruel. Never, therefore, let us entertain that "friendship of the world," which is "enmity with God," James 4. 4, lest we become guilty also of joining in that cry of hatred which condemned our Saviour to the cross!

Christ is mocked, and also crucified with two thieves.

16 And the soldiers led him away into the hall, called Prætorium; and they call together the whole band.

17 And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head,

18 And began to salute him, Hail, King of the Jews!

19 And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees worshipped him.

20 And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own clothes on him, and led him out to crucify him.

21 ¹ And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, who passed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his cross.

22 And they bring him unto the place Golgotha which is, being interpreted, The place of a skull.

23 And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrh: but he received it not.

24 And when they had crucified him they parted his garments, casting lots upon them, what every man should take.

25 And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.

26 And the superscription of his accusation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS.

27 And with him they crucify two thieves; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left.

28 And the scripture was fulfilled, which saith, ² And he was numbered with the transgressors.

¹ Matt. 27. 32.

² Is. 53. 12.

§ 170. That thieves and other like sinners may die with Christ.

These several particulars in the humiliation of our Lord are well suited to make us think of the offensiveness of our sins, for which He so deeply suffered. How grievous must have been that fall of man, how hateful that corruption and iniquity, in God's sight, which required for its atonement not only death, not only the death of the innocent, but death with scourging, mockery, and blows, death in shame upon the cross! Let us in all these things see our Saviour's love. Let us feel that it was love towards ourselves. Is He scourged? Let us consider, that "with his stripes we are healed." Isa. 53. 5. Is He clothed with purple, and crowned with thorns? Let us reflect that this clothing is the covering of our shame, these drops of blood upon his brow issue from a fountain, in which our sins are made white as snow. And how should it qualify our vain conceit of dress, and our too fond admiration of earthly crowns and honours, to consider that these were the very things, which were applied in gross indignity to aggravate the sufferings of our Lord!

Again, the soldiers in scorn salute Him, "Hail, King of the Jews!" Let us call to mind, that in patiently submitting to this mockery, He bare the disgrace we ought to have endured; and taught us, however high our station really is, whatever excellence we actually possess, not to murmur, if it should be turned to our reproach. "And they smote him on the head with a reed, and did spit upon him, and bowing their knees worshipped him." Let us resolve that there is no contumely so mortifying to our feelings, no blow so offensive to our pride, but what we would readily be subject to it on due occasion, and receive it with resignation to the will of God. And why should it be thought by us a thing too hard to submit to the slightest personal indignity? Is our outward form more sacred than that tabernacle of the flesh which the Son of God was veiled in? Is our character for true dignity, and true courage, more important than was his? Or is it not rather that our thoughts, unlike his, are high, our tempers irritable, our hearts unconstrained by love?

"And they crucified him." This was the consummation of his sufferings. "And with him they crucify two thieves." This was the consummation of his shame and disgrace. And thus was the Scripture fulfilled, which saith, "He was numbered with the transgressors." He died, not for them only, but with them. As He refused not, during his life, to be numbered with publicans and sinners, so neither in his death did He disdain to be crucified between two thieves. Let none then, least of all the most excellent of Christians, presume to count the worst unworthy of their fellowship, either in life or death. To suppose ourselves among the best is a plain sign that we are not so. To deem ourselves too good to live with or to die with sinners, such as were these thieves on the cross, is to forget that we are sinners like themselves, in like need of God's mercy through Christ. What, have we never wronged our neighbour to his harm or loss? Have we never robbed, if not man of his property, yet God of his honour, by profaning his day, or wasting, for our selfish lusts and advantages, the capacities and means of which He has made us stewards? And do we trust that we notwithstanding repent? Do we hope notwithstanding to be forgiven? Let us hope then for the most hardened of our brethren, that God may in his mercy turn their hearts, and bring them to the knowledge and the practice of the truth. Let us hope that amongst thieves even and murderers, amongst drunkards and adulterers, amongst the covetous, and the dishonest, and the uncharitable, there may be some who, through repentance and faith, even yet shall die with Christ, and shall be the same day with Him in paradise.

God give us grace to bear with fortitude, and to relieve with love, the ills which man inflicts on man! God set us above the fear of mockery and scorn; above being ashamed to submit to blows; above being inclined either to resent the injury of the proud, or to despise the tears of the abandoned! God help us to feel, as for ourselves, for the most wicked and wretched of our brethren! God make us, for our Saviour's sake, to think of and to care for them, even as we should wish, if we were in like case, that they would care for and think of us!

Christ on the cross giveth up the ghost.

29 And they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Al, thou that destroyest the temple; and buildest it in three days,

30 Save thyself, and come down from the cross.

31 Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; himself he cannot save.

32 Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe. And they that were crucified with him reviled him.

33 And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour.

34 And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, ¹ Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?

35 And some of them that stood by, when they heard it, said, Behold, he calleth Elias.

36 And one ran and filled a sponge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, saying, Let alone; let us see whether Elias will come to take him down.

37 And Jesus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the Ghost.

38 And the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom.

¹ Matt. 27. 46.

§ 171. How we may best have light in the darkness of the grave.

Whilst the Saviour of mankind was on the cross, there were found, among those for whose sins He suffered, men of so hard a heart, that they "railed on him, wagging their heads," and taunting Him with the very promises which He had uttered for their good. This should help to put us out of conceit with all that raillery, all that humorous or severe censure, which forms a large part of the amusement of the world. Let us consider how we are counted to do unto our Lord what we do unto our brethren, either for good or evil. Let us consider how often the feelings of our brethren are hurt by what we say or hear to their disparagement. Let us consider how the words of indiscriminating wit are directed commonly against the principles of holiness, and are calculated to render more difficult, through apprehension of contempt, the path of them who would fain be righteous. Let us consider how it was with like cruel mockery, that they who passed by thought fit to aggravate the sufferings of Christ upon the cross. And we shall thus be the more inclined to be moderate in our mirth, and not so careful in what we say to furnish entertainment, as fearful of giving scandal, or of aggravating pain.

One chief point of the mockery, here levelled against our Lord, was founded on his prophetic declaration, that He would in three days rebuild the temple first destroyed. "This he spake of the temple of his body;" John 2. 21; how He should be put to death, and how within three days He would raise Himself from the dead. But his enemies, conceiving Him to have referred to some such miracle as the many which He had already performed, chose hence to object to Him, that if He could so greatly save others, He surely might now save Himself. And this is a common topic of raillery with the worldly wise; who scarce allow the possibility that any action can proceed from a kind, or upright, or disinterested motive. Surely, say they, he who does good to others, has something thereby to gain for himself. But let us, instead of the practice of selfishness in ourselves, and the continual suspicion of it in others, let us learn from our Lord's example to save rather, and to serve our neighbours; and by the words of his enemies let us be put upon our guard, never to doubt that our neighbours also would willingly do the like for us.

"And when the sixth hour was come, there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour." And so the prophet Amos had foretold: "And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day." Amos 8. 9. Three hours the whole earth was in darkness. For now was to be put out, for three days, the life of Him who was "a light to lighten the Gentiles." Luke 2. 32. And now did that "Sun of righteousness," which had arisen "with healing in his wings," Mal. 4. 2, set, as it were, for a short time in the shades of death. Let us imagine how in that darkness we should have felt ourselves. Let us imagine how we shall feel when this world's sun shall set to us for the last time, as we lie down to die. And let us reflect, that as the darkness is here said to have ceased, at the very hour when Christ yielded up the ghost, so is it his death that must dispel our more gloomy thoughts, his voice that can make us hear in the darkness of the grave, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Isa. 60. 1.

The more sorrowfully He called out, when dying on the cross, the stronger is our ground of assurance that He feared and felt for sorrows not his own; the more sure our hope, that in this his strong crying in our behalf, He "was heard in that he feared." Heb. 5. 7. God had not forsaken Him. God, even in our sins, for his sake had not forsaken us. In our fall He designed our redemption, for our iniquity He proclaimed forgiveness, in our weakness He makes perfect strength. And even when the veil of our flesh is rent in twain by death, though "the silver cord be loosed," and "the dust return to the earth as it was;" Eccl. 12. 6, 7; though we also in that hour may be inclined to cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" yet may we, ere the end, through God's love and Christ's example, be enabled no less heartily to say, "Into thy hands I commend my spirit: for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord, thou God of truth." Psalm 31. 5.

Christ is buried by Joseph of Arimathea.

39 And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.

40 There were also women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the less and of Joses, and Salome;

41 (Who also, when he was in Galilee, ¹ followed him, and ministered unto him;) and many other women which came up with him unto Jerusalem.

42 ² And now when the even was come, because it was the preparation, that is, the day before the sabbath,

43 Joseph of Arimathea, an honourable counsellor, which also waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus.

44 And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead.

45 And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph.

46 And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and hid him in a sepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a stone unto the door of the sepulchre.

47 And Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses beheld where he was laid.

¹ Luke 8. 3.

² Matt. 27. 57.

§ 172. That from Christian love springs Christian courage.

The behaviour of our Lord on the cross, and especially the manner of his crying out at the moment of death, made "the centurion, which stood over against him," confess, "Truly this man was the Son of God." For this he said on seeing that Christ "so cried out, and gave up the ghost." And this circumstance has with some reason been thought to mean, that it was altogether beyond the power of mere human nature, for a man so to cry out, when exhausted by crucifixion to the point of death. So that He must, at the very end, have still had his life in his own possession to the full; according to what He elsewhere said of it: "No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down." John 10. 18. And how should it enliven our affection towards Jesus Christ our Lord, to consider this signal instance of his having loved his own unto the end. See John 13. 1. Not only when He left the glory of the Father, to take on Him the likeness of our sinful flesh, see Rom. 8. 3, not only when He "went about doing good," Acts 10. 38, not only when He endured so meekly "the contradiction of sinners against himself," Heb. 12. 3; not then only was He animated by a heavenly love for us his unworthy people. But when also He had been suffering the severest pain that could be inflicted, when He had drunk to the very dregs that cup, of which He prayed so earnestly, that it might have passed from Him, when his human frame was in the agony of death; then did that Lord who is Himself "the life," John 11. 25, choose freely, out of love for us, to die. Let us see that we love Him also "to the end;" that ere death draws near, we prepare ourselves for the change; and that when the change is evidently at hand, we are not so much constrained against our will, but choose rather, as of ourselves, "to depart, and to be with Christ." Phil. 1. 23.

Thus would Christian love cast out the most painful of all earthly fear, the fear of death. Thus Christian love would help also to attain that holy confidence in God, which is the very soul of Christian courage. Of such courage we have in the passage before us three instances worthy to be observed. We see the centurion confessing our Lord to be "the Son of God;" we see the women "looking on afar off," at the very moment when the greater part of the disciples had through fear forsaken Him and fled; and we see also how Joseph of Arimathea, at the same juncture, when there was least hope of help in man, "went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jesus." Courage then is not insensibility to danger. It is not for women to behold, without shrinking, the agonies of death. It is not for a centurion to view without awe the darkening of the sun at noonday. But in the midst of the threatenings of man, or the most formidable manifestation of divine power, it is to repose our trust on the divine mercy; it is to fear no harm, because we feel assured that God is able, and through Christ willing, to save from harm both body and soul.

And the proof of this courage is, that we endure with fortitude those ills, which it seems good to God's providence to inflict, either on ourselves, or on those we are bound to love. Never must we decline a manifest duty, out of fear of its exposing us to the sight of such misery as it is pain to see. Ever must we be ready, with these holy women, to visit the most heartrending scenes of want or woe; with the desire to assist, according to our ability, with the conviction that God can out of pain and sorrow perfect happiness and joy. But we must do more than witness pain with fortitude, we must encounter it where necessary with firm resolution. We must brave, with the honourable counsellor here mentioned, the peril of persecution and death, when the credit of our Saviour is concerned. Rather than not pay to the remains of Jesus all decent respect, Joseph of Arimathea put willingly in jeopardy his wealth, his station in the council, his credit with the people, his very life. How is it then that we commonly refuse, through fear, in duties of much more obvious obligation, to risk ever so little loss or inconvenience to ourselves; to encounter even the frown of the world, the scoffer's laugh, or an hour's displeasure in a friend?

An angel declareth the resurrection of Christ.

1 ¹ And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him.

2 ¹ And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun.

3 And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?

4 And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away: for it was very great.

5 ² And entering into the sepulchre, they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted.

6 And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted: Ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is risen; he is not here: behold the place where they laid him.

7 But go your way, tell his disciples and Peter that he goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see him ³ as he said unto you.

8 And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre; for they trembled and were amazed: neither said they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.

¹ Luke 24. 1. John 20. 1.

² John 20. 11.

³ Matt. 26. 32.

§ 173. How we must attempt with faith, in order to success.—

The same women, who had so firmly endured to see Jesus crucified, took courage also to attempt the anointing of his body, as it lay in the sepulchre of Joseph. For this purpose they bought sweet spices, they spared no expense in the honouring of One whom they so truly loved, and so deeply mourned. This conduct, recorded to their honour, may satisfy us that we are allowed by Christ, in the respect which we are by nature inclined to pay to the last remains of those we love. Not that we should herein gratify our own vanity, or commit that waste, or indulge that taste for pomp and show, which are in no case permitted to a Christian. But so far as our means may properly afford, so far as, within the limits of sobriety, may be suitable to the station of the deceased, we may properly, the very poorest of us, do honour after this sort to their memory. And something it may add to our zeal in so doing, and something also qualify with spiritual regard the temper in which we do it; to consider, that the body, which we bury, is entitled, by the promise of our Lord, to rise again from the grave.

It was “very early in the morning the first day of the week,” when the two Marys and Salome “came unto the sepulchre, at the rising of the sun.” As they spared no expense in what they bought, they spared also no exertion of their own; no wakefulness, no sacrifice of rest and sleep. And shall we slothfully linger in our beds when we might healthfully and profitably “arise, and be doing.” 1 Chron. 22. 16. Shall we choose, as do many, the very first day of the week, here mentioned, for the indulgence of more than ordinary laziness? Rather let us, by diligence and self-denial, in early rising, redeem as far as possible the time we may yet have given us. Rather let us on the Lord’s day above all others, be wakeful and watchful; seeking and delighting, early and late, to sound his praises, and to learn his will.

And now observe the holy resolution of these women in the work they had in hand. They were aware indeed that it would be no easy matter to enter where the body of Christ was laid. “They said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?” “for it was very great.” They had no prospect of obtaining entrance by any means they knew of. Yet none the less did they prepare the spices, and rise up early to the undertaking. “And when they looked, they saw that the stone was rolled away.” An angel appearing in the form of a young man had made open the entrance they desired. And so for us also will the spirits, who “minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation,” Heb. 1. 14, for us also, if we have faith and diligence, will they roll away the stone which is beyond our strength, and make ready our entrance to the place we look for.

Let us hence learn, in the discharge of any duty we have to do, never to be discouraged by apprehended obstacles, or hindered from making all such preparations, and endeavours, for its performance, as lie in our power. It is “the slothful man,” as Solomon remarks, that “saith there is a lion in the way.” Prov. 22. 13. When we fail in the most difficult of our duties, it is rather for lack of zeal and inclination, for lack of diligent exertion in the attempt, than from any thing insuperable in the impediments they present. Let us resolve, therefore, however hard our task, to have every thing on our part prepared; to be early at our work, and earnest in our prayers. Let us learn from these women a holy resolution; a faith like that of Noah, who, being “warned of God of things not seen as yet,” “prepared an ark to the saving of his house;” like that of Abraham, who, being called to a place which he should afterwards receive for an inheritance, “went out, not knowing whither he went.” Heb. 11. 7, 8. Then shall we find removed the obstacle we most feared, the stone we most apprehended, “rolled away.” Then shall we be saved, where we least durst hope for help. Then shall we condemn the world; that is, prove by our success the wickedness of worldly fear and worldly sloth. Then shall we become heirs “of the righteousness which is by faith;” and shall enter, as we scarce could venture to expect, the “city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.” Heb. 11. 7, 10.

Christ appeareth to Mary Magdalene, and to the eleven.

9 Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, ¹ he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, ² out of whom he had cast seven devils.

10 And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept.

11 And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not.

12 After that he appeared in another form ³ unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country.

13 And they went and told it unto the residue: neither believed they them.

14 ⁴ Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat || at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen.

15 ⁵ And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.

16 He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; ⁶ but he that believeth not shall be damned.

17 And these signs shall follow them that believe: ⁷ In my name shall they cast out devils; ⁸ they shall speak with new tongues;

18 They shall ⁹ take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; ¹⁰ they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

¹ John 20. 14.

² Luke 8. 2.

³ Luke 24. 13.

⁴ Luke 24. 36. John 20. 19.

|| Or, together.

⁵ Matt. 28. 19.

⁶ John 12. 48.

⁷ Acts 16. 18.

⁸ Acts 2. 4.

⁹ Acts 28. 5.

¹⁰ Acts 28. 8.

§ 174. How we must help to make others believe.

Jesus, after rising from the dead, vouchsafed to be seen by the same faithful women, whose fitness to be witnesses had been proved in their attendance at the sepulchre and at the cross. "He appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils." Wherein we see the condescension of our Lord to one, who had been so fearfully taken captive by Satan at his will. See 2 Tim. 2. 26. So that we ought never, by too strict exclusion from our society of those who have greatly sinned, to refuse, as it were, room for repentance; and to run risk of rejecting those, whom God has through Christ accepted. For most plainly we might here discern the efficacy of that contrition and faith, which was blest with this preference in the manifestation of Christ. And most thankfully we might conclude for ourselves, that however fully we have been possessed by evil spirits, whether by pride or passion, falsehood, intemperance, covetousness, or uncharitableness, we may nevertheless, if only Christ have cast them out, if only we have become faithful and devout, behold hereafter our Lord in glory.

The first use Mary made of this high privilege, was to go and tell "them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept." This should teach us to be willing to communicate to others, especially to such as are in distress, the glad tidings of salvation. That "the poor have the gospel preached to them," Matt. 11. 5, was a sign of Christ's coming, and it is a good work which He hath left for Christians to maintain. We should all of us desire to have a hand in it according to our ability. We should all gladly help to promote Christian knowledge, at home, and abroad. We should all have compassion "on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way," Heb. 5. 2; affording to the heathen in foreign lands, and to the poor and profligate in our own, all help of instruction in righteousness.

The apostles at the first "believed not." Neither afterwards believed they the two other disciples to whom Christ appeared as they "went into the country." And so often it will be with those whom we help to instruct, either by our example and advice, or by our encouragement and assistance of those who teach and preach. Many times they believe not. Many times they persevere in refusing to believe. But we must repeat our testimony, and renew, with patience, our work of love. For let us consider how momentous is the interest at stake; how awful the Gospel alternative. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Eternal condemnation is on the one hand: on the other is salvation unto everlasting life. And whatever may be the condition of those who never shall hear these tidings, they are such surely as it must greatly concern all to hear, and must greatly concern all who hear to believe. Let us labour, and spend, and persevere, to make them known to all we can. And let us hope that these will make them known to others. Let us hope, that by convincing and converting those nearest to ourselves, our words and works may go forth into the world, and help to "preach the gospel to every creature."

The signs which followed them that believe, in the age of the apostles, were miracles. In our own times the effectual evidence of faith is holiness of heart and life. And this also must be done in the same name by which the primitive believers cast out devils, spake with new tongues, took up without harm deadly serpents, and deadly drink, and laid hands upon the sick, and they recovered. It is in the name of Christ that we must work those marvels of grace and godliness, which are the best proof of our own faith, and the chief means of making others believe. Would that his holy name were less frequently pronounced in levity, and more often mentioned with reverence and love! Would that we might more often be heard to speak with the new tongues of truth and purity, what "may minister grace unto the hearers!" Ephes. 4. 29. Would that we might learn to encounter without hurt "that old serpent called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world!" Rev. 12. 9. Would that we might be careful to enjoy without intemperance that drink which "maketh glad the heart of man," Ps. 104. 15, but which in excess is poison to the soul! Would that by our medicine and alms, by our counsel, influence, and fervent prayers, we might help, not only the sick to recover, but them that are compassed with infirmity to be strong, and them that are sick at heart to be whole!

Christ is received up into heaven.

19 So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was ¹ received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God.

20 And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, ² and confirming the word with signs following. Amen.

¹ Luke 24. 51.

² Heb. 2. 4.

§ 175. That we should in heart and mind ascend to heaven.

The ascension of our Lord into heaven should teach us, ever in heart and mind thither to ascend. (See Collect, Ascension Day.) And for this purpose it is well that we should make the hope of heaven the subject of our very frequent reflections. It is scarce credible, if it were not that our own conscience so sadly confirms the report, that mankind should have continually before them so "exceeding great and precious promises," 2 Pct. 1. 4, and yet so seldom think about the matter. We seem unable to bring home to our thoughts this truth in its proper force; to imagine with any liveliness of faith the prospect of our entering into a state of glory inconceivable. This prospect is as certain as God's word; if only we repent and obey the Gospel. And this certainty has been graciously confirmed to us by the fact here recorded of our Lord's ascension. "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven." In the form of man He spake to them, in the body wherewith He rose from the dead. In the same body, in the same form, "he was received up into heaven." He ceased to be seen by their wondering eyes. He was taken they knew not how, to a place they knew not where. Only they knew, and through them we know, that it was to heaven. And we know that where He is, there we, through his merits and mercy, may be also. See John 14. 3. And is it not most strange, that we think so seldom of our hope of being there?

Our Lord on being received into heaven sat, as St. Mark adds, "on the right hand of God." Herein we have fulfilled the many Scriptures which express, by this figure of speech, his sovereign power, his dignity, his endless joy. "Hereafter," said He of Himself, "ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power." Matth. 26. 64. And again, that it expresses his dignity, we have this instance in the Epistle to the Hebrews: "When he had by his power purged our sins," He "sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high." Heb. 1. 3. And of the joyfulness of that honourable place we have the testimony of the Psalmist in these words: "In thy presence is the fulness of joy; and at thy right hand there is pleasure for evermore." Psalm 16. 11. Such are the terms to which the Spirit hath given utterance in holy writ, as expressing, what no terms can properly describe, where Christ our Lord now is! Such is the language by which God would have us to understand how high is his blessed Son, how "much better than the angels;" Heb. 1. 4; how at the head of "all principality and power," Col. 2. 10; how all one with God Himself! Great should be our joy to think, that whilst there He sitteth, He ever maketh intercession for us! Heb. 7. 25. Great should be our thankfulness to know, that He is gone to prepare a place for us. See John 14. 2. Great should be our desire to go where He hath gone before! Great should be our love of Him, who at the first came thence for our redemption from sin, and thither was seen to return, for our greater encouragement in holiness!

The apostles fulfilled his commands by going forth, and preaching every where. And the Lord fulfilled his promise by "working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." And thus were the gentile nations induced to receive the Gospel, by the miracles which its preachers were enabled to perform. And thus has it come to pass that we ourselves are Christians, have been brought up in the Christian faith; our fathers having received it, in succession, from those, who were convinced by the very miracles which the apostles wrought. Thus the signs, with which the Lord confirmed his word, are brought home in their result unto ourselves. And the preaching also of the apostles, which our fathers heard, has been made effectual, through their parental care, to our nurture in the knowledge of the Gospel. Through many generations, and they oftentimes of weak or wicked men; through ages of gross ignorance, and periods of professed indifference to the doctrine of Christ crucified; there have been handed down to us, in their primitive simplicity, the pure elements of Christian faith, the unerring manuals of Christian practice. In the writings of the apostles we have all that is needful for man to know, whereby we may be saved. In the Gospels, out of the many things which Christ said and did, we have recorded, enough to make us sure that He was the Christ, that should come to be the Saviour of the world. Let us be thankful for information so full, on topics of such supreme importance. Let us devoutly own, as we conclude each portion of the sacred book, how much we owe to God for the possession of it. Let us devoutly pray that we may understand it rightly, use it profitably, and meditate on it continually.

And, lastly, let us consider that the great use of such frequent communion with God, in the study of his will, is to make us more like to what He would have us be; to fit us for that place which He hath prepared for us to dwell in. "Here we have no continuing city;" Heb. 13. 14; as even Christ Himself in this his own world was seen to stay only for a while. He is born, He lives, He dies. He rises from the dead. He ascends into heaven. Such is the brief summary of the Gospel history. And shall we ever forget that our own time is short? Shall we reckon to abide for a continuance, in a place where He stayed so few short years? Shall we think that we can possibly add year to year, as long as we have designs to execute, or duties we are wishing to fulfil? Shall we desire to do so, if we could. Shall heaven be open to us, and we not wish to enter in?

Shall the presence of God be put within our reach, and we not long to partake of it? Never may we so faintly seek what God has so graciously revealed! Never may we so thanklessly refuse what He has so kindly offered! Never may we cease to labour for the good things He hath prepared! Never may we fail in heart and mind to love and think of their enjoyment! Never may we think ourselves worthy of them! Never make ourselves more unworthy than we are!

Grant, Lord, that as we read thy word, we may learn to love thy way; may know thy truth, may do thy will, and may desire to be with Thee where Thou art! Confirm in us, by signs following the word we read, by the life we live! Make us, each day we continue here, more meek, more poor in spirit, more kind, more true, more pure, more fit to live, more ready to depart, more willing, and longing, and hasting, to dwell with Thee in heaven!

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE 1. 1—4.

The preface of St. Luke to his whole Gospel.

1 Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us,

2 Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses, and ministers of the word;

3 It seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus,

4 That thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.

§ 176. How we should use with thankfulness the written word.

St. Luke, though not himself an apostle, was for a long time the constant companion of St. Paul. His reasons for writing a Gospel he here states to be, first, that many others had “taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration” of these things. Which accounts, we may hence conclude, were in some respect faulty, and therefore not permitted to come down to our times. Whereas St. Luke assures us of himself, that he had enjoyed “perfect understanding of all things from the very first;” meaning, no doubt, the full illumination of the Holy Spirit, guiding him into all truth. And thus much he seems to imply also in what he says of his second reason for writing; “that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed.”

These words here addressed to Theophilus are spoken also to every one who reads or hears this Gospel. We may hence know the certainty of those things wherein we have been instructed. Thankful we ought to be that we have been taught, from father to son, to believe in Jesus Christ. Thankful also we ought to feel for having had ministers ordained in succession from the beginning, to keep these things ever in the remembrance of mankind. But further, we have to give thanks for the written word; for records of the history of our blessed Lord, penned under the guidance of his Holy Spirit, on purpose to assure us that “we have not followed cunningly devised fables.” 2 Pet. 1. 16. Such a record is the Gospel before us. Let us endeavour, by the study of it, both better to know the certainty of what we have believed, and better also to practise the excellency of what we already know.

The appearance of an angel to Zacharias.

5 There was in the days of Herod, the king of Judæa, a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abia: and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elisabeth.

6 And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

7 And they had no child, because that Elisabeth was barren, and they both were now well stricken in years.

8 And it came to pass, that while he executed the priest's office before God in the order of his course,

9 According to the custom of the priest's office, his lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

10 And the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense.

11 And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord standing on the right side of the altar of incense.

12 And when Zacharias saw him, he was troubled, and fear fell upon him.

13 But the angel said unto him, Fear not, Zacharias: for thy prayer is heard; and thy wife Elisabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John.

14 And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth.

15 For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and shall drink neither wine nor strong-drink; and he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb.

16 And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God.

17 And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.

¹ Exod. 30. 7. Lev. 16. 17.

² Mal. 4. 6.

|| Or, by.

§ 177. That it is possible to be counted blameless before God.

The things to be believed in the Christian religion begin from the very outset to run in a strange and supernatural course. And this is one way by which we may know their certainty, for they are such as could not readily have obtained credit, unless they had really happened. And if it be once felt that they really happened, it cannot for a moment be doubted that they were ordered, for some good purpose, by God Himself. Else why should the course of nature be suspended, the barren be made to bear, and angels from another world minister visibly in this, if it were not that we might be constrained to own in every stage of the Gospel history, "this is the Lord's doing; and it is marvellous in our eyes." Ps. 118. 23. Let us take heed then that we continually discern the hand of God, ordering for our good all things that here we read of.

The visit of the angel, who announced to Zacharias the miraculous birth of a son, is set down with all those circumstances of time and place which might best serve to verify the fact. It was "in the days of Herod, the king of Judæa." And Zacharias was "of the course of Abia;" which course came round once every year into office, on a fixed month, familiarly known among the Jews. It was "while he executed the priest's office;" and while "the whole multitude of the people were praying without at the time of incense." This fixes the very hour of the day; the hour, namely, at which these things were used to be done. The place also in which the angel stood is recorded: "on the right side of the altar of incense." All these particulars served to certify to the Jews, who were familiar with them, the extraordinary event to which they refer. And to us also they help to shew how the sacred writers took pains to relate every thing with exact fidelity, and how God, by whose inspiration they were guided, condescended to accommodate the history to our notions of convincing evidence.

And now observe how it is said here of Zacharias and his wife that "they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." See therefore that you never so conceive of human frailty, as to despair of doing far more faithful service than you have hitherto done for God. Even under the yoke of the Law it is pronounced in Scripture of this man and of his wife, that they were blameless. And shall we not hope, and hopefully endeavour also, to be blameless before God under the Gospel? In that righteousness which is not our own, but Christ's, wrought in us by his grace, through faith, in that holiness which is the gift of God, but which is by his goodness grafted in our hearts, "let us go on unto perfection;" Heb. 6. 1; not trusting in ourselves, and yet not distrusting but that we ourselves shall in the end prevail, and shall also have then "praise of God." 1 Cor. 4. 5. In the message of the angel note the description of the child that was to be born. "He shall be great in the sight of the Lord;" not, as many seem rather to wish for their children, great in the sight of the world; but great in those points which God esteems; selfdenial, grace, and zeal in well-doing. And this is what is meant by his drinking "neither wine nor strong drink;" for such was at that time a practice among those who devoted themselves to the service of God. And such is the kind of discipline we must lay upon ourselves, if we would hope to do God good service; to deny ourselves many allowable indulgences, to separate ourselves and our families from many practices which are prevalent in the world around us.

Oh, may God's Holy Spirit make ready in us, and we, by our influence and example, make ready in others, "a people prepared for the Lord;" turning "the hearts of the fathers unto the children," converting the souls of all, both old and young, to the disposition of guileless infants; and "the disobedient," that is, the wilful sinners, "to the wisdom of the just," to the timely forethought of them who through faith obey!

Elisabeth conceived, as was visited by an angel.

18 And Zacharias said unto the angel, Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years.

19 And the angel answering said unto him, I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God; and am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings.

20 And, behold, thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed, because thou believest not my words, which shall be fulfilled in their season.

21 And the people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the temple.

22 And when he came out, he could not speak unto them: and they perceived that he had seen a vision in the temple: for he beckoned unto them, and remained speechless.

23 And it came to pass, that, as soon as the days

|| Or, graciously accepted, or, much graced: see ver. 30.

§ 178. The example of the Virgin Mary.

Zacharias, who had before been pronounced "blameless," is here guilty of distrusting the angel's words. "Whereby shall I know this?" is his reply to the divine message. For a sign, and for a punishment, it is appointed to him, "Thou shalt be dumb, and not able to speak, until the day that these things shall be performed." If we find ourselves often unable to utter, what we know we ought to say, to God's honour, and for the edification of our neighbour, may we not always justly trace the silence of our tongues to the distrustful condition of our hearts? Had we but more lively faith, we should soon have more free utterance. Had we but a more deep and abiding conviction of things heavenly, we should find it hard not to speak, instead of difficult to utter, the "things wherewith one may edify another." Rom. 14. 19. As it is, how little better are we than dumb, if we talk only of this world's business, or news, and seldom or never of things spiritual! if we hear, whilst in God's temple, the tidings of salvation, but cannot when we come out, speak of them to the people, either with our lips, or in our lives! Let us feel as if this dumbness were sent us for our sins. Let us beware, lest we add to our neglect of holy talking, the utterance of any wicked or distrustful words. Let us learn from this history never to ask further of what God has once told us, "Whereby shall I know this?" but rather, however hard his sayings, let us speak, and think, and act, as being sure that they will be in their season fulfilled.

When Elisabeth had conceived, she hid herself five months, saying, "Thus hath the Lord dealt with me in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men." When we have received from the Almighty any singular favour, it is a fit time to retire from public observation: for never are we more apt to be elated, never more liable to be tempted to pride, than when we meet with unexpected and undeserved success. Nor is this less true in things spiritual, than in our worldly concerns. When therefore the Lord seems to have looked graciously upon us for good, let us for a time at least refrain from publishing our joy. Let us wait till we are more confirmed in holiness. Let us fear lest we may yet fall away. Let us watch that we fall not. Let us hide ourselves; that is, suppress the extent of our convictions, so far as we may consistently with God's honour, with a view to be more safe from the temptation of pride, and less likely, if we fall, to make our brethren to offend.

Six months after his visit to Zacharias, the same angel Gabriel was sent on a like divine errand to the Virgin Mary. In his salutation it is remarkable that Mary is called blessed "among women:" whereas in the Old Testament Jael is called "blessed above women." Judg. 5. 24. So that there is here no foundation for any such preeminence above human nature as is assigned by the church of Rome to the Virgin Mary. Eminent she was for such piety, as we should all endeavour to attain; eminent for such modesty, as made her to be troubled at the voice of praise; eminent for such purity of heart, as fitted her to be the mother of Him, who "did no sin." 1 Pet. 2. 22. And for this important office it was necessary that she should be of a nature the very same as the rest of mankind. A daughter of Adam, that Christ might be the Son of man. Of the house of David, that He might be the Son of David. A virgin, that He might be conceived without spot of sin; but espoused, that is betrothed in wedlock to Joseph, that her son might thus be legally, as well as naturally, of the house and lineage of David; that the husband might be the witness and the guardian of the mother's virgin purity, and that we might learn from this notable instance, in opposition to all false doctrines on the subject, that "marriage is honourable in all." Heb. 13. 4.

God grant that we may be highly favoured, by being eminent in grace and goodness! God make us to be blessed among all mankind, for the height of our piety, no less than of our privileges! The Lord be with us, as with Mary, for our good! In all we do, in all we say, in all we think; in our going out, and in our coming in; in our life, and in our death; the Lord be with us!

Christ is conceived by the Holy Ghost.

30 And the angel said unto her, Fear not, for thou hast found favour with God.

31 And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name JESUS.

32 He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David:

33 And he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

34 Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?

35 And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God.

36 And, behold, thy cousin Elisabeth, she hath also conceived a son in her old age: and this is the sixth month with her, who was called barren.

37 For with God nothing shall be impossible.

¹ Is. 7. 14. Matt. 1. 21.

² Dan. 7. 14. Mic. 4. 7.

|| Or, which believed that there.

§ 179. Christ a spotless sacrifice for sin.

How different were the distrustful words of Zacharias: "Whereby shall I know this?" from the modest inquiry of Mary, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" The one doubts what was declared. The other inquires on a point left undetermined. And the answer she receives is a full declaration, both for her sake, and for ours, that the holy thing conceived in her, was no other than "the Son of God." It is lawful then to ask for information. It is desirable to search and inquire, as far as we are able, into the things of God. Only we must ask with full purpose to believe whatever we may know to be his answer. Happy shall we be, when our diligent inquiries have brought us to a deep conviction, that Jesus is the "Son of the Highest," the Saviour of the world! Happy when in every truth that is revealed, and in every duty that is enjoined, we can say devoutly to our Lord: "be it unto me according to thy word!"

The blessed Virgin having been told by the angel of what had befallen Elisabeth, made haste to visit her on the occasion. She might naturally be anxious to confer with her on the gracious dispensations they had both received, the one most directly opposite to nature, as the other was beyond its usual course. "And it came to pass, that, when Elisabeth heard the salutation of Mary, the babe leaped in her womb." By which special token she was at once made aware that the mother of the Messiah was come unto her. And, accordingly, she thankfully and humbly confessed to Christ, in words not unlike to these which afterwards her son addressed to Him, "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" Matt. 3. 14. Thus whilst Mary, like Elisabeth, sought for privacy, she sought also the society of one who had experienced like mercy from God with herself. And this should teach us, that however desirable it may be to avoid the public expression of our religious feelings, it is no less our duty, where friends can rely on each other's discretion and sincerity, for us to commune together on the dealings of God with our immortal souls.

• But the chief thing to be observed in this whole passage, is the immaculate or spotless conception of Jesus Christ our Lord, by the Holy Ghost, of the Virgin Mary. That is to say, the ever blessed Sou of God became the Son of man, taking on Him our flesh, and yet without spot of our sinfulness. And this lies at the very foundation of our Christian faith. For He that was to die for our sins had need be without stain of sin Himself. And therefore was He thus brought into the world in a new and unheard of method, both that He might be, and that we might surely know Him to be, a Lamb without spot, taking away the sins of the world. See John 1. 29. And in this light we ought chiefly to think of Christ our Saviour, not as of a man laying down his life for his friends, but as of God made man, and dying for the salvation of his creatures. So might we be the more moved to repent, if we were to feel duly how repentance on our part is made effectual, by merits so powerful on his. And so might we more affectionately love, if we were persuaded that through Him, and by Him alone, we have either health, or hope of safety. And so loving, we might no longer fear, but have hope, and joy, and peace, in believing. See Rom. 15. 13.

Give us, Lord, this faith, to know Thee, as Thou art, the Son of God most High! Give us, Lord, this faith to see Thee, as Thou once hast been, a sacrifice for the sins of all mankind! Give us, Lord, this faith, to repent unto amendment of life; to obey, not out of fear, but love; in the trust that there shall be a performance of those things which have been told us from Thee!

The hymn of Mary. The circumcision of John.

46 And Mary said, My soul doth magnify the Lord,

47 And my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

48 For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed.

49 For he that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name.

50 And his mercy is on them that fear him from generation to generation.

51 ¹ He hath shewed strength with his arm; ² he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.

52 ³ He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree.

53 ⁴ He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away.

54 He hath holpen his servant Israel, ⁵ in remembrance of his mercy;

55 ⁶ As he spake to our fathers, to Abraham and to his seed for ever.

56 And Mary abode with her about three months, and returned to her own house.

57 Now Elisabeth's full time came that she should be delivered, and she brought forth a son.

58 And her neighbours and her cousins heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her; and they rejoiced with her.

59 And it came to pass, that on the eighth day they came to circumcise the child; and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father.

60 And his mother answered and said, Not so; but he shall be called John.

61 And they said unto her, There is none of thy kindred that is called by this name.

62 And they made signs to his father, how he would have him called.

63 And he asked for a writing table, and wrote, saying, His name is John. And they marvelled all.

64 And his mouth was opened immediately, and his tongue loosed, and he spake and praised God.

¹ Is. 61. 9.

² Ps. 33. 10.

³ 1 Sam. 2. 6.

⁴ Ps. 34. 10.

⁵ Jer. 31. 3, 20.

⁶ Ps. 132. 11. Gen. 17. 19.

§ 180. Encouragement to sincere obedience.

The address offered to Mary by Elisabeth, raised probably the same feeling of modest confusion as the angel's salutation, v. 29. And in the hymn which followed, we see the right method of diverting our thoughts from praise to ourselves, namely, to give to God the glory, and to express our thankfulness to Him, from whom all good things come. And this we should do, not only when we are praised by others, but when we reflect within ourselves on the many privileges we enjoy, how highly we have been favoured by Almighty God, and how firmly we trust that the Lord is with us. Then might we, as an antidote to all spiritual pride, repeat within ourselves these words of the Virgin Mary, in some such sense as this which follows:

"My soul doth magnify," or count for great, "the Lord." "And my spirit hath rejoiced," not in my own doings, or in the consciousness of my own strength, but "in God my Saviour." For "he hath regarded" our low estate; even seeking, and saving that which was lost. He it is, in his might, who has "done to me great things;" making me to do, what without Him I could never do, to obey his will by choice. In our generation, as of old, his mercy is on them that fear Him. The mighty, them at least who use their might for ill, He doth often signally put down; and exalt, if not in wealth and strength, yet many times in grace and godliness, "them of low degree." Thus doth He fill "the hungry with good things," those especially who hunger and thirst after righteousness. And the rich he sendeth "empty away;" those, who say proudly in their hearts, "I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing." Rev. 3. 17. Thus doth He still help the spiritual Israel, the children of the faith of Abraham; imparting to us that mercy, of which He spake to our fathers, even redemption, through Christ.

"And Mary abode with her about three months;" at the end of which time, after Mary's departure home, Elisabeth gave birth to John the Baptist. Here observe how her neighbours and cousins "rejoiced with her," when they "heard how the Lord had shewed great mercy upon her." And learn that it is an important part of charity, to "rejoice," as the apostle has bidden us, "with them that do rejoice." Rom 12. 15. Note also how this infant, though sanctified from the womb, was not exempted from the law of circumcision. And learn that the highest influences of God's unseen grace, are so far from interfering with the use of outward ordinances, that they incline and oblige us thereunto. Note further, in the custom of giving children their names, one among many points of resemblance, between circumcision among the Jews, and baptism among the Christians. And hence consider how reasonable is the baptism of infants, as it was uniformly practised for ages, without dispute, throughout the whole Christian world.

Both the mother, and afterwards the father, are firm in their purpose of having the child called John, a name which means, joy from God. They complied with the directions of the angel, against the wishes of their assembled friends. Let us resolve, however urgently our friends withstand us, in any point of Christian duty, always to obey God rather than men. And let us take for our encouragement the mercy here vouchsafed to Zacharias, who according to the sentence of the angel, might reasonably have expected to be dumb till the end of the ministry of his son. God, who could consider these things, to be performed, see ver. 20. on the very day that the child was named, accepts often of us also incomplete obedience; reckons as paid once for all by Christ that debt, which we must else have ever owed; and long ere we could hope to attain to many heaven, will, if only we obey his word through faith open to us the gates of everlasting life.

The Hymn of Zacharias.

65 And fear came on all that dwelt round about them: and all these || sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country of Judæa.*

66 And all they that heard them laid them up in their hearts, saying, What manner of child shall this be! And the hand of the Lord was with him.

67 And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghost, and prophesied, saying,

68 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people,

69 ¹ And hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David;

70 ² As he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began:

71 That we should be saved from our enemies, and from the hand of all that hate us;

72 To perform the mercy promised to our fathers, and to remember his holy covenant;

73 ³ The oath which he sware to our father Abraham.

74⁴ That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him without fear,

75 In holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life.

76 And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways;

77 To give knowledge of salvation unto his people † by the remission of their sins,

78 Through the † tender mercy of our God: whereby the § dayspring from on high hath visited us,

79 To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.

80 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel.

|| Or, things.

¹ Ps. 132. 17.

² Jer. 23. 5. & 30. 9.

³ Gen. 22. 16.

† Or, for.

‡ Or, bowels of the mercy.

§ Or, sunrise, or, branch.

§ 181. God's mercy magnified in our necessities.

After his many months silence, the first use which Zacharias makes of his recovered speech is to declare the praises of God. If we were to talk less, and to think more, we should often think more profitably, and speak often more devoutly towards God, more charitably to each other. Thus we read of Joseph also about this same period, in St. Matthew's Gospel, that "while he thought on these things," Matt. 1. 20, while he took time to consider the propriety of putting away his betrothed wife, he was instructed by an angel to take her to himself. And thus if we had more of deliberation in our conduct, we should have more of mercy in our judgment; we should be more inclined both to bear and to forbear, both to forgive and give, both to give cheerfully to man of that which supplies our common wants, and to give to God the affection of our hearts, and the honour that is due unto his name.

But in this hymn it is expressly said of Zacharias, that he "prophesied," that is, revealed the will of Almighty God. And the subject of his prophecy was the redemption about to be wrought for mankind, whereof this child, then just named, was the messenger. If we would duly join in this hymn, if we would partake aright in the heavenly rejoicing here expressed, we should first endeavour to feel deeply our captivity unto sin, here described as darkness and the shadow of death. This consists in our natural inability to perceive things heavenly, in our natural incapacity to do things acceptable to God, in our natural perverse inclination to indulge the flesh, to love the world, and to listen to the deceitful suggestions of the devil. In this darkness, in this captivity, we should have had no choice, but to pass in vanity through things temporal, and to enter into things eternal in shame, and sorrow, and agony of fear; had not God, in Jesus Christ "visited and redeemed his people."

Let us then possess ourselves, or rather let us pray God to possess us, with a deep feeling of our many and great natural necessities, as the first step towards a right apprehension of the tender mercy of our God. Then shall we bless Him from our hearts, for that horn of salvation, that mighty Saviour, whom He has raised up for us "in the house of his servant David." Then should we take unto ourselves for our encouragement in holiness and hope, all the words of his holy prophets, "which have been since the world began." Then should we perceive in all his dispensations the fulfilment of his one great settled purpose, that we should be saved from our enemies, even from sin and from eternal death. This is the mercy God promised to our fathers. This is the covenant He hath carefully remembered. This is the oath which He sware unto Abraham: that we, thus "delivered out of the hand of our enemies might serve him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before him, all the days of our life." This is the end for which Christ died, that we might be holy here, and happy hereafter. This is the purpose, for which the child here spoken of was to go before the face of the Lord, even to "prepare his ways," to give unto his people the knowledge of this salvation, the remission of past sin, and for the future to provide that our feet be safely guided in the way of peace.

Oh, may our footsteps, through God's tender mercy, now walk in that perfect way, that we may serve Him without painful fear, and not without fervent love! Oh, may we be found therein at the hour of death, and in the day of judgment! May we grow, as the child here spoken of, waxing strong in the spirit; going on from grace to grace, from strength to strength; and so dwelling in the desert of this present life, so proof against all its snares, so faithful in all its trials, that when that day shall come, we may be shewn as joint heirs of the promises, to the assembled Israel of the saints of God!

Christ is born at Bethlehem.

1 And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be || taxed.

2 (And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.)

3 And all went to be taxed every one into his own city.

4 And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judæa, unto the ¹ city of David, which is called Bethlehem; (because he was of the house and lineage of David:)

5 To be taxed with Mary his espoused wife, being great with child.

6 And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

7 And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes and laid him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

|| Or, enrolled.

¹ John 7. 42.

8 And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping † watch over their flock by night.

9 And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

10 And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

11 For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

12 And this shall be a sign unto you; Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

13 And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

14 Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

† Or, the night watches.

§ 182. Motives to lowliness of heart.

In the record of this taxing of the world by Cæsar Augustus, we see how wonderfully the providence of the Almighty overrules the designs of feeble men. The decree of an emperor, sent forth from a remote metropolis, and arising probably in him from worldly policy, or worldly pride, is instrumental in fulfilling, and in proving to be fulfilled, several prophecies relating to the Messiah. For by this means it came to pass that He was born, as Micah had foretold, in Bethlehem of the land of Judah. See Micah 5. 2. By this means it is shewn that Joseph and Mary, and therefore Jesus her son, were of the house and lineage of David. And whereas it had been declared by Jacob, that the sceptre should not depart from Judah until Shiloh had come, see Gen. 49. 10, this taxing of Judæa by a Roman emperor affords clear demonstration, to all who believe the words of the Patriarch, that the Christ must at this time be brought into the world.

And now see how He entered this world of his own making. In form and fashion as a child, wrapped in swaddling clothes, and laid by his mother in a manger; “because there was no room for them in the inn.” How forcibly does He here, at the very outset, teach us the vanity of that pomp and outside show, of which all are apt to deem too highly! Well He knew how ready we are to respect the rich merely because rich, to despise the poor merely because poor; how ready the rich are to presume upon their wealth, and the poor to repine for the want of it. And therefore would He be born Himself among the poor. And therefore, however hard may be the mystery of God manifested in the flesh, see 1 Tim. 3. 16, the lesson is plain, and the duties obvious, which arise from his being manifest in the condition of the poor. We must care neither for costly clothing, nor for comfortable abode; neither for ourselves, nor for our children, must we care for these things, with any anxious or deep concern; but only for the clothing of the soul, only for its final settlement in the building of God, prepared for it in heaven. See 2 Cor. 5. 1, 2.

For what is this life but as an inn, wherein we have but a short time to stay; a place where we may abide a while for business, or rest, during our journey to another country; but one which we must never look to as our home? And is not the world also in many respects most like unto this very inn, in which there was no room for Christ? Is it not a place where the wealthy are made welcome to profusion, whilst the hungry are sent empty away? Is it not as a house where there is ample indulgence for idleness and revelry, drunkenness and debauchery; but no space for holy thoughts, no hours for peaceful study of God’s word, or earnest supplication for his grace? In this scene of vanity let us content ourselves to be with Christ in the place of least esteem, rather than in a station of more worldly honour to risk losing his company for ever.

But lowly as these circumstances might seem to represent the person of our blessed Lord, we have it at the same time recorded in this passage, that his birth was proclaimed to shepherds by an angel, and celebrated by “a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.” Thus was fulfilled what is noted by the apostle in his Epistle to the Hebrews, 1. 6, that when God “bringeth in the first begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him.” Thus to us is certified by a testimony we can never doubt, first, that Jesus who was born that day was Christ the Saviour of the world. And secondly, it is expressly revealed to us, that the result of his birth, and the fruits which we should aim ever to derive from it, are the increase of God’s glory, the making peace between Him and our own souls, and the prevalence of good will amongst each other.

God grant that the more we know of Christ, and feel Him to be to us our Lord and Saviour, the more we may learn to love each other, the more find ourselves at peace with God, the more seek in all our words and works his glory!

Christ is circumcised.

15 And it came to pass, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the shepherds said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us.

16 And they came with haste, and found Mary, and Joseph, and the babe lying in a manger.

17 And when they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child.

18 And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds.

19 But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart.

20 And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them.

21 ¹ And when eight days were accomplished for the circumcising of the child, his name was called ² JESUS, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

22 And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to Jerusalem, to present him to the Lord;

23 (As it is written in the law of the Lord, ³ Every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;)

24 And to offer a sacrifice according to ⁴ that which is said in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons.

¹ Gen. 17. 12.

² Matt. 1. 21.

³ Exod. 13. 2. Numb. 18. 15.

⁴ Lev. 12. 2, 6.

§ 183. How we should submit to what we cannot comprehend.

The shepherds no sooner heard tidings of Christ, than they "said one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us." It is well, if when we hear of any good, either to be seen, or learnt, or done, we wait not to be urged, but are desirous and in haste to go thither. Yet when Christ is pointed out to us, as being present in his ordinances, how many are there who care not to attend! When He may be seen by us in every object of distress around us, when it is his voice with which the hungry ask for food, and the naked plead for clothing, how few are there who take pains to hear it! How few who, when they hear, attend to it! Let us seek of our own selves opportunity to do good. Let us be more desirous to give, than they who want are to receive; more deeply bent on helping and instructing those around us, than they are anxious to be taught and assisted.

And especially let us with these shepherds make known abroad the saying which has been told us also concerning this child, namely, that He is "Christ the Lord." Ver. 11. Whatever hopes we may reasonably entertain, in behalf of those who have never heard the preaching of the Gospel, we can have no doubt that it is our duty to make it known to them, and that it would be a great blessing to them to know it. With all the awful responsibility it lays on every soul of man, not only to obey his Creator, but to love his Redeemer Christ, and work with the working of the Holy Spirit in his soul; awful as is this responsibility, and most weighty this obligation, yet is it throughout Scripture represented as a great blessing to have the Gospel preached to us at all. This blessing let us endeavour therefore by all means in our power to extend to the uttermost among our brethren. And as the sending out of teachers and preachers exceeds usually the means of individuals, let us largely contribute to those societies which we may find, after due inquiry, to be most faithfully employed in propagating gospel truth.

While the people wondered at all these things, Mary, we are told, kept them, "and pondered them in her heart." How different is idle astonishment from fruitful meditation! How many wonder at the marvels related in God's word, for one that like Mary ponders on them in the heart, with humble faith and devout affection! In the many things we daily meet with above our comprehension, let us daily reflect, with reverential awe, that these things are as plain to God's wisdom, as they are easy to God's power. Whether it be the growth of the grass of the field, or the increase of our own stature, the support of our life by food, or, yet more passing strange, the nourishment of our souls by grace; in every thing, if we think attentively, we shall find much that is beyond our understanding, much to make us humble, thankful, and devout.

And very signally is this true of the ordinances of religion; as, for instance, of the one to which our Lord is here shewn to have submitted. Impossible it is to conceive how any such rite as circumcision could be needful unto Him "who knew no sin." 2 Cor. 5. 21. But in the conduct of Joseph and Mary we are taught that this was no reason for neglecting the ordinance of God. See also what care they took that the child should be called by the name which the angel had appointed. See how they brought Him at the time fixed by the law of Moses, to present Him in the temple of Jerusalem. See how they offered in his stead the enjoined sacrifice, though He was to be Himself the sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. The whole of this they probably were not aware of. But thus much they knew, that He was the Son of God, conceived by the Holy Ghost. See ch 1. 35. Matt. 1. 20. But only so much the more were they purposed, in regard to Him, to fulfil all that the Law had enjoined. Only so much the more, as we have knowledge and grace, must we resolve, in that which we cannot comprehend, to obey what is clearly written. The more God has given unto us, let us offer the more unto Him. The more He has enlightened our minds, and kindled the affection of our hearts, let us the more devoutly submit them both to Him, in a willing, though not blind obedience, in a reasonable, not servile fear.

Simeon and Anna prophecy of Christ.

25 And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem, whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him.

26 And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ.

27 And he came by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law,

28 Then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said,

29 Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word:

30 For mine eyes have seen thy salvation,

31 Which thou hast prepared before the face of all people;

32 A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel.

1 Is. 8. 14. Rom. 9. 32.

33 And Joseph and his mother marvelled at those things which were spoken of him.

34 And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the 'fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against;

35 (Yea a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also,) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.

36 And there was one Anna, a prophetess, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aser: she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity;

37 And she was a widow of about fourscore and four years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day.

38 And she coming in that instant gave thanks likewise unto the Lord, and spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in || Jerusalem.

|| Or, Israel.

§ 184. Devotion to things heavenly.

It was a great privilege for Simeon and Anna to witness the presentation of Christ in the temple. And to Simeon it had been expressly revealed "that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." Nor was he insensible to the value of this promise. For he was "waiting for the consolation of Israel," that is, looking forward in faith and patience to the coming of the Messiah. "And the Holy Ghost was upon him;" that is to say, he had the gift of inspiration, to speak as he was moved by the Holy Ghost. Note here the fruit of waiting for Christ! Note the result of faith, when adorned with obedience and with love! In Simeon it was to behold the Messiah in the flesh. In us it is to see Him in the spirit; to be conscious of his present help, to be full of joy at the prospect of his second coming: for unto them who "look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9. 28.

And who that lives in the hope of eternal life through Christ, might not be thankful to depart? Conceive of Him as "a light to lighten the Gentiles;" "the Sun of righteousness," Mal. 4. 2, the Saviour, by whose love all men in all regions of the earth might escape the wrath to come! Conceive of Him as the glory of God's chosen people; the object of their whole dispensation; the end of all prophecy, the meaning of every type; the one only Prophet, Priest, and King, for whose sake all others ruled, and ministered and revealed God's will! And then say, should it not be to us a matter of most earnest longing, of most heartfelt thankfulness, that we may by any means attain to see this great and gracious Saviour? Say what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God. See 2 Pet. 3. 12.

Whilst Joseph and the mother of the child were marvelling at the things thus spoken of Him, "Simeon," it is added, "blessed them." That is to say, he pronounced on them, by divine authority, the blessing of God. This blessing then is not incompatible with much suffering in this world; for it was at the same time declared to Mary, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also." Nor does He, through whom all blessings come, prove to all of necessity a Saviour in the end. For He was set "for the fall," as well as for the "rising again of many in Israel." Blessed are they, and they only, who, when they fall, have grace to rise; whose thoughts, when they are revealed, or brought to the proof, are found to be right with God; and who look for Christ, as for a sign, not to speak against, but to speak unto in prayer, and to look on with sure trust in his ability to heal!

Such an one was Anna, here mentioned in honour, as a prophetess; and not only thus enabled to reveal to others the will of God, but disposed by his good help to fulfil it herself. For this is the purport of what is said of her devotion; that "she departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day." And this probably means, not that she never left the temple at all, but that she never missed any service there performed. Nor if her abode had been there kept continually, would such exclusive attention to things heavenly have been more than was becoming to her age and condition. The abuses which have attended often on the practice of a monastic life, should not render us insensible to the duty of spending large portions of our time in meditation, and prayer, and fasting. And especially as we advance in age, if God think fit to spare us to that time of life, in which there is little ability to act; what employment can be more edifying to others, more profitable to ourselves, or more apt to prepare us for the joys we hope soon to attain, than continual exercises of selfdenial and devotion, for the greater mortification of the body, and for the more effectual awakening of the soul?

Christ dwelleth with Joseph and Mary.

39 And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth.

40 And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him.

41 Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover.

42 And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jerusalem after the custom of the feast.

43 And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jesus tarried behind in Jerusalem; and Joseph and his mother knew not of it.

44 But they, supposing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they sought him among their kinsfolk and acquaintance.

45 And when they found him not they turned back again to Jerusalem, seeking him.

46 And it came to pass, that after three days they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions.

¹ Deut. 16. 1.

47 And all that heard him were astonished at his understanding and answers.

48 And when they saw him, they were amazed: and his mother said unto him, Son, why hast thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have sought thee sorrowing.

49 And he said unto them, How is it that ye sought me? wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?

50 And they understood not the saying which he spake unto them.

51 And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them: but his mother kept all these sayings in her heart.

52 And Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man.

|| Or, age.

§ 185. The importance of piety in youth.

This passage contains all that is recorded of our Lord during the time of childhood, or rather from his birth till the age of about thirty, when he entered on his public ministry. It plainly informs us that the blessed Son, having taken on Him our flesh, went through the usual process of human growth, and submitted to the same successions of age as ordinarily take place with mankind. Thus we may better know that He was perfect man, consisting of a body and soul like our own; whilst He was also at the same time perfect God, one with the Father and with the Holy Ghost. It is in respect of his human nature that St. Matthew says "the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him." It was in reference to his divine nature, and to God his heavenly Father, that He replied to his enquiring parents, "wist ye not," that is, know ye not, "that I must be about my Father's business?"

"Now his parents went to Jerusalem every year at the feast of the passover." The law enjoined this attendance on all the males. See Exod. 23. 17. And they were often accompanied, as in the present case, by their families, though they had little convenience in travelling, but were forced to journey in large companies, for fear of want, or robbers in the way. How hard a service this must seem to those Christians, who can scarce for one hour put aside their daily business, in order to visit the house of prayer; who excuse themselves from attending, if the distance be never so little fatiguing, or the road never so little inconvenient! Let us learn from this instance how easy is the yoke of Christ compared with the burden of the Law. Let us lay to heart that so much the more cheerfully we ought to give to God the honour due unto his name, so much the more gladly to frequent his house, so much the more thankfully to praise his goodness.

In the youth of our blessed Lord, as here described, what a pattern do we find for the training of our children, what a contrast to the disposition and employments too common in our own early years! To be thirsting for divine knowledge, to be deeply engaged in heavenly things, and to be not the less subject to his earthly parents, of whom one was his parent only in name; such was the grace of the infant Jesus, such were the means by which we learn that He increased in favour with God and man. How can we then too carefully train up in godliness, humility, and love, the children committed to our care? How can we ever sufficiently deplore the waste we have ourselves made of those precious years, in which we might have learnt by God's good grace to delight in holiness, purity, and truth? Never let us henceforth encourage in a child the seeds of pride or passion; never indulge in any single sin those little ones, whom our Lord has with such solemn charge committed to the care of his disciples. Never let us transgress in their presence; lest through our ill example they learn to deem lightly of that which God has forbidden. Never let us quarrel, or suffer them to quarrel, never deceive, or suffer them to deceive, never report tales of slander for them to hear, never magnify in their childish estimation the pomps and vanities of the world, by shewing, either in our words or actions, that we too highly esteem them ourselves. And for ourselves, if we have much to regret in the waste of time past, let us the more watchfully redeem the hours which yet remain. Let us employ ourselves the more diligently in the business of our Father which is in heaven. Whatever we have to do, let us do it as his obedient and loving children; as willing to be in all things subject unto Him; as making our worldly work his service, by diligence and honesty, by justice in our dealings, and forbearance in our gains; and as delighting when our work is done, to resort either in private, or in his temple, to Him and to them who minister in his word, "both hearing them, and asking them questions."

The preaching and baptism of John.

1 Now in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, Pontius Pilate being governor of Judæa, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lysanias the tetrarch of Abilene,

2 Annas and Caiaphas being the high priests, the word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness.

3 ¹ And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins ;

4 As it is written in the book of the words of Esaias the prophet, saying, ² The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.

5 Every valley shall be filled, and every mountain

¹ Matt. 3. 1.

² Isa. 40. 3.

³ Matt. 3. 7.

|| Or, meet for.

and hill shall be brought low ; and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough ways shall be made smooth ;

6 And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.

7 Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, ¹ O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come ?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits || worthy of repentance, and begin not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father : for I say unto you, That God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

9 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees : every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

§ 186. That we must fear not only punishment but sin.

In the first verses of this chapter we have very exactly set down the time and place of the first preaching of John the Baptist. By this means it was the more easy for the early Christians to refer to the eyewitnesses of that beginning of the Gospel, and to prove more plainly to all gainsayers the certainty of the facts as they took place. And thus are we also, at this distance of time, better able to give an answer to any one that asks of us a reason of the hope that is in us. See 1 Pet. 3. 15. We might indeed appeal to that inward testimony, which no man can be sure of in another, but which every one might attain to in himself, the testimony of a renewed spirit, of a conscience void of offence, of a heart set upon righteousness. And further, we might point to the divine effects of Christianity, manifest amongst the abundance of iniquity, manifest in the lives of many of its professors, and in the amended condition of the whole Christian world. But besides these two important heads of evidence, we can direct first the attention of the enquirer to plain matters of fact, such as are of all things most hard to misconstrue, and most unlikely to have obtained credit if untrue. How, we may say, except from the report of others, do we become acquainted with nearly all we know ? And what circumstances, in our worldly information, tend more certainly to obviate the risk of being deceived, than the exact mention of time and place ; especially if it be published whilst hundreds and thousands are alive, who must know whether it is correct or not ? Such is the evidence we have, of facts related in the Gospel of Christ. Such is the ground on which we may most certainly know that John did, as here related, come preaching, in the country round about Jordan.

And now let us see in what his preaching consisted. Expressly he gave it to be understood that he was a messenger to prepare the way for One that should come after him. Expressly he described himself to be what Isaiah had foretold, “the voice of one that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God.” Isa. 40. 3. His appearance and ministry was therefore a certain sign that the Lord here intended was at hand. And from the matter of his preaching might in like manner be collected, what kind of king was about to appear, and what kind of kingdom He would set up. John preached “the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.” This we should remember, however familiar to us, was a new and strange doctrine, both to Jews and Gentiles, unheard of in the world at that time. And most marvellous must have sounded to all hearers the tidings that such forgiveness was at hand ; and that, not for one people, but for all ; “all flesh” should “see the salvation of God.”

The opening of this mercy to the Gentiles is especially signified, in what John said to the Jews, that God was able of the very stones “to raise up children unto Abraham.” And as there was nothing which even the apostles of Christ were more slow to believe, so there was nothing more fit for John to preach in preparation for the Gospel, than this purpose of the Almighty to extend it to all mankind. Whilst, therefore, we take gladly to ourselves this early proof of a design so gracious in our behalf, let us apply also to our own lives the express condition of God’s mercy ; let us observe that in the preaching of Christ’s messenger, repentance without amendment is as a tree without fruit, fit only to be “hewn down and cast into the fire.” “To flee from the wrath to come” is natural to every man who is aware of its coming. To be afraid of punishment, to be anxious if possible to escape it, is no more than may be felt by those, who all the while remain a “generation of vipers.” We must be afraid, not of wrath only, but of sin. We must be sorry, not because we have put ourselves in peril, but because we have done dishonour to God. We must repent, so as to be renewed, so as to bring forth new fruit, that healthful, and sound, and pleasant frame of life, which is at once edifying to man, and acceptable to God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

John testifieth of Christ.

10 And the people asked him, saying, What shall we do then?

11 He answereth and saith unto them, 'He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewise.

12 Then came also publicans to be baptized, and said unto him, Master, what shall we do?

13 And he said unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you.

14 And the soldiers likewise demanded of him, saying, And what shall we do? And he said unto them, || Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your † wages.

15 And as the people were in ‡ expectation, and all men § mused in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ, or not;

16 John answered, saying unto them all, 'I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire:

17 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable.

18 And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people.

19 ^a But Herod the tetrarch, being reproved by him for Herodias his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done,

20 Added yet this above all, that he shut up John in prison.

21 Now when all the people were baptized, 'it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened,

22 And the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased.

¹ James 2. 15. ¹ John 3. 17. || Or, Put no man in fear. † Or, allowance. ‡ Or, in suspense. § Or, reasoned, or, debated.
² Matt. 3. 11. ³ Matt. 14. 3. ⁴ Matt. 3. 13.

§ 187. The obligations of Christian baptism.

When John urged upon his hearers the necessity of bringing forth fruits worthy of repentance, they asked him each with earnest anxiety, "What shall we do then?" When we hear John's testimony, when we learn in the Gospel of Christ the obligations to repentance and faith; let us ask with like desire to know, let us ask with full purpose to practise what is told us; let us ask, "what shall we do then?" The answer of the Baptist to these anxious inquirers expressed not the whole of their duty, but some few particulars of immediate importance to each. And though we may learn much more, on every one of these heads, from the words of our Lord and his apostles, we shall do well to consider first the instructions of John to the people, the publicans, and the soldiers. Each class he either warned against those very sins in which each was most tempted to transgress, or exhorted to the performance of those duties in which each was most apt to fail.

The people, who were for the most part the poor, he bid relieve out of their poverty the wants of each other. So far is the having little from being sufficient excuse for not giving much, that he who has but meat and a coat to spare, had better give them to him that has none, than enjoy them by himself. The publicans John instructed to exact no more than that which was appointed to them; not meaning but that there were many more fruits of repentance which they must endeavour to bring forth, but urging them as their first and most important duty to be just in their collection of the taxes. The soldiers too in like manner he warned, not at once of all that was unchristian in their conduct, but of what was then most prevalent and most wicked in their profession, an overbearing, and quarrelsome, and discontented temper. Let us in our repentance, first amend what we first and most plainly know to be wrong. As we improve we shall know more, and shall have more to improve; not only not accusing falsely, but seeking and making peace, not only not exacting wrongfully, but cheerfully submitting to be wronged; not only giving out of our superfluity, but labouring and working with our hands, that we may have to give to him that needeth. See Eph. 4. 28.

St. John in preparing the way for Christ ran some risk of being mistaken for Him whose messenger he was. He therefore gave public testimony to one who should come after him mightier than himself, who should baptize, not with water only, but "with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." This means with the Holy Ghost, appearing like to fire, in his descent on the apostles. See Acts 2. 3. And in these words is described also the power of that baptism which Christ instituted, and which is administered by his appointment among all nations of mankind. Not with water only, but with the Holy Ghost have we ourselves been in infancy baptized; with fire, that should make to glow within us the warmth of devout and disinterested love. Else will the holy spark then communicated to our souls rise up in the judgment against us. Else shall we as useless chaff, be so much the more surely, for the privileges we have abused, given over to the unquenchable fire, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Mark 9. 44.

The more to honour the rite of baptism, which He designed to enjoin on his disciples, our Lord graciously submitted to it Himself. And in an instant He was proclaimed from heaven to be the Son of God Most High, in whom the Almighty Father is well pleased. Thanks be to God that through the same Jesus Christ He is well pleased also in us! Thanks be to God that through Him our sins are forgiven, and our unprofitable service graciously received! Thanks be to God, that we too are now sons, if only like sons we love, sons of God, and heirs with Christ, heirs through Him of everlasting life!

The Genealogy of Christ.

23 And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was supposed) the son of Joseph, which was the son of Heli,

24 Which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi, which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Janna, which was the son of Joseph,

25 Which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Amos, which was the son of Naum, which was the son of Esli, which was the son of Naggæ,

26 Which was the son of Maath, which was the son of Mattathias, which was the son of Semei, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Juda,

27 Which was the son of Joanna, which was the son of Rhesa, which was the son of Zorobabel, which was the son of Salathiel, which was the son of Neri,

28 Which was the son of Melchi, which was the son of Addi, which was the son of Cosam, which was the son of Elmodam, which was the son of Er,

29 Which was the son of Jose, which was the son of Eliezer, which was the son of Jorim, which was the son of Matthat, which was the son of Levi,

30 Which was the son of Simeon, which was the son of Juda, which was the son of Joseph, which was the son of Jonan, which was the son of Eliakim,

31 Which was the son of Melea, which was the son of Menan, which was the son of Mattatha, which was the son of Nathan, which was the son of David,

32 Which was the son of Jesse, which was the son of Obed, which was the son of Booz, which was the son of Salmon, which was the son of Naason,

33 Which was the son of Aminadab, which was the son of Aram, which was the son of Esrom, which was the son of Phares, which was the son of Juda,

34 Which was the son of Jacob, which was the son of Isaac, which was the son of Abraham, which was the son of Thara, which was the son of Nachor,

35 Which was the son of Saruch, which was the son of Ragau, which was the son of Phalec, which was the son of Heber, which was the son of Sala,

36 Which was the son of Cainan, which was the son of Arphaxad, which was the son of Sem, which was the son of Noe, which was the son of Lamech,

37 Which was the son of Mathusala, which was the son of Enoch, which was the son of Jared, which was the son of Muleleel, which was the son of Cuinan,

38 Which was the son of Enos, which was the son of Seth, which was the son of Adam, which was the son of God.

§ 188. That time is short in respect of eternity.

The genealogy of Christ is the list of his fathers according to the flesh. It is carefully set down both by St. Matthew and St. Luke. The former tells us the parentage of our blessed Lord through Joseph, by his father Jacob, see Matthew 1. 16, whilst St. Luke reckons it through Mary, by her father Heli, of whom Joseph is here said to be the son, that is, the son in law. Or rather, strictly speaking, he is said to be "of Heli;" there being in the original neither "son" nor "son in law" between which "was," and "of Heli." And this, it should be remembered, is always the case with the words which in our Bibles are in a different print. They are such as in the original it was usual to understand, but which in our language it is necessary to express, and which are therefore supplied by the translators. And that son in law was here properly understood seems plain from its being said before of Jesus, that He was, "as was supposed, the son of Joseph." For this is as though St. Luke had said, that He was not really Joseph's son, but only the son of Mary, Joseph's wife, and therefore Mary's father, not Joseph's, would have to be mentioned next. And this matter becomes clear when we consider, that St. Luke wrote his Gospel after St. Matthew's, which he supposes to be previously known. And it being therein set down that "Jacob begat Joseph the husband of Mary," there could be no doubt that Joseph was not the son "of Heli," except by marriage. Thus we have here the whole extraction of Mary; and thus Jesus is shewn to be by his mother's side naturally, as well as legally by the genealogy of her husband, "the son of David, the son of Abraham." And this point it was important to establish, because the early Scriptures had so expressly determined the family in which the Saviour of the world should be born. And the Jews, as we find in the Old Testament, had their pedigrees very carefully preserved, with a view to their satisfaction in this particular. So that every instance, in which we find these long lists of names from father to son, may serve, as they occur, to remind us, what care God had taken beforehand to satisfy mankind, when Jesus should be born, that He was "very Christ." In each succeeding generation the line is drawn closer and closer, the time becomes shorter and shorter, within which it is decreed in the divine counsels that the Saviour of the world should be manifest in the flesh. The sceptre is now ready to depart from Judah. See Gen. 49. 10. Of the four great empires foretold by Daniel, the last is now established throughout the earth. See Dan. 7. 23. And that universal peace, of which Isaiah prophesied, chap. 2. 4, is now known for the first time in the history of the world. Thus whilst "one generation passeth away and another cometh," Eccles. 1. 4, the purposes of the Almighty stand ever sure. The actions of mankind, whether kings or peasants, whether their wars or marriages, are freely chosen. But the design of God is in all fulfilled. And through ages, which to us seem countless, the love of God is compassing one single end, the redemption of mankind through Christ.

Christ is tempted in the wilderness.

1 And ¹Jesus being full of the Holy Ghost returned from Jordan, and was led by the Spirit into the wilderness,

2 Being forty days tempted of the devil. And in those days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungered.

3 And the devil said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this stone that it be made bread.

4 And Jesus answered him, saying, It is written, That man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God.

5 And the devil, taking him up into an high mountain, shewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time.

6 And the devil said unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it.

¹ Matt. 4. 1.

7 If thou therefore wilt || worship me, all shall be thine.

8 And Jesus answered and said unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

9 And he brought him to Jerusalem, and set him on a pinnacle of the temple, and said unto him, If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down from hence:

10 For it is written, He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee:

11 And in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone,

12 And Jesus answering said unto him, It is said, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.

13 And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a season.

|| Or, fall down before me.

§ 189. The perseverance and falsehood of our spiritual enemy.

There can be no doubt that our Lord when in the wilderness was alone. This temptation therefore could have been made known to the evangelists only by his own relation, or by the express revelation of the Holy Ghost. Yet in St. Matthew's Gospel we find the particulars set down in a different order from that in which they occur here in St. Luke. And on a comparison, it is evident from St. Matthew's saying, "Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city," Matt. 4. 5, that the temptation here mentioned third, took place in reality the second. For St. Luke uses no such word as "then;" but relates the three events, without referring to their order, which was obviously a matter of indifference. And it would be our own mistake to imagine that he meant, what he has no where said, that the one which he relates last happened subsequently to the second. Hence let us be warned against ever supposing two passages of Scripture to contradict each other, merely because at first sight they seem not to agree. Nor let us expect of the sacred writers a minute attention to the order of events, in a case where the order was immaterial. Rather, from their silence on such slight particulars, let us learn to fix our whole attention on the practical importance of what they wrote.

It was in the solitude of the wilderness that our Lord met with these temptations. And thither He "was led by the Spirit," after his baptism in Jordan, when "full of the Holy Ghost." Retirement is often much to be desired after our acts of most solemn devotion; after our daily prayers, our public worship, and our receiving the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. At such seasons it is well for us to commune with our own hearts, the world and its vanities shut out, and to commune with Almighty God, in whose presence we at all times are. Only let us not think that even in retirement we are safe from spiritual danger. There also is our adversary the devil, prepared, as against our Lord of old, to spread against our unwary souls the snares of pride and of presumption. Nor though for once we should succeed in resisting this evil adversary, must we ever, as long as life continues, relax our watchfulness or exertions. Satan, as we here learn, is never weary of ill doing. Driven from one point of attack he is immediately prepared for another. And when he "had ended all the temptation," it was but "for a season" that he departed from our Lord.

And now observe the falsehood of what the tempter urges. "All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them: for that is delivered unto me; and to whomsoever I will I give it. If thou therefore wilt worship me, all shall be thine." As if God had aetnally given up to him all ordering of this world's affairs! As if he had any thing more allowed him, than permission for a time, and within strait limits, and for good ends, to tempt the children of men! But he was a liar from the beginning. See Gen. 3. 4, 5. And the like he continues to this present time. To the lover of pleasure his words are still the same, "All this will I give thee." To the covetous, to the ambitious, to the vain, to the worldlyminded, he still whispers of wealth, and fame, and praise, and comfort, "All this will I give thee." When in truth he can give nothing but the wages that are appropriate to sin, even sorrow, and sickness, and death. Only evil can the evil one bestow; and to evil he can wrest even every good gift. Thus even Scripture he can turn to a false application, and make that which was written for encouragement of faith, to be a ground of pride and presumption. Thus would he have us tempt God; not by putting too much, but too little trust in Him, by forgetting that He is wise and just, as well as gracious, and merciful, and longsuffering.

Never may we so tempt our heavenly Father! Never may we so misconstrue his precious promises! Never may we quote heedlessly his sacred word! Never may we fail to count it for glad tidings of great joy; or to use it, as our Lord has here set us the example, for the rule and guide of our lives.

Christ beginneth to preach in Galilee.

14 And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about.

15 And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all.

16 And he came to ¹ Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read.

17 And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Esaias. And when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written,

¹ Matt. 13. 54.

18 ² The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the brokenhearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised,

19 To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.

20 And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him.

21 And he began to say unto them, This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears.

² Is. 61. 1.

§ 190. The acceptable year of the Lord.

When Jesus had been in vain assailed by the tempter, and was about to begin his public ministry, He "returned by the power of the Spirit into Galilee." This means that his returning in that direction was not the result of his own choice as being a man, but the dictate of the Holy Ghost; with whom as God He is ever One. Here by his words and works He produced a great impression on the people; "and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about." Thus the general attention was aroused: and we may be the more certain in all that follows, that the facts, being known in so public a manner, could not have been misrepresented.

On our Lord's coming unto Nazareth, He entered into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. Of these synagogues it is certain that they were not appointed in the law of Moses. And there is good reason to believe that they were unknown among the Jews previous to the carrying away into Babylon. For how, if there had been synagogues in use, how could the copies of the law have been so scarce as they had become in the reign of Josiah? Their use appears to have grown up in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. Afterwards they were erected commonly throughout the country, as churches are amongst ourselves, and used much in the same manner for prayer, and for reading and expounding the word of God. And to their regular use it is justly attributed, that whereas previous to the Babylonish captivity the Jews were grievously addicted to idolatry, they were ever afterwards utterly averse to it. So little "communion hath light with darkness!" 2 Cor. 6. 14. So great are the advantages of constant attendance on divine worship! So profitable herein was the example of Christ, who, "as his custom was, went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day!"

The passage of Isaias, which Christ turned to, and read, on this opening of his ministry at Nazareth, describes the office He came to fulfil, and the benefits which He proposed to confer on the whole race of mankind. We were all poor, wanting in the first necessities of spiritual life; and He was anointed, that is, sent by divine appointment, to preach the Gospel to the poor, to make us rich in knowledge, rich in grace, and whether poor or rich in this world, rich in the promise of eternal life. Brokenhearted we must needs have been, to have no hope of health or safety, no prospect of escaping the wrath due to sin. But He was sent to heal us; to give us, as in the prophet is more fully written, "the oil of joy for mourning;" Isaias 61. 3; instead of sorrow in our broken hearts, to give us a cheerful sense of his forgiveness, and a faithful conviction of his love. Captive we were to sin and death, in bondage to our own unruly passions, entangled by the snares of Satan, and if not otherwise incapable, restrained from doing good by the servile fear of man. But He preached to us the perfect law of liberty, opened to us the way of righteousness, taught us to renounce the world, to resist the devil, and to obey from that love of God and man, which when perfect "casteth out fear." 1 John 4. 18. Blind too we were, unable to see things heavenly, unable to conceive of God, but as of one like ourselves, or of heaven but as a continuance of a life like to our own. But Christ has brought life and immortality to light. See 2 Tim. 1. 10. He has shewed us the Father in shewing us Himself. See John 14. 9.

Now then we may do well to reflect, each within himself, this is "the acceptable year of the Lord." This is that season of God's last dispensation, which compared with eternity is not a single year; and in which each span of human life is scarce an hour or a moment in the estimate of truth. Shall we for so short a season grudge to wait, when our joy is to last for ever? Shall we for so short a season spare to work, when our work is the work of love? This day is this Scripture fulfilled in our ears. Our turn is now come to hear it. The day of our fathers is gone by. The acceptable year of all mankind is fast drawing to its close. Let us fasten our eyes on Him, whose word, if we believe, will be made good, in the healing of our hearts, in the recovering of our sight, and in the deliverance of our souls from captivity. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." 2 Cor. 6. 2.

Christ is thrust out of Nazareth.

22 And all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And they said, Is not this Joseph's son?

23 And he said unto them, Ye will surely say unto me this proverb, Physician, heal thyself: whatsoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do also here in thy country.

24 And he said, Verily, I say unto you, No¹ prophet is accepted in his own country.

25 But I tell you of a truth,² many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias, when the heaven was shut up three years and six months, when great famine was throughout all the land;

26 But unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow.

¹ Matt. 13. 57.² 1 Kings 17. 9.³ 2 Kings 5. 14.

|| Or, edge.

⁴ Matt. 7. 29.

27³ And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Elisens the prophet: and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian.

28 And all they in the synagogue, when they heard these things, were filled with wrath.

29 And rose up and thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the || brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong.

30 But he passing through the midst of them went his way,

31 And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the sabbath days.

32 And they were astonished at his doctrine: ⁴ for his word was with power.

§ 191. The peril of privileges.

They who heard our Lord discourse in the synagogue of Nazareth "all bare him witness;" that is, openly expressed their admiration of what He said. Yet in the very next breath they inquired, "Is not this Joseph's son?" meaning to make his lowly birth an excuse for not believing and doing as He taught. Wherein we see that it is one thing to be pleased with preaching, another to profit by it. And we should hence take warning, lest, whilst we are struck with the words of grace and truth, we find ever some plausible excuse for not applying them to the improvement of ourselves. Who can help being delighted with scripture doctrine, when faithfully and forcibly set forth? Who can fail to feel exalted by the glad intelligence that we are become the sons of God, and have had thrown open to us the kingdom of heaven? But how many are content with the brief feeling of the hour, and return from God's house, and from the hearing of his word, to the practice of the things which are abomination in his sight! How few, when they hear, believe, do what they learn, and perform what they resolve!

Christ reproves this instance of spiritual indifference in the natives of Nazareth; forestalling what they were ready to have said to Him, and pointing out the folly of their excuses. Because He had not wrought in Nazareth the miracles they had heard of in Capernaum, therefore, by way of excuse in their unbelief, they would have applied to Him the proverb, "Physician, heal thyself;" meaning, Heal first those nearest to thine own home. Against this notion He contended by the examples of Elijah and Elisha; two of whose most signal miracles had been vouchsafed not to Jews, but to a widow of Sidon, and to a captain of the host of Syria. See 1 Kings 17. 2 Kings 5. And in like manner, He implied, He would shew forth his own marvellous works, not to such as conceived they had most right to behold them, but to such as God should in his own wisdom choose for witnesses of the truth.

See here, how it is for no worthiness of ours that we enjoy that full measure of Christian light which it has pleased God to vouchsafe to this age and nation! No Capernaum there is in all the world, of which we can complain, that we have heard of things done there, that have not been done amongst ourselves. Wrongfully we should complain if there were. For which of all these blessings have we ourselves deserved? And what deserts of ours could gainsay the convincing question: "Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?" Rom. 9. 21. Is it not the obvious prerogative of Him, who made us and redeemed us, to determine under what degree of light, in what circumstances of spiritual poverty or wealth, we should each of us be born and brought up? One thing is certain, that the higher are the privileges which we have been predestinated to enjoy, and the more utterly we feel unworthy of enjoying them, the more deeply are we bound to be thankful in our hearts and lives to the Giver of all good things.

And not thankful only, but watchful should we hence learn ever to be, when we see how divine truth, if it fail to enlighten and convert the soul, is apt to provoke it to aggravated sin. The men of Nazareth, the very same who "bare him witness" and wondered at the grace of his words, when they heard the rebuke of Jesus, "rose up, and thrust him out of the city; and led him unto the brow of the hill whereon their city was built, that they might cast him down headlong." The men of this world, when they hear God's word faithfully set forth, instead of being angry with themselves, are apt to be indignant at the teacher who reproves their particular offences. Each would have his own sin spared; and then all others may be freely censured. All doctrines may be acceptably preached, save the one which is most unpalatable to each man's own taste. Whilst Christ is by such as these rejected, may He dwell in our hearts by faith! May we thankfully receive his hardest sayings; and prefer to the flattery of the world, and to the smooth tidings of false prophets, these truths most unwelcome to our carnal thoughts, that only on repentance is sin forgiven. that only by Christ crucified are sinners saved!

Christ casting out the devils suffereth them not to speak.

33 ¹ And in the synagogue there was a man, which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice,

34 Saying, || Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God.

35 And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not.

36 And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out.

37 And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

38 ² And he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house. And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her.

¹ Mark 1. 23.

|| Or, away.

² Matt. 8. 14.

39 And he stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her: and immediately she arose and ministered unto them.

40 Now when the sun was setting, all they that had any sick with divers diseases brought them unto him; and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them.

41 ³ And devils also came out of many, crying out, and saying, Thou art Christ the Son of God. And he rebuking them suffered them not * to speak: for they knew that he was Christ.

42 And when it was day, he departed and went into a desert place: and the people sought him, and came unto him, and stayed him, that he should not depart from them.

43 And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent.

44 And he preached in the synagogues of Galilee.

³ Mark 1. 34.

* Or, to say that they knew him to be Christ.

§ 192. The vanity of profession without practice.

The words of the unclean spirit, whom our Lord, when in the synagogue, cast out, express feelings which it is to be feared are not uncommon among those to whom his healing influence is offered. "What have we to do with thee?" is the thought, if it be not often the very answer of a sinner, each time that he is taxed with his offence. Whether it be the minister of religion who reproves him, or the friend of his bosom who kindly points out his faults, or conscience, which is God speaking in his heart, whom no force can silence, no secrecy deceive; in any case the reflection is ready to arise, for there is an evil spirit ever ready to suggest it, "What have we to do with thee?" Let us observe then who it is that we are thus tempted to reject, when we refuse good counsel, or suppress good thoughts. It is Jesus of Nazareth, the Holy One of God. It is He, who, by his Spirit, by his word, by the voice of a minister, or by the influence of a friend, would cast out the evil spirits which possess our souls, would heal the fever of which we else must perish everlastingly.

What a sad spectacle must have been all these sick persons, with divers diseases, brought together unto Christ! And how is it that we see daily, without fear and sorrow, the like signs of Satan's work, in sin wasting the strength of the soul? How hear we without dismay like sounds of Satan's voice, in each oath the swearer utters, in each envious, angry, idle word, which they who swear not, venture to express? Where pride or passion prevails over Christian principle, there is fever. Where the love of this world's pleasure casts out the love of God, there is plague and pestilence. Where covetousness takes place of charity, where present enjoyment chills heavenly hope, where sense is triumphant over faith, there is the evil spirit in possession. And how is it that we fear not to approach? How is it that we seek not more anxiously our brother's healing, care not more earnestly for our own greater safety? Surely we do not thoroughly believe that "he that committeth sin is of the devil;" 1 John 3. 8; that they who do the things God has forbidden, shall not inherit eternal life. Surely we must have some lurking hope, that to be called a Christian is a sufficient title to the heaven, which is set forth for us to seek.

Let us then, in the instance of these devils, observe the vanity, and worse than vanity, of knowledge without obedience, of profession without practice. Ready they were to own, "Thou art Christ the Son of God." But Jesus, in the miracles here recorded, rebuked them, and suffered them not to speak. Hateful, rather than acceptable unto Him, is the confession of Christian faith which is unconnected with devotion to his service. Better it were not to name his name at all, than to name it without departing from iniquity. See 2 Tim. 2. 19. Our lips can bear no acceptable testimony to his truth, whilst our lives are in opposition to his will. It is the obedience of the heart that must confess Him for the Christ. Our hands more diligent to do good, our feet more firm to walk in uprightness, our ears more swift to hear for profit, our tongues more slow to speak for harm, our thoughts more kind to each other, our tempers more gentle, our passions more subdued, our whole frame of life and conversation more holy, more heavenly minded; these are the only voices which without offence may say to Him, "I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God."

God grant that our works may thus speak his praise; and our hearts with thankfulness return his love, whilst our lips confess his name! God make us sensible, in all we see, that sin is the worst of sickness, the most grievous possession of body and of soul! God teach us to say and feel, ever as we hear the tidings of redemption through Christ, not, "what have we to do with thee," but rather, what can we do without Thee, Jesus Thou son of God?

Christ ordereth a miraculous draught of fishes.

1 And ⁱ it came to pass, that, as the people pressed upon him to hear the word of God, he stood by the lake of Gennessaret,

2 And saw two ships standing by the lake : but the fishermen were gone out of them, and were washing their nets.

3 And he entered into one of the ships, which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thrust out a little from the land. And he sat down, and taught the people out of the ship.

4 Now when he had left speaking, he said unto Simon, Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

5 And Simon answering said unto him, Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing : nevertheless at thy word I will let down the net.

6 And when they had this done, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes : and their net brake.

7 And they beckoned unto their partners, which were in the other ship, that they should come and help them. And they came, and filled both the ships, so that they began to sink.

8 When Simon Peter saw it, he fell down at Jesus' knees, saying, Depart from me ; for I am a sinful man, O Lord.

9 For he was astonished, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fishes which they had taken :

10 And so was also James, and John, the sons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not ; from henceforth thou shalt catch men.

11 And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed him.

ⁱ Matt. 4. 18.

§ 193. That we must work in faith, and be humble in success.

In this miracle we see the difference between working without Christ, and working with Him. "Master, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing;" this is the result in the first case. This is the true character of all plans of life undertaken with no Christian motive, and with no prayer for Christian grace; labour without fruit, toil and taking nothing, vanity and "vexation of spirit." Eccles. 1. 14. Few could faithfully survey their past years without acknowledging the truth of this account. What are we the wiser; what the better, what the happier, for the chief part of the time we have spent hitherto on earth, and for what we have all the while been doing? Will the things we have been employed in give us peace at the last? Do they give us comfort or satisfaction at this hour? So far as they do, it must be as far as we have believed, have obeyed, have loved Christ our Lord; it must be as far as we have wrought with Him, and He with us. So far as they do not, but rather fill us in the recollection with shame and regret, it is because we have neglected the service of Christ, and have been living without God in the world. And this we are continually tempted to do: the objects of each sense, and the events of each passing hour, continually engrossing our attention, and withdrawing it from the only one thing really needful.

How different is the result when we work with the aid of Christ, when we let down the net at his word, with lively faith in his gracious promises, with sincere intent to fulfil his will! "And when they had this done, they enclosed a great multitude of fishes." Immediately their work prospered. The very same net, and in the very same waters, which all night long had taken nothing, now fills at once both the ships, "so that they began to sink." Hereupon our Lord takes occasion to signify that He had wrought this miracle, not for the mere supply of their bodily wants, but for the encouragement of their faith in his spiritual service. "And Jesus said unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou shalt catch men." Hence we should be warned, not to look for the fruit of Christ's working with us, in the abundance of earthly prosperity. Most times all these things are largely added unto those, who seek first the kingdom of God; always, in such measure and degree as is safe for them and seasonable. But though in the midst of such plenty and prosperity their net begin to break, or the ship to sink, it is their joy to be assured that their labour nevertheless is not in vain, their success is sure in the ocean of eternity. And all this world's comforts they therefore resign without a murmur, as knowing that they must yield them up at last, and as trusting through the merits of Christ to be hereafter more than recompensed.

"Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord:" these are the words of Peter at the sight of his success; this is the reflection of each humble soul that is conscious of being blest with God's gifts of grace. Humility has been said to be like a vine, that is bowed down to the earth, by the abundance of its own precious fruit. The nearer a man approaches to being a saint, the more he is aware that he is a sinner. "Depart from me; for I am a sinful man, O Lord." We are not worthy of the least of all thy mercies. That Thou shouldest have come down from heaven to dwell on earth, we are not worthy, O Lord. That Thou shouldest for us have been made man, and lived, and died, and risen again from the dead, we are not worthy, O Lord. That Thou shouldest still plead for us in heaven, there still love us, and thence still help us by thy grace, we are not worthy, O Lord. Depart, for in thy presence we are filled with shame; depart, yet not so, for in thy departure we perish everlastingly. Be not Thou then, O Lord, far from us; O Lord, haste Thee to help us. Come nigh, and dwell among us. Depart not, nor let us depart from Thee, for ever.

Christ healeth the leper, and one sick of the palsy.

12 ¹ And it came to pass, when he was in a certain city, behold a man full of leprosy: who seeing Jesus fell on his face, and besought him, saying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean.

13 And he put forth his hand, and touched him, saying, I will: be thou clean. And immediately the leprosy departed from him.

14 And he charged him to tell no man: but go, and shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing, according as Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

15 But so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities.

16 And he withdrew himself into the wilderness, and prayed.

17 And it came to pass, on a certain day, as he was teaching, that there were Pharisees and doctors of the law sitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judæa, and Jerusalem: and the power of the Lord was present to heal them.

18 ² And, behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palsy: and they sought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him.

¹ Matt. 8. 2.

19 And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in because of the multitude, they went upon the housetop, and let him down through the tiling with his couch into the midst before Jesus.

20 And when he saw their faith, he said unto him, Man, thy sins are forgiven thee.

21 And the Scribes and the Pharisees began to reason, saying, Who is this which speaketh blasphemies? Who can forgive sins but God alone?

22 But when Jesus perceived their thoughts, he answering said unto them, What reason ye in your hearts?

23 Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?

24 But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive sins, (he said unto the sick of the palsy,) I say unto thee, Arise, and take up thy couch, and go unto thine house.

25 And immediately he rose up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own house, glorifying God.

26 And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, saying, We have seen strange things to day.

² Matt. 9. 2.

§ 194. That we should be filled with amazement at God's mercy.

In the former of these miracles we should note the divine authority with which our Lord replies, "I will: be thou clean." Herein we have it plainly signified that of his own will He healed the leper. And we may conceive it to be further implied, that whom He will He now makes whole, by the healing of his grace. "And he charged him to tell no man." This means that he should not publish the matter for his own glory, nor talk in a vain and boastful manner, as he would naturally be tempted to do, of the wonderful cure he had received. But he was bound to ascribe the glory to God; and for this end he was instructed to go and shew himself to the priest.

In the second of these miracles, we may observe how graciously our Lord discerns acceptable faith, in the bringing unto Him, through the housetop, the sick of the palsy. This behaviour might in many instances have been counted for a rude intrusion. And it was indeed the very reverse of the conduct which the centurion in another case pursued, saying, "I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof." Chap. 7. 6. But proceeding from the like principle of trust in Christ, it received from Him, who could discern the heart, the same kind construction, and bounteous reward. And to us it furnishes this useful lesson, that we should think no evil; but always ascribe to the best motive we can imagine, what we witness or experience in each other.

'Till were these lessons of Christian charity understood by the assembled Pharisees, who "sat by," as it should seem, to find fault with our Lord, rather than to profit by his teaching. "Who is this," say they, "which speaketh blasphemies?" a most evil construction to put upon the most gracious of all words that ever sounded in the ears of man, "Thy sins are forgiven thee!" "Who can forgive sins, but God alone?" a most true conclusion, establishing, from the mouth of an enemy, that He who did these things must be no less than God! For the event proved that these words of our blessed Lord were with power. The healing of the sick of the palsy compelled the very Pharisees, with the rest, to acknowledge, "We have seen strange things to day."

Such when the day of judgment shall arrive, such will be the confession extorted from every one who now judges uncharitably of his neighbours. Here if we think evil of each other, there we shall be both surprised, and ashamed, to find the extent of our mistakes. Publicans and harlots will there often be preferred to those who while on earth pronounced their condemnation. Such is the force of that gracious sentence, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." Oh, if here we have attained unto that heavenly pardon, let us not fail to glorify God, let us not be wanting in due fear and admiration at his work so full of mercy to our souls. The palsy we may not see healed. We may not behold the helpless rise up and walk. But is it nothing to have our weakness supported by God's grace? Is it nothing to have our sins forgiven? Is it nothing to be enabled to walk in God's commandments? Is it nothing to be assured by his word, that we shall rise from death to life eternal? These mercies if we were to feel duly, this healing if we were to value as we ought, in ourselves, and in the thousands who partake of them around us, we should be ready to acknowledge each time that we reflect on them: "We have seen strange things to day."

Christ calleth Levi, eateth with publicans.

27 ¹ And after these things he went forth, and saw a publican, named Levi, sitting at the receipt of custom : and he said unto him, Follow me.

28 And he left all, rose up, and followed him.

29 And Levi made him a great feast in his own house : and there was a great company of publicans and of others that sat down with them.

30 But their scribes and Pharisees murmured against his disciples, saying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and sinners ?

31 And Jesus answering said unto them, They that are whole need not a physician ; but they that are sick.

32 I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

33 And they said unto him, ² Why do the disciples of John fast often, and make prayers, and likewise the disciples of the Pharisees ; but thine eat and drink ?

34 And he said unto them, Can ye make the children of the bridechamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them ?

35 But the days will come, when the bridegroom shall be taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those days.

36 And he spake also a parable unto them ; No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old ; if otherwise, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old.

37 And no man putteth new wine into old bottles ; else the new wine will burst the bottles, and be spilled, and the bottles shall perish.

38 But new wine must be put into new bottles ; and both are preserved.

39 No man also having drunk old wine straightway desireth new : for he saith, The old is better.

¹ Matt. 9. 9.

² Matt. 9. 14.

§ 195. How far Christians are allowed to feast.

Levi here spoken of was St. Matthew, the writer of the earliest Gospel. He was a publican, that is, a receiver of the public taxes, paying a rent for them to the Roman government. These dues were extremely odious among the Jews, as reminding them of their subjection to a foreign power. And this method of collecting them often tempted the collectors to be oppressive, for their own greater gain. Thus the very name of publican was held in general aversion and contempt. And thus Christ, in selecting Levi for an apostle, has shewn us, that with God there is no respect of persons, or of trades, or of employments. It is enough that a man pursues honestly and charitably whatsoever calling he is used to ; until at least he knows better from God's word. It is enough that he is ready, when so persuaded, to renounce all he here has, or hopes to have, for the sake of an employment more according to God's will.

Nor did our blessed Lord think it needful to refuse the entertainment which was made on the occasion, though the company consisted chiefly of men engaged in the like worldly occupation. And for this conduct He accounted by a proverb of very obvious application, "They that are whole need not a physician ; but they that are sick." And what pains does a faithful physician grudge, what risk does he refuse to run, what loathsome disease does he forbear to examine, if he may by any means assist to relieve it ? Such is our Lord's attention to our souls in their afflicted state of sin. Such is his condescension to our weakness and our wants, his concern for us in our most offensive transgressions. However deep then be the wounds of our iniquity, let us apply in prayer unto Him, with an entire reliance on his willingness to heal. Let us not in any false presumption conceive ourselves to be righteous ; but own that we are miserable sinners ; for such did He come to save.

The Pharisees being thus answered, find a new objection against Jesus, complaining, as the disciples of John also found fault, Matt. 9. 13. that He should on any occasion, and in any company, partake of such social entertainments. For Himself He had already explained that He had an eye to the conversion of those amongst whom He feasted. For his disciples He remarks, that when He should hereafter be taken away from them, "then shall they fast in those days." And this was soon and signally fulfilled, as we read in St. Paul to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 4. 11, "We both hunger and thirst, and are naked." Meanwhile it was fitting for the disciples to take share of such festivity as was offered them, on this ground ; that the enjoyment of God's creatures is a fit instance of thankfulness to Himself. And it was no more to be expected that they should purposely refuse such occasions of sober enjoyment, than that men who have been drinking old wine would return to that which is inferior, namely new. So that social entertainment is both allowed by our Lord to his disciples, and pronounced to be, when compared with fasting, in some sense, and on some occasions, better.

How far then may we apply this allowance to ourselves, living as we do in times when the Bridegroom has been taken away from us ; though exempt from the pressure of public persecution ? We are bound, it should seem, sometimes to fast, and sometimes we may be permitted also to feast. But when we feast, let it be so far only as we could conceive that the heavenly Bridegroom would sanction ; so far as his presence, discerned ever by lively faith, is no hindrance to our joy ; so far only as we believe that his disciples, and He Himself, feasted ; so far only as like them we may mingle in our mirth the thoughts of Christian thankfulness, the words of Christian counsel ; so far only as we may feel reasonable hope, that the Giver of all good things looks down with pleasure on our thankful use of them, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Christ justifieth his disciples, and healeth on the Sabbath day.

1 And ¹it came to pass on the second sabbath after the first, that he went through the corn fields; and his disciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands.

2 And certain of the Pharisees said unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the sabbath days?

3 And Jesus answering them^{*} said, Have ye not read so much as this, what David did, when himself was an hungred, and they which were with him;

4 How he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him; which it is not lawful to eat but for the priests alone?

5 And he said unto them, That the Son of man is Lord also of the sabbath.

6 ² And it came to pass also on another sabbath, that he entered into the synagogue and taught: and there was a man whose right hand was withered.

7 And the scribes and Pharisees watched him, whether he would heal on the sabbath day; that they might find an accusation against him.

8 But he knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up, and stand forth in the midst. And he arose and stood forth.

9 Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing; Is it lawful on the sabbath days to do good, or to do evil? to save life or to destroy it?

10 And looking round about upon them all, he said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so: and his hand was restored whole as the other.

11 And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus.

¹ Matt. 12. 1.

² Matt. 12. 9.

§ 196. The time and manner of keeping the Christian Sabbath.

The two transactions here recorded may serve the better, when taken together, to explain to us the nature of the Christian sabbath. On this day of holy rest, as observed and enforced by our blessed Lord, it is lawful to do works of necessity, it is lawful to do works of charity. The disciples might pluck the ears of corn and eat; they might satisfy by this plainest of food their urgent hunger. Their Master too might heal the man that had a withered hand, that is to say, might do good, might save life. And these things He justified to the captious Pharisees, in the one case, by an example taken from their own history, in the other by the signal miracle which He performed. David had been excused by hunger when "he went into the house of God, and did take and eat the shewbread, and gave also to them that were with him." See 1 Sam. 21. 6. And Pharisees, who found no fault with David, should have found no fault with the disciples. And if Christ could on the sabbath day make whole a hand that had been long withered, the Pharisees might be sure, and we too may be sure, that He was "Lord also of the sabbath."

That He is so, has been proved by the alteration which has taken place in the order of the day observed, and in the manner of observing it, under the authority of Christ, and of his apostles. There is no sufficient evidence in Scripture as to which day of the week, according to our present reckoning was the original sabbath of the patriarchs. By the Jews, under the revelation of their law, it was kept on the day which we now call the seventh. To the patriarchs it signified God's rest after creation. To the Jews it commemorated, in addition, their deliverance from a state of bondage in Egypt. See Deut. 5. 15. In both cases there was enjoined entire rest from all work. For before the Law was given, the very manna from heaven, a case of necessary food, was doubled on the sixth day, that it might not be gathered on the seventh. See Exod. 16. 26, 29. And in the Law it was expressly commanded; "Whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death." Exod. 31. 15. Whereas the Christian sabbath commemorates rather our new creation unto God in Christ Jesus, our deliverance from the bondage of sin, and our assurance that we are so delivered, by the death and resurrection of our blessed Lord. Thus it is, as it is described in the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. 4. 8, "another day." It signifies, as there argued, the eternal rest secured in the life which is to come, for the people of God. It is "the Lord's day." Rev. 1. 10. It is the day on which our Lord rose from the dead; "for our justification," Rom. 4. 25, that is, by reason of, and in token of, our having been justified by his death. And therefore it is a day to "save life," and not "to destroy it." It is a day when whatever is necessary for any good purpose may be lawfully, and thankfully performed. Nay, it is the fittest of all days for works of mercy, charity, and piety. For so hath St. Paul instructed us, writing thus to the Corinthians, in reference to their collection of charitable contributions, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." 1 Cor. 16. 2.

"And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus." Thus often the little good we were able to attempt or do, moves in those who witness it, if they are averse to our success, only censure, jealousy, and scorn. And thus madly is the liberty, which Christ has given us in his sabbath, abused by them, who love Him not, to their greater indulgence in profaning it. May we on the contrary, be moved by his mercy, to hallow it, as He has here instructed us! More largely, as this day returns, may we stretch forth for good our withered hands! More freely may we commune with each other, on this day, what we may "do to Jesus," by help given to the poor who are in his stead, by food or raiment, by instruction or example, to the hungry, the naked, or the ignorant; of whom He has so plainly declared, that whatsoever we do unto one of the least of these his brethren, we do unto Him. See Matt. 25. 40.

Christ chooseth his twelve apostles.

12 And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

13 And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: ¹ and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles;

14 Simon, (whom he also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew,

15 Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alphæus, and Simon called Zelotes,

¹ Matt. 10. 1.

16 And Judas ² the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.

17 And he came down with them, and stood in the plain, and the company of his disciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judæa and Jerusalem, and from the sea coast of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases;

18 And they that were vexed with unclean spirits: and they were healed.

19 And the whole multitude sought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

² Jude 1.

§ 197. The Christian ministry an ordinance of Christ.

How often do the lovers of pleasure continue all night long awake in the enjoyment of mirth and good fellowship! How gladly do the lovers of money both rise up early, and late take rest, that they may increase their store, or reckon up their gains! How wise in their generation are the children of this world! How foolish in theirs the children of light! See chap. 16. 8. How few of us can remember any single instance, in which, for prayer or praise to God, we have gone out to any distance, put ourselves to any inconvenience, or devoted to our heavenly work even so much as a single hour of our night's ordinary rest!

This retirement of our Lord should teach us, in what spirit we might best take in hand any matter of weight and importance. He was about to choose on the morrow his twelve apostles; and therefore "he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." We cannot too watchfully or too patiently make known our requests unto God; more especially in case of those wants which concern our spiritual welfare. And on the other hand we may hence justly argue, what an important matter the choice of these apostles was considered by our Lord. It was indeed by their means that He designed to make known his Gospel to the world. They were his ministers ordained to preach, and to baptize; and also to appoint others after them, with powers of the like nature. And from them are descended, in this spiritual succession, the bishops, priests and deacons, who minister in his authorized Church. Unto them therefore should the flock of Christ look always with respect, as unto his ordinance, and that, of like efficacy with his written word, for their correction and instruction in righteousness.

They have indeed, as the apostle writes, "this treasure in earthen vessels." 2 Cor. 4. 7. They are men of the same frailty with those whom they instruct. And so were also the apostles themselves; among whom, after all our Lord's earnest prayer, was "Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor." And this might be allowed, on purpose to correct our tendency to lean upon the ministers of religion, for that support which is to be found only in Christ Himself. It might be on purpose to teach us, that as He only laid down his life for the flock, so He only is the true Shepherd; see John 10. 11; He the only true Priest, who made atonement once for all in behalf of all our sins. And if many notwithstanding take offence at the infirmities of their teachers, and question how such means as the ministry of sinful men, can help in the edification or salvation of their brethren; we must answer in the words of St. Paul, that "it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." 1 Cor. 1. 21. It is God's pleasure. It is Christ's ordinance. No further account need be given. For it is an ordinance of which there is most plain record in God's word. It is an ordinance, which can be proved to have continued in use, from the times of the apostles to the present. It is an ordinance, of which the proof lies not in those inward pretensions, which no man can be sure of in another, but in outward visible appointments, such as any man may ascertain to be facts. No further account need be given. No further account should be required.

Rather should all endeavour by a tractable and teachable disposition, to profit, to the uttermost of their power, by the ministry under which they are placed. As this great multitude is here said to have come to Christ "to hear him, and to be healed of their diseases," so should the people resort to Christ's ministers with like desire of cure and of instruction. To hear them, that is, to hear the law at their mouth, the new law of the new covenant, the Gospel of Christ, this is one part of the benefit to be derived from attendance on the ministers of religion. The other is, to be healed of our diseases; by the word they preach, by the sacraments they administer, to have the fever of our passions abated, the foul issue of falsehood and corrupt communication dried up, and health restored to our benumbed affections, and to our perverted will. For these blessings let us resort to the ministers of the Gospel as to an ordinance of Christ, appointed for these ends. Let us in all they do have respect unto Him whose ministers they are. And we might then more largely than we do now, partake of that healing which He can through them impart.

Christ preacheth blessings and woes.

20 And he lifted up his eyes on his disciples, and said, 'Blessed be ye poor: for your's is the kingdom of God.

21 Blessed are ye that hunger now: for ye shall be filled. Blessed are ye that weep now: for ye shall laugh.

22 Blessed are ye, when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake.

¹ Mat. 5. 3.

² Amos 6. 1.

³ Is. 65. 13.

23 Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets.

24 ² But woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation.

25 ³ Woe unto you that are full! for ye shall hunger. Woe unto you that laugh now! for ye shall mourn and weep.

26 Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets.

§ 198. The perils and advantages of poverty and of wealth.

The blessings here pronounced, and the precepts continued to the end of this chapter, are in many respects the same as those in the sermon on the mount, recorded by St. Matthew. But on comparison of the order of events, there is reason to believe that this discourse was delivered on a later occasion. And this might probably be the case with our Lord's most important exhortations, they would be repeated in nearly the same words, either to different hearers, or to the same hearers at different times. Let no one therefore object to hear frequently enforced the same words of doctrine and of duty. That which it is most important for us to know we are least of all apt to bear in mind, and most often therefore need to be reminded of. And there are perhaps none of our Lord's discourses more needful for our right instruction, and for our frequent meditation, than this which we find here repeated.

"Blessed be ye poor," or as it is in St. Matthew, "poor in spirit;" Matt. 5. 3, ye, ~~namely~~, who, if poor, are content; or who would be content, if called to poverty: ye who are content with such things as ye have, and would be, with whatever it might please God to call you to; ye who in lowliness of mind are sensible that there is no poverty so low as your deserts, no want, affliction, or distress more severe than is good for you to bear. "For your's is the kingdom of God." However depressed may be here your condition, however manifold here your afflictions, for you there are prepared, to such as you will be assigned, the riches of God's mercy in Christ, even pleasures at God's right hand for evermore. "Blessed are ye that hunger now," and especially that "hunger and thirst after righteousness." Matt. 5. 6. "For ye shall be filled." Your desires shall be here satisfied, your prayers heard with favourable regard; and hereafter ye shall receive to your full satisfaction such good things as pass man's understanding. Here, if ye, "weep now," and that in hearty repentance for your sins, there shall ye have cause to laugh, there rejoice for evermore. Here, if ye are lifted and reproached by men, rejected from their society, and your very name cast out as evil for the Son of man's sake, rejoice to know that so have they done before to the holiest of mankind; rejoice in the very day of your affliction; rejoice to hope that so much the more exalted, through the merits of Christ, shall be your reward from Him in heaven.

"But woe unto you that are rich," that is to say, woe is laid up for you hereafter; woe unto you that are rich, who enjoy riches without thankfulness, or spend them without anxiety to do good. "For ye have received your consolation," ye in your lifetime have received your good things, and having received them without profit, will be intrusted with no more of God's blessings. "Woe unto you that are full;" who fill yourselves only, or chiefly; fill yourselves, and neglect to fill your brethren. "For ye shall hunger;" ye shall want when they have abundance; ye shall starve when they are fed; and when they are comforted ye shall be tormented. "Woe unto you that laugh now," who live a life of vain amusement, of unhallowed mirth and merriment, who make light of things sacred or of serious people, who make mock at Scripture, or make light of sin. "For ye shall mourn and weep." So much the more for your sinful mirth you will have to sorrow everlastingly. And "woe unto you, when all men speak well of you;" when your behaviour is such as to conciliate the good will of the evil world. For so has it always been that false prophets of smooth things have been welcome, and true prophets of painful things have been hateful to mankind. And so must the united praise of all prove usually in him who prides himself upon it, a sinful compliance with the faults and follies of many.

Thus do these woes, and these blessings also, apply spiritually to all ranks and conditions of men. But especially to the rich, how fearfully do they set forth the perils of having ~~wealth~~ at their command! And especially to the poor, how graciously do they prove the manifold advantages of being poor! And how little of Christian faith can we have, if we can hear these words of our blessed Lord, and continue either to love riches if we have them, or to crave them if we have them not; to spend them selfishly, to waste them foolishly, to hoard them uselessly, or even to give them indiscriminately?

Christ preacheth on giving, loving, and doing good.

27 ¹ But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you,

28 Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you.

29 ² And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; ³ and him that taketh away thy cloke forbid not to take thy coat also.

30 Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again.

31 ⁴ And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.

32 ⁵ For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them.

33 And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same.

34 ⁶ And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again.

35 But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest: for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil.

36 Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful.

37 ⁷ Judge not, and ye shall not be judged: condemn not, and ye shall not be condemned: forgive, and ye shall be forgiven:

38 Give, and it shall be given unto you: good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again.

¹ Matt. 5. 44. ² Matt. 5. 39. ³ 1 Cor. 6. 7. ⁴ Matt. 7. 12. Tobit 4. 15. ⁵ Matt. 5. 46. ⁶ Matt. 5. 42. ⁷ Matt. 7. 1.

§ 199. How we should be kind on Christian principle.

Here we have rules of most plain application, in duties of most frequent occurrence; rules of gospel morality, which like the gospel doctrine of the cross, are to them that perish foolishness, but unto them which are saved the power of God and the wisdom of God. See 1 Cor. 1. 18—24. Have we then any enemies, or do we imagine that we have any, who hate, curse, or despitefully use us? Behold, they are not therefore the less entitled to all the offices of Christian charity. And the more we are by nature reluctant to forgive, the more we must endeavour, as we are here strictly enjoined, to love them, do good to them, bless them, and pray for them. Nay, though one should smite us on the cheek, or take away the very clothes we wear; it is the rule of our Christian duty, as the very best thing we could do in such a case, the best for our eternal welfare if, when it is consistent with our other obligations, out of entire love for God and man, we would offer also the other cheek, and submit to lose the coat also. For thus should we fulfil our Lord's command, and thus should we most nearly approach the pattern of our Lord Himself, on whose garments and vesture the like violence was allowed, and in whose sacred person was fulfilled the affecting description of the prophet: "I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair." Isaiah 50. 6.

And this is the right way to interpret also the directions which follow, on giving, and lending, and not receiving again; on forgiving, and not judging, and not condemning; on giving that good measure which we would wish to have measured into our own bosom. For in these directions there is no figure of speech by which their force may be in any degree evaded. Literally we are to love, and literally we are to give and forgive, and so shall we be in reality forgiven. Hard it must be confessed these rules appear to the frailty and the pride of man; hard, as we would that men should do to us, to do "to them likewise;" hard to be "merciful, as our Father also is merciful." Yet this is but one part of what is elsewhere fully expressed: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father, which is in heaven is perfect." Matt. 5. 48. And when we would aim at less than this, let us consider who it is that works in us, and gives us ability "both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Phil. 2. 13. And when we would count for foolishness such arduous rules as these, let us remember what is said, that "the foolishness of God is wiser than men; and the weakness of God is stronger than men." 1 Cor. 1. 25.

For how else indeed, as our Lord irresistibly concludes, how else would a Christian differ from the man of the world, the servant of God from the servant of mammon? "If ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye, for sinners also do even the same." Here we see the great difference between acting upon Christian principle, and upon our own private interest or feelings. And this should put us upon examining to which of the two we must ascribe what good we do ourselves, as giving, or as lending, as loving, or as praying for each other. Are not our exertions in this way too apt to be confined to those, who feel the like, or do the like, towards ourselves? Are they not what our own feelings or our own interest would have prompted us to make, though we had not heard these words of Christ our Lord? Let us never then mistake them for Christian charity. Let us never forget that after all such exertions as these, we are no nearer to fulfilling that love, which Christ would have us exercise, even to our worst enemies, for his sake. And as we are ourselves, in being Christians, instances of divine mercy, enemies by nature made friends by grace; let us pray, and endeavour, and practice, to become friends of them who fain would hate us; and by our bounty, kindness, courtesy, and prayers, to make them friends unto ourselves.

Christ finisheth his discourse with the parable of house building.

39 And he spake a parable unto them, ¹ Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?

40 The disciple is not above his master: but every one that is perfect shall be as his master.

41 ² And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceivest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

42 Either how canst thou say to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyself beholdest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, cast out first the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye.

43 For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit; neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit.

44 For every tree is known by his own fruit. For of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes.

¹ Matt. 15. 14.

² Matt. 10. 24.

|| Or, shall be perfected as his Master.

³ Matt. 7. 3.

⁴ Matt. 7. 16.

⁵ Matt. 7. 21.

§ 200. How we must build on the foundation of Jesus Christ.

To judge or to condemn our neighbours had been forbidden by our Lord in his preceding exhortation, under the penalty, that we should else be ourselves condemned. See ver. 37. By way of further caution, He here shews us that the practice is as though the blind were to set up for being guides to such as are in like affliction. It is presuming also to be above our blessed Master, for He came "not to judge the world, but to save the world." John 12. 47. And the more closely we follow his example, the more diligently we endeavour, not to judge, but to help each other forward, in the things that belong unto salvation, the nearer shall we attain to our Master's own perfection. To judge then, if we could, would be sinful. And because we cannot, it is folly to attempt it. It is proposing to pull the mote out of our brother's eye, when we have all the while a beam in our own. It is bringing forth evil fruit, at the very time that we pretend to be good trees. But "every tree is known by his own fruit;" and the heart of every one by that which is brought out of it. If then we speak evil of each other, if we censure, judge, condemn each other, as this evil speaking comes forth out of our hearts, we are so far from commending ourselves, that we do in fact prove our hearts to be evil.

Yet if we look into our ordinary conversation, how much of it shall we commonly find to be made up of the very topics which are here forbidden! How much of what the mouth speaketh; consists in that leading of the blind, that being above our Master, that pulling out the mote that is in our brother's eye, which are here shewn to be both sin and folly! Yet how else, it will be said, can we converse at all? How discourse at all of our neighbours, if we may never discuss their faults? Many times, no doubt, it will be found difficult. Many times it will require us to be silent; to suppress the ready remark of welcome censure, nay to stifle in the birth the very thought of condemnation. But what then is Christian charity? Is it not that which "thinketh no evil?" 1 Cor. 13. 5. And what is Christian obedience? Is it to say, Lord, Lord; or to do the thing which our Lord hath said? And has He not here taught us how "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh;" and how all judgment of each other, whether expressed by the mouth or conceived by the heart, is absurd, in beings who need to be judged themselves, and is sinful also, most sinful, in the sight of Him, who shall hereafter judge us all?

Behold how necessary unto salvation is the practice of a holy life! Even as a firm foundation unto the safety of a house. Behold how vain are all excuses of disobedience, all nice distinctions of false doctrine, that would exempt a man from doing what Christ has said! Even as a house built without foundation, they shall be swept away in that fearful hour, when the storm of fiery indignation shall devour the adversaries of Christ, those who sin wilfully after they have received the knowledge of the truth. See Heb. 10. 26, 27. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3. 11. But how can we be counted to lay that foundation, if we make light of Christ's own words, disobey his commands, and excuse ourselves by any means whatever, in hearing his sayings without doing them? How can we be counted to dig deep, and to build our lives upon that holy rock; if we conform not the practice of each hour, the words of our lips, and the very thoughts of our hearts, to the rules which He has here laid down?

God forbid that we should build without foundation, or lay other foundation than Jesus Christ! God forbid that we should build on Him any other than a holy life! God forbid that blind as we are, we should attempt to lead the blind, set up in judging to be above our Master, or pull out the mote from our brother's eye, when we behold not the beam that is in our own!

45 A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good; and an evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth speaketh.

46 ³ And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

47 Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like:

48 He is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently upon that house, and could not shake it: for it was founded upon a rock.

49 But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an house upon the earth; against which the stream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell; and the ruin of that house was great.

Christ healeth the Centurion's servant.

1 Now when he had ended all his sayings in the audience of the people ¹ he entered into Capernaum.

2 And a certain centurion's servant, who was dear unto him, was sick, and ready to die.

3 And when he heard of Jesus, he sent unto him the elders of the Jews, beseeching him that he would come and heal his servant.

4 And when they came to Jesus, they besought him instantly, saying, That he was worthy for whom he should do this:

5 For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a synagogue.

6 Then Jesus went with them. And when he was now not far from the house, the centurion sent friends to him, saying unto him, Lord, trouble not thyself:

for I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof:

7 Wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee: but say in a word, and my servant shall be healed.

8 For I also am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it.

9 When Jesus heard these things, he marvelled at him, and turned him about, and said unto the people that followed him, I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel.

10 And they that were sent, returning to the house, found the servant whole that had been sick.

¹ Matt. 8. 5.

§ 201. That unworthiness is no reason for not applying to our Lord.

It was when "he had ended all his sayings," that Christ entered into Capernaum, and wrought the cure of the centurion's servant. His works served to confirm his words. Let us look to it, that our practice be according to our profession; that our hands be as ready to help each other, as our tongues to counsel or reprove. The centurion's servant "was dear unto him." Much more should Christian servants be dear to Christian masters. How know they, either of them, how soon they may be called to another state of being? And how know they which shall then be most exalted? Let each therefore here treat the other with the kindness of Christian brotherhood, delighting both in sickness and in health, to give, as well as to receive, attention and help.

On comparing with this passage the account of the same miracle in St. Matthew, 8. 5, you should observe, that the centurion is there said to have come to Jesus; though here it is plain, that at first at least, he did not go himself, but sent friends with his message in his stead. These friends, being the elders of the Jews, recommended him to our Lord by the mention of his good works, "saying that he was worthy for whom he should do this." But the centurion felt very differently of himself, and sent again, as Christ drew near unto his house, to say, "I am not worthy that thou shouldst enter under my roof; wherefore neither thought I myself worthy to come unto thee." And afterwards, as appears probable from St. Matthew, his anxiety for his servant overcame this reluctance, so that he went and made the same profession for himself. Or it may be, that his sending by his friends, is all that is there meant by his coming unto Christ. For so are the sons of Zedee represented, by St. Mark, to have asked for those places of distinction, which St. Matthew says their mother asked in their behalf. See Matt. 20. 20. Mark 10. 35. And so are we ourselves enabled, through our one great Friend, to do that which we ourselves do not, even to come unto the Father, to know the Father, and to see the Father; see John 14. 6, 7; even "to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus." Heb. 10. 19.

Let us observe then, if we would partake in the success of the centurion, let us observe with what feelings he expressed himself to our Lord. Such was his earnest faith, that he was persuaded Christ was able to heal at a distance; and he resolved to apply to Him, though unworthy of his presence. This shews that he thought Him willing as well as able to heal. And thus ought we to think of our Redeemer, when we become sensible of how deeply we need his help. A conviction that we are unworthy to apply to Him should not hinder us from applying, should not hinder our full assurance, that, if we apply faithfully, He will heal plentifully. And this assurance of God's mercy, made manifest in the Gospel of Christ, we ought to apply to all occasions of drawing nigh to Him, whether in prayer, or reading of his word, hearing it preached by his ministers, or receiving his sacraments at their hands. In none of these cases are we worthy to come unto Almighty God. In none need our unworthiness prevent us, if only we come aware of it, and relying on no worth of ours, but on the merits of our Saviour Christ.

And for this end we may do well to consider our own lives, our lips, our hearts; comparing our present actual proficiency in the graces of the Gospel, with what we are ourselves aware it might have been, with what we are so deeply bound that it should have been. We shall then, through God's blessing on our reflections, see how thoroughly we are at the best unworthy of his love, how surely it is for no worthiness of ours, He loves us, but only for the worthiness of his Son our Lord. Putting therefore our confidence in his merits, we shall have a sure ground of trust whereon to stand, a Friend by whom to send our prayers to God, to ask of Him his heavenly help, to go unto Him in his ordinances, and to hope that He will come and dwell with us. The more we are unworthy, or at least the more we feel ourselves to be so, we shall be the more persuaded that through Christ alone we have access to the Father, and that through Him we may have not access only, but also boldness to approach.

Christ raiseth the widow's son, answereth John's messengers.

11 And it came to pass the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his disciples went with him, and much people.

12 Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow: and much people of the city was with her.

13 And when the Lord saw her, he had compassion on her, and said unto her, Weep not.

14 And he came and touched the || bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise.

15 And he that was dead sat up, and began to speak. And he delivered him to his mother.

16 And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath visited his people.

17 And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judæa, and throughout all the region round about.

|| Or, coffin.

18 ¹ And the disciples of John shewed him of all these things.

19 And John calling unto him two of his disciples sent them to Jesus, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

20 When the men were come unto him, they said, John Baptist hath sent us unto thee, saying, Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?

21 And in the same hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil spirits; and unto many that were blind he gave sight.

22 Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached.

23 And blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me.

¹ Matt. 11. 2.

§ 202. The duty and the risk of inquiry into divine things.

The miracles of our Lord often furnish instances of that kind concern for the sufferings of mankind, which He bids us practise each towards his neighbour. Thus it is recorded of the young man, whom they were carrying out dead from the city of Nain, that he was the only son, or as the original may rather mean, a son that was the only child of his mother; "and she was a widow." There must have been many opportunities of raising the dead to life; and yet none appeared to our compassionate Saviour so suitable as this instance of extreme affliction, no person so fitting to be comforted, as this widow, now bereft of her only child. Let us look out then, in the good we have to do, for those cases of distress which we are most bound to relieve. Let us inquire, with anxiety to learn, where the widow and the fatherless are to be found, where the hungry and the naked are to be met with, where the helpless and the ignorant abound; that we may hasten to hold forth to them our Christian sympathy, and our Christian help.

"And he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise." Happy was the son thus restored to the affection of his widowed mother! Happy was the mother who thus recovered from the dead her only child! But how much more happy is that man, who, whether young or old, is stayed by God's grace in his career of sin; who, as his passions are carrying him to the grave of endless perdition, is enabled to hear the voice that saith unto every sinful child of Adam, "Young man, I say unto thee, Arise!" "And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God." Here we see no vain superstition, but a salutary reverence; such fear as ends in love. Strange things and awful we each day behold, in all that goes on around us. Strange things and awful we ought to see, through faith, in the great work of God's grace, going on within our hearts. If we fear, let our fear lead us to the glorifying of God. Let us fear, so as to sin no more. Let us fear, so as not to love the less. Let us fear, so as to spread abroad as widely as we can, our conviction of God's goodness, and of our Saviour's love.

When the rumour of all these miracles came to the ears of John the Baptist, he sent two of his disciples unto Jesus to inquire, "Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?" To this inquiry our Lord replied by curing "many of their infirmities." And He bade the messengers return with a report of the things which they had seen. He bears not witness of Himself, see John 5. 31—37, but the Father from heaven bears witness to the Son. He bears not witness to Himself as the Son of man; but as the Son of God He sets aside the course of nature, heals the sick, gives sight unto the blind, and raises the dead to life. Let each such miracle we hear or read of, remind us that Jesus was "He that should come," convince us that He is our Saviour, his the only Name given under heaven whereby we may have health and salvation.

From the message sent by John, let us learn the duty of inquiring into the truth. From the answer of our Lord, let us learn the peril of inquiry, without honest intention to believe what we may learn. "Blessed is he, whosoever shall not be offended in me." There is risk then that we may be offended in Christ. There is risk that we may stumble, may fall, may perish everlastingly. The same rock, on which the salvation of the faithful is established, is a rock of offence to the unbelieving. These are they, who, when they inquire, are bent against receiving the truth; who have beforehand determined how much they will receive, and how much not. Never may we so inquire without meaning to obey! Never may we so read, without desire to mark, learn, and inwardly digest! Never may we be offended in Christ; but through Him rather rise when fallen, walk uprightly in this present life, and in the end be raised from death to glory!

Christ speaketh to the people concerning John the Baptist

24 And when the messengers of John were departed, he began to speak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderness for to see? A reed shaken with the wind?

25 But what went ye out for to see? A man clothed in soft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeously apparelled, and live delicately, are in kings' courts.

26 But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? Yea, I say unto you, and much more than a prophet.

27 This is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.

28 For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist: but he that is least in the kingdom of God is greater than he.

29 And all the people that heard him, and the

|| Or, frustrated.

† Or, within themselves.

1 Matt. 11. 16.

publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John.

30 But the Pharisees and lawyers || rejected the counsel of God † against themselves, being not baptized of him.

31 And the Lord said, 'Whereunto then shall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like?

32 They are like unto children sitting in the marketplace, and calling one to another, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept.

33 For John the Baptist came neither eating bread nor drinking wine; and ye say, He hath a devil.

34 The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye say, Behold a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!

35 But wisdom is justified of all her children.

§ 203. That we must not, for our own credit, argue perversely.

Our Lord discourses in this passage on the character of John, and on the waywardness of the Jews in objecting both to Himself and to the Baptist. Of John He first asks the people, "What went ye out into the wilderness for to see?" He then mentions several things, most opposite to what John really was, that his character might by these means be the better understood. If a reed shaken with the wind is continually wavering, John, we must understand, was firm, constant to the one great object of his coming, the bearing witness unto Christ. If soft raiment and gorgeous apparel are the signs of self-indulgence, and of worldly greatness, John, we learn by the contrast, denied himself, laboured greatly, and was of low condition in the world. And yet he was a prophet, yea and more than a prophet; he was the messenger to prepare the way of Christ. And this made him the very greatest of all earthly prophets; or so great, that no one was greater, for no one more largely helped to shew forth to mankind that Jesus was indeed the Christ.

The people who heard him, and the publicans who were baptized with his baptism, are here said to have justified God. By their conversion they proved the wisdom of this measure in the divine counsels. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him. They rejected, to their own loss, this counsel of God in their behalf. They refused the divine ordinance. They would not profit by the means offered for their conversion unto Christ. This passage, with many others in the Scripture, shews that men have it in some sense in their own choice, either to justify God's counsel, or to reject it against themselves. Never then be you perplexed by the consideration of God's almighty power, so as to suppose it inconsistent with some power also in man. And yet never, on the other hand, so reckon on your own strength, as to suppose you can do any thing, without God's permission, or any thing good without the help of his grace. The power to choose, which each man has, is itself the gift of God; and its exercise is therefore no disparagement to the sovereignty of Him who gave it. He sets before us good and evil. He enables us to will. He commands, He moves, He helps us to choose the better part. But, if we choose the worse, the fault is ours; and ours is the loss for ever.

Nothing could more clearly prove this perversity of will in the Jews, than their pleading such different objections, in excuse for their not believing either the Baptist or our Lord. The one lived a life of abstinence. Him they accused of having a devil; meaning that his behaviour, so unlike that of the world, was the result of possession by an evil spirit. Surely then when Jesus came, not practising the like abstinence, they will find no fault with Him for eating and drinking. Nay, here on the contrary they object, "Behold a gluttonous man, and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners!" This was acting more like children that were at play, than like men that were in earnest. This was answering as if the object were to justify themselves, and not to save their souls alive. Never let us answer thus perversely. Never let us in argument, or in common conversation, turn aside from the straight path of honesty and truth; never twist the tenour of what we have to say, so as to suit our own purpose for a time. Least of all let us thus talk for victory, when our talk is on things pertaining to eternal life. Rather let us herein feel, how much more than our present credit we have at stake. Our knowledge of God is concerned; and in our knowledge our right faith: and in our faith our right practice. And on ours depends in some degree the Christian progress of all we are connected with. And on ours and theirs together, is allowed, under God's providence, to depend his glory in the justifying of his Gospel to the world; for "wisdom is justified of all her children."

Christ justifieth a woman which had been a sinner.

36 ¹ And one of the Pharisees desired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Pharisee's house, and sat down to meat.

37 And, behold, a woman in the city, which was a sinner, when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house, brought an alabaster box of ointment,

38 And stood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to wash his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kissed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment.

39 Now when the Pharisee which had hidden him saw it, he spake within himself, saying, This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him: for she is a sinner.

40 And Jesus answering said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on.

41 There was a certain creditor which had two debtors: the one owed five hundred \parallel pence, and the other fifty.

42 And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore, which of them will love him most?

43 Simon answered and said, I suppose that he, to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged.

44 And he turned to the woman, and said unto Simon, Seest thou this woman? I entered into thine house, thou gavest me no water for my feet: but she hath washed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head.

45 Thou gavest me no kiss: but this woman since the time I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet.

46 My head with oil thou didst not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

47 Wherefore I say unto thee, Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little.

48 And he said unto her, Thy sins are forgiven.

49 And they that sat at meat with him began to say within themselves, Who is this that forgiveth sins also?

50 And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace.

¹ Mark 14. 3.

\parallel See Matt. 18. 28.

§ 204. Forgiveness of sins should move us through love to obey.

In this history, and in the parable of these debtors, we see set forth the whole scheme of God's mercy, as revealed to mankind through Christ. It is this: that He freely forgives sinners, and that they, thus freely forgiven, therefore love Him much. The woman, it is expressly said, was a sinner. And as all have sinned, this must mean, in her case, a state of sin more grievous than ordinary. It was "when she knew that Jesus sat at meat in the Pharisee's house." She had knowledge then of who Jesus was, and had faith, it seems, that He would help her in her lost estate. She "stood at his feet behind him weeping." She experienced then that godly sorrow for her sins, which worketh repentance unto salvation. And in the washing and anointing of his feet, she proved a willingness to undertake in his service any office however menial, any cost however large or inconvenient. And therefore our Lord remarks to the Pharisee, that her sins were forgiven. And at the same time by way of explaining how it came to pass that "she loved much," He sets forth a parable, which should for ever silence in our hearts all murmuring at God's goodness, unto those whom we deem to be greater sinners than ourselves. Are not our own sins such debts to Almighty God as we can by no means pay? Is not God as that creditor who frankly forgave his debtors? And is not this the very reason why we ought to love God much? And if we were to believe this of Him heartily, should we not thus love him entirely? How then shall we doubt of others that they love thus too? How doubt, if they have had more forgiven, that they love the more? And of whom can we know so much sin as of ourselves? Of whom can we be so sure as of ourselves, that the debt due to God is fearfully large? How gladly, if persuaded of our own forgiveness, should we think of the like mercy being extended to our brethren! How heartily, in proportion as we have been forgiven, should we love, both God who forgave us, and for his sake all others whom we could hope He would forgive!

In this woman we have an example of what such love would lead to, the humbling of ourselves to each other, the labouring and being spent in doing good. But can we follow her example, it may be asked, now that our Lord is no longer upon earth; when we can no more approach his sacred person, anoint Him with precious ointment, or kiss his feet with devout affection? Let us call to mind, if we have the heart inclined, if we have the will to do these things, He has Himself instructed us in the way. It is to consider Christ as present to our faith, in every fellow creature who needs our help. Not only when we relieve the poor with alms, but when we instruct the ignorant with advice: not only when we visit the sick and sorrowful, but when we soothe the angry or the proud: when by a soft answer we turn away wrath, see Prov. 15. 1; or by denial of our own inclinations indulge the wish of those we live with: this is to love Him much. And not only when we thus kindly treat each other, but when we think devoutly of our Lord Himself. If, when we read his word, our hearts burn within us at the tidings of redemption: if, when we pray, we earnestly desire to be conformed to his image; if, when we praise, we are duly thankful for all that He has done for us; if, when we think, we devise ever how to do Him service, to act, and speak, and suffer, and think also, as He would have us: this is to offer kisses and ointment to our Lord, this is to love Him much!

Christ teacheth the parable of the sower.

1 And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village, preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him,

2 And certain women, which had been healed of evil spirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, ¹out of whom went seven devils,

3 And Joanna the wife of Chuza Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto him of their substance.

4 ² And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he spake by a parable:

5 A sower went out to sow his seed: and as he sowed, some fell by the way side; and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it.

6 And some fell upon a rock; and as soon as it was sprung up, it withered away, because it lacked moisture.

7 And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprang up with it and choked it.

8 And other fell on good ground and sprang up, and bare fruit an hundredfold. And when he had said these things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

¹ Mark 16. 9.

² Matt 13. 2.

9 And his disciples asked him, saying, What might this parable be?

10 And he said, Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand.

11 ³ Now the parable is this: The seed is the word of God.

12 Those by the way side are ⁴they that hear; then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved.

13 They on the rock are they, which, when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.

14 And that which fell among thorns are they, which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares and riches and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection.

15 But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

³ Matt. 13. 18.

§ 205. That it is our own fault if we are not converted by the Gospel.

The things which our Lord preached are here called "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God." Let us consider then, are they or are they not, a subject of rejoicing to ourselves? Are we glad, or are we sorry, to think, that the Gospel is surely true? Do we look mostly with fear, or with hope, to the fulfilment of the things, which are therein set forth? The tidings are the same, the tidings are glad, whether we receive them joyfully, or not. If we receive them not joyfully, the fault must lie within ourselves. The seed is in all cases the same; and its failure or success depends on the difference in the condition of the ground.

Does then the heavenly seed, do the word and ordinances of God, bring forth in us their proper fruit, a cheerful, thoughtful, hopeful frame of mind; a delight in things divine; and the practice of ministering of our substance unto Christ, by helping those who are in need? If not, let us examine ourselves, how is it the seed has failed? Let us consider, which of the causes here mentioned is hindering its fruitfulness? Either we are beguiled by the evil spirit, taking away the word out of our hearts. Or else we have no root; our resolutions have no depth or strength; they are not formed in dependence upon God; and therefore in time of temptation we fall away. Or else, thirdly, we suffer our better impressions to be put out of our remembrance, by the world and its vanities, by the "cares and riches and pleasures of this life." Into some such condition as this we are either likely to fall, or are actually fallen, if the good seed bring not forth in us good fruit; if the Gospel of Christ work not in us "patience," "in well doing," Rom. 2. 7, together with "joy and peace in believing." Rom. 15. 13.

Nor let us be deceived into too favourable an opinion of ourselves, by any such signs of gospel grace as we may be able to discern in our hearts. For here we see that the seed, which fails at last, springs up often at first with promise of success. And besides those who are utterly destitute of all grace, and those who strive to be conformed to the image of their Saviour Christ, there are many who are halting "between two opinions," 1 Kings 18. 21, serving one while God and at another time, mammon; wavering between resolution to obey, and desire to transgress, not absolutely dead in trespasses and sins, and yet bringing forth no fruit to perfection. In this parable we learn the ordinary end of faith thus feeble, of love thus faint. The seed that lacked moisture withered away. That with which thorns at the same time sprang up, was choked by their company.

Let us note then the signs here given of good ground; let us study for our improvement the workings of an honest and good heart; to hear "the word," and "keep it," and "bring forth fruit with patience." Even to hear it, if we seek to hear it, is a grace. But further, we must keep it, that is, observe and obey it. And this is the same thing with bearing fruit, for it is the same thing with holiness of life. And lastly, we must bring forth this fruit with patience; that is with perseverance. We must not repine under the most severe affliction, we must not fail to seek continually for divine help, under the most tedious delay of the gifts we desire. However vexations we may find the conversation of the wicked, however weary may be the days of our pilgrimage, however anxious may be our desire to depart and to be with Christ; we must wait for God's good time, and continue in his good work, with zeal ever more vigorous, love ever more large, and hope ever more firm and steadfast.

Christ teacheth by parables; rebuketh the wind.

16 'No man, when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a vessel, or putteth it under a bed; but setteth it on a candlestick, that they which enter in may see the light.

17 'For nothing is secret, that shall not be made manifest; neither any thing hid, that shall not be known and come abroad.

18 Take heed therefore how ye hear: 'for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.

19 'Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the press.

20 And it was told him by certain which said, Thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to see thee.

21 And he answered and said unto them, My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it.

22 'Now it came to pass on a certain day, that he went into a ship with his disciples; and he said unto them, Let us go over unto the other side of the lake. And they launched forth.

23 But as they sailed he fell asleep: and there came down a storm of wind on the lake; and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy.

24 And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, Master, master, we perish. Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm.

25 And he said unto them, Where is your faith? And they being afraid wondered, saying one to another, What manner of man is this! for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him.

¹ Matt. 5. 15.

² Matt. 10. 26.

³ Matt. 13. 12.

|| Or, thinketh that he hath.

⁴ Matt. 12. 46.

⁵ Matt. 8. 23.

§ 206. The spiritual consideration of natural objects.

In the Gospel we find objects of most familiar occurrence made helpful to our understanding things spiritual. From the lighting of a candle and the setting it on a candlestick, our Lord could reason, and He would have us also reflect, on the certainty that in like manner all our doings shall be brought to light. Again, from the well known fact that the wealthy make the largest gains, whilst the poor, through lack of means, lose often what little means they have, He leads our minds to the corresponding rule of heavenly treasure, to our increase in grace and godliness, which may be greater, if we strive, or if not, will be less, in proportion to the measure we have already attained. Again, from the mention of his mother and his brethren, and their happening to desire to see Him, He takes occasion, to assure his disciples, for their comfort, in all ages of the world, that the nearest degrees of relationship to Himself are to "hear the word of God, and do it."

It will be our wisdom if from any such passages as these we learn to derive constant edification from every thing that takes place around us. Not a candle should be lighted, without our thinking of the light to which our own most secret works must surely be one day brought. Not a fortune should be made within our hearing of it, and we not think of laying up treasures in heaven, of studying in our heavenly course, like the children of this world in theirs, to lose nothing we once have gained, and to press forward to what we yet fall short of. Not a parent, or brother, or child, or friend, should delight our hearts with their affection, and we not turn often from these earthly ties, to think rather of our Father which is in heaven, of our Friend, who for us has laid down his life, and who now lives to make intercession for us. And so might we also in other things often reflect, from what we see, to what we believe on the testimony of God. Do we watch with interest the growth of the seed we have sown? Let it remind us of God's grace sown in our hearts. Do we enjoy the warmth of the midday sun, or admire the stars which give light unto the night? Let us call to mind the approaching of a time, when "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever." Daniel 12. 3.

Or are they the wonders of the deep which engage our attention? Is it the great sea, what we have heard of it, or beheld, that strikes us as most marvellous and strange? Here too, if we have God's word in our memories, if we have the love of Christ in our hearts, we shall turn from the reflection on the winds and waves, to the thought of Him who created them, and who can in a moment make them calm. "What manner of man is this?" the disciples justly ask; for what mere man will the storm obey? "Where is your faith?" our Lord had first no less justly inquired; for how, if they believed, could they have so greatly feared? Let us then in those storms which happen within ourselves, put our trust, without alarm, in our blessed Lord. When most we need, and ask his aid, He may seem, it is true, often to be as it were asleep. We ask, and for a time receive not. We seek, and find not. We knock, and it is not opened unto us. But is this because He cannot, will not, help? Nay; it is that we may learn to pray more fervently, and at the same time to wait more patiently; till Christ see fit to speak peace unto our souls. Oh, how great will be, not our fear and wonder, but our thankfulness and joy, when we attain to the full possession of that peace, which this world cannot give! There is neither pride, nor anger; no vexation, fretfulness, or discontent; no anxious thought beforehand, no disappointment afterwards; no sorrow; no strife; no pain.

God give us that calm within, which abides through all storms without! God give us that faith, which leaves no doubt; that love, which knows no fear! that love by which faith works! See Gal. 5. 6, that faith, which is made perfect by love! See James 2. 22.

Christ casteth out Legion.

26 ¹ And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over against Galilee.

27 And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city a certain man, which had devils long time, and wore no clothes, neither abode in any house, but in the tombs.

28 When he saw Jesus, he cried out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God most high? I beseech thee, torment me not.

29 (For he had commanded the unclean spirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderness.)

30 And Jesus asked him, saying, What is thy name? And he said, Legion: because many devils were entered into him.

31 And they besought him that he would not command them to go out into the deep.

32 And there was there an herd of many swine feeding on the mountain: and they besought him that he would suffer them to enter into them. And he suffered them.

33 Then went the devils out of the man, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the lake, and were choked.

34 When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the country.

35 Then they went out to see what was done; and came to Jesus, and found the man, out of whom the devils were departed, sitting at the feet of Jesus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid.

36 They also which saw it told them by what means he that was possessed of the devils was healed.

37 Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about besought him to depart from them; for they were taken with great fear: and he went up into the ship, and returned back again.

38 Now the man out of whom the devils were departed besought him that he might be with him: but Jesus sent him away, saying,

39 Return to thine own house, and shew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and published throughout the whole city how great things Jesus had done unto him.

40 And it came to pass, that, when Jesus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

Ill must that man fare in his spiritual course, who forgets that he has to struggle against Legions such as here we read of. Many times, when he least expects, he will find himself led astray into the neglect of God's commands, or violently running down some steep descent of pleasurable sin. And yet few of us probably think as often as we ought, and none of us as seriously, as watchfully, of the evil influence of these wicked spirits, and of the true method of resisting their attempts. Let us look then to God's word for right notions of a matter, in which we can have no other means of information. There we learn that there is an evil angel, called Satan, and others his companions or servants, who have lost their first estate, see Jude 6, and who have access, in some manner we know not, to our hearts; stirring up all our worst thoughts, and prevent, to the uttermost in their power, all that in any sense, or by any means, are good. We see them not; and yet they are near to hurt. We hear them not; and yet they make us to understand whatever wickedness they desire to suggest. We touch them not; nor can they touch us; and yet we can be made as sensible, as though they could, that something unclean has come nigh to us; that foul thoughts of sin, hard thoughts of God, proud thoughts of ourselves, or unkind thoughts of our brethren, have been put into our hearts; we know not how, or when, or where; only we know certainly that they are "of the devil." John 3. 8.

When such is our condition, rather than say to Christ, "Torment me not," let us say, Lord, torment me. If by any manner of affliction it shall please God to visit us, and to bring us to our right minds; let us therein heartily rejoice. Let us desire and pray, to whatever suffering we may be put, that the evil spirits may be cast out. They no doubt all the while beseech Him that He will not command them to go out into the deep; that is, out of us, into the abyss of hell. And like to theirs would be our requests, if we still long to be indulged in sin, still grudge to suffer any thing, which makes us likely to be more free from their controul. Like to theirs was the supplication also of the Gadarenes, who besought Christ, in their great fear, that He would "depart from them."

How different was the temper of the people to whom He thereupon returned! How different to wait for Christ, and to receive Him gladly, from beseeching Him, by any coldness of speech or thought, by any preference of sinful pleasure to repentant tears, beseeching Christ to depart from us! To say, how I should like to transgress, if I safely might! Which of the two is this? To think that we may "continue in sin, that grace may abound;" Rom. 6. 1; which is this? To obey in fear; to give grudgingly; to go as near to falsehood, covetousness, or intemperance, as we dare; which are these? God forbid that we should choose the evil! God forbid that we should hesitate one moment to choose the good! God give us grace to choose aright, and to abide by our choice with joy for ever!

Christ healeth one woman, another he raiseth from the dead.

41 And, behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the synagogue: and he fell down at Jesus' feet, and besought him that he would come into his house:

42 For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and she lay dying. But as he went the people thronged him.

43 And a woman having an issue of blood twelve years, which had spent all her living upon physicians, neither could be healed of any,

44 Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her issue of blood stanch'd.

45 And Jesus said, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter and they that were with him said, Master, the multitude throng thee and press thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

46 And Jesus said, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.

47 And when the woman saw that she was not hid, she came trembling, and falling down before him, she declared unto him before all the people for what cause she had touched him, and how she was healed immediately.

48 And he said unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.

49 While he yet spake, there cometh one from the ruler of the synagogue's house, saying to him, Thy daughter is dead: trouble not the Master.

50 But when Jesus heard it, he answered him, saying, Fear not: believe only, and she shall be made whole.

51 And when he came into the house, he suffered no man to go in save Peter, and James, and John, and the father and the mother of the maiden.

52 And all wept, and bewailed her: but he said, Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth.

53 And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead.

54 And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, saying, Maid, arise.

55 And her spirit came again, and she arose straightway: and he commanded to give her meat.

56 And her parents were astonished: but he charged them that they should tell no man what was done.

¹ Matt. 9. 18.

§ 208. That lively faith is helpful to right knowledge.

In these two miracles, we may observe the influence of faith on two different characters. Jairus "fell down at Jesus' feet:" The woman, that had an issue, "came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment." This in her was humility. Yet in the ruler there was no lack of humility; only in him faith wrought her the eagerness of prayer. Would we but put the best construction on what we see in the conduct of our brethren, we should, more often than we usually do, think well of them in what we see not. We should more often count for zeal, what we might else reckon hastiness or presumption; and for humility, what we might else take for ignorance, for meanness, or for consciousness of wrong.

This woman, besides her reluctance to make her condition public, seems to have thought that she might obtain her cure, without even Christ Himself knowing of it. She was healed notwithstanding this mistake. Hence we learn that faith, though conceived in error, if it be conceived heartily, if it work fruitfully, is nevertheless effectual to the saving of the faithful. It is our duty to acquire knowledge if we can. But if we have been shut out from it, we are not therefore shut out from God's mercy, for we are not therefore shut out from faith in Christ. How many, alas! throng and press Him, for one who thus touches Him in sincerity of belief! How many know the word of his Gospel, frequent the assembly of his servants, nay, even promote by their gifts and influence the spreading abroad of Christianity in the world; for one, who has such faith as makes him whole; who out of the abundance of iniquity, from which he has been delivered, is able to "go in peace!"

No mistake can be more dangerous, than to think that knowledge is the sure road to faith. Rather, we must first believe, ere we can truly know. So did both this woman, and Jairus. For Jairus, though he supposed that Christ could heal the sick, knew not that He could also raise from the dead. And what does our Lord require, ere He would make manifest by this act his divine power? "Fear not, believe only." Would we then know Christ as He is? Would we know all his power and wisdom, all his love for us, and pains that we might be saved? Let us not fear, but only believe. Let us not fear but that He both can and will be gracious. Let us believe all that He has said in his word: both believe what we can now know, and be desirous to believe what we may henceforth learn. Then, if it be for the best, He will add to our faith knowledge. Or if in this life such knowledge be too wonderful for us, we shall be sure to enjoy it in the next.

This is to be the great object of our hope, the life to come. And this one chief thing we must believe of our Lord, that He is able to raise us from the dead. This it is that fools make mock of; and the worldly wise also treat it often with contempt. Like the mourners in the history of this miracle, they laugh to scorn all those who act upon the notion that the dead are not dead, but only sleep. How well is their future confusion of face thus described in one of the books of the Apocrypha! "They, repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit, shall say within themselves, This was he whom we had sometimes in derision, and a proverb of reproach: we fools accounted his life madness, and his end to be without honour: how is he numbered among the children of God, and his lot is among the saints!" (Wisdom of Solomon 5. 3, 4, 5.)

Christ sendeth out his twelve disciples.

1 Then ¹ he called his twelve disciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diseases.

2 And he sent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the sick.

3 And he said unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither staves, nor scrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece.

4 And whatsoever house ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart.

5 And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them.

6 And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the gospel, and healing every where.

7 ² Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, because that it was said of some, that John was risen from the dead;

8 And of some, that Elias had appeared; and of others, that one of the old prophets was risen again.

9 And Herod said, John have I beheaded: but who is this of whom I hear such things? And he desired to see him.

¹ Matt. 10. 1.

² Matt. 14. 1.

§ 209. The perplexity of the sinful hearer.

The twelve were sent forth to preach the kingdom of God, and empowered to confirm their preaching by the working of signs, and wonders. They were to set out on the assurance of providential support; such as in the ordinary course of God's dealings, no man has any reason to expect. In our journey through life, we may not venture to take neither scrip nor bread nor money. We may not neglect provision of those means which are necessary for our subsistence. Rather it is the rule of our Christian behaviour that we should be "not slothful in business." Rom. 12. 11. Rather it is the rule of our support under the Gospel, "that if any would not work, neither should he eat." 2 Thess. 3. 10. But whilst we provide for our wants, by industry in our several callings, we should learn from the directions here laid down, to limit them, by humility, temperance, and soberness. We should learn to reckon, whilst we work industriously for ourselves, that it is only by God's blessing that our work can prosper; that in the natural harvest, as well as in the spiritual, it is "God that giveth the increase." 1 Cor. 3. 7.

The apostles were to "take nothing" for their journey. Thus, though it would ill become us in our journeyings to make no provision for the way, on the presumption of being miraculously supplied; it would be well, as we travel, often to call to mind how it is God's wisdom and his bounty that furnish us, abroad, as well as at home, whatever distance we have to go, whatever land to visit, with food convenient for us. The apostles were to abide, at each place they visited, in the first house they entered into. And this probably was in order to their being found more readily by those who came either to learn or gainsay. Hence we also may be instructed, whatever be our employment, to avoid all needless change of situation; not to dwell on the disadvantages of where we are, and thanklessly overlook our present comforts; but to abide in the station to which it has pleased God to call us, patient in the discharge of whatever duties He has assigned. In the apostles, who could heal as well as preach, to shake off the dust from their feet was a fit testimony and rebuke against unbelievers. For us, if our Christian counsel is ill received, it is enough to bear faithful witness to the truth, and earnestly to warn the gainsayers of their peril in neglecting the salvation of their souls.

This preaching of the apostles seems to have been one of the chief means by which the fame of Jesus reached Herod. Upon hearing of his mighty works, and the different reports of his being John or Elias, or some other of the old prophets, he is both perplexed, and also desirous to see Him. This is a common case with those who hear the Gospel faithfully preached; on the one hand an unprofitable curiosity, on the other a painful perplexity. They desire to see, they desire to hear, they desire to know; but they do not desire to believe or to obey. They desire, as did Herod; who sent not for Jesus, as far as we know, or ever saw Him at all, till the time when he had Him stand before his judgment seat, there mocked and set at nought by himself and his men of war. See Luke 23. 11. And when they hear and understand, how great is their perplexity! "John have I beheaded," may not be in any sense the accusation of their conscience. But have they not often cause to own within themselves, Christ have I crucified? This Jesus, whom I hear moving me to do right! And can He be indeed the Lord of life and death? And may I not still safely sin? or must I rather expect to be in torments for ever, as one who sins against light and knowledge? Is He Christ, or is He not? Is He, or is He not to be, the Judge of all mankind? "Who is this?"

Never may we so hear with perplexity! Never so desire without purpose to obey! Never may we so hesitate in doing the will of Christ; never doubt in believing his truth!

Christ feedeth five thousand men.

10 And the apostles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done. ¹ And he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place belonging to the city called Bethsaida.

11 And the people when they knew it, followed him: and he received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing.

12 ² And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and said unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals: for we are here in a desert place.

13 But he said unto them, Give ye them to eat.

¹ Matt. 14. 13.

And they said, We have no more but five loaves and two fishes; except we should go and buy meat for all this people.

14 For they were about five thousand men. And he said to his disciples, Make them sit down by fifties in a company.

15 And they did so, and made them all sit down.

16 Then he took the five loaves and the two fishes, and looking up to heaven, he blessed them, and brake, and gave to the disciples to set before the multitude.

17 And they did eat, and were all filled; and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets.

² Matt. 14. 15.

§ 210. That we may do more good than we think for.

The apostles told unto Christ all that they had done. This may be a pattern for us, in our practice of self examination. Not unto ourselves, but unto Him, who is ever present, we should daily lay bare our inmost thoughts; and learn, as from Him teaching us, and from his blessed word, both how to repent of our worst doings, and how to amend our best. Upon receiving their account of what they had been doing, "he took them, and went aside privately into a desert place." This, we must suppose, was in order to instruct them further in the great work they were engaged in, as his apostles. Let us learn hence, how expedient is privacy for preparation to any great undertaking; especially for the greatest of all works a holy life. Let us avoid therefore an incessant round of society. Let us seek frequent occasions to be by ourselves, with God only. And the more busily our hours are engaged, let us the more eagerly seize such opportunities of retirement, let us the more carefully watch to do nothing whilst in public, which we should be ashamed to own in private to our Lord.

And yet profitable as solitude may be, and pleasant as we shall find it thus to commune with our own hearts, and in our chamber, and be still, see Psalm 4. 4. we must not forget the example of our Lord, who, when the people followed Him, "received them, and spake unto them of the kingdom of God; and healed them that had need of healing." Ill prospers our devotion in retirement, if we cannot cheerfully put up with interruption, if we cannot be willing to do good to others, when we had designed to be improving ourselves. Such applications we must neither rudely refuse, nor hastily dismiss. For though the twelve came to our Lord, and said, "Send them away," He replied, with a view to our instruction, no less than to the feeding of the multitude, "Give ye them to eat."

And this should teach us to suspect our own selves, when we think of any plausible excuse, for dismissing a request to which we cannot conveniently attend. We are perhaps tempted to say that we are otherwise particularly engaged. Or we reflect that it concerns others, more closely than ourselves, to do the good that is required. But on such an occasion may God bring to our minds these words of Christ, "Give ye them to eat." This injunction may God give us grace to fulfil, by a readiness to assist each other, in the things which we conceive to be beside our province, or beyond our strength! We know not, till we try, how much we might do for the benefit of others. Nor can we imagine, till we have done it, how delightful it is to have done good, though it might not be most properly our place to do it.

One kind of good there is to do, for which we never can plead incapacity. And this is to spread abroad, by our words and works, the knowledge of the Gospel of Christ. One kind of food there is, which the most helpless may minister abundantly. This is to make our light shine before men, that they may glorify our Father which is in heaven. For who is there that has no intercourse with his brethren? And how can we converse, or deal with each other, without manifesting either an indifference to Christ's religion, or else shewing, out of a good conversation, our works, with meekness of wisdom? See James 3. 13. And how can we do this, how can we manifest our love of God, without commending it to the regard of the beholders? And what enterprise for good need we fear to undertake, if we may trust, that we are thus enabled, during the years of our pilgrimage, to feed with the bread of Christian edification hundreds and thousands of our fellow creatures? Here truly the fragments are more than the loaves. The influence of each Christian act extends beyond bounds that man can calculate. It may turn, in the beholder, the fluctuating scale, between scorn and reverence, between doubtfulness and faith. And the soul, which it is made the instrument of converting, may be one, which, besides being saved itself, is designed in the economy of grace to help forward the salvation of the world.

Christ preacheth the cross, his own and ours.

18 ¹ And it came to pass, as he was alone praying, his disciples were with him: and he asked them, saying, Whom say the people that I am?

19 They answering said, John the Baptist; but some say, Elias; and others say, that one of the old prophets is risen again.

20 He said unto them, But whom say ye that I am? Peter answering said, The Christ of God.

21 And he straitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing;

22 Saying, ² The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be slain, and be raised the third day.

23 ³ And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

24 For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it.

25 ⁴ For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and lose himself, or be cast away?

26 ⁵ For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed when he shall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels.

27 ⁶ But I tell you of a truth, there be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the kingdom of God.

¹ Matt. 16. 13.

² Matt. 17. 22.

³ Matt. 10. 38.

⁴ Matt. 16. 26. Mark 8. 36.

⁵ Matt. 10. 33.

⁶ Matt. 16. 28.

§ 211. How we must not be ashamed of the cross of Christ.

Whilst the people took Jesus for John the Baptist, for Elias, or for one of the elder prophets: the apostles, by the mouth of St. Peter, expressed the great truth of the Gospel, that He was "the Christ of God." They then who are most near to Him, they who are most closely acquainted with his words and works, these should most deeply feel, most openly profess, this certain truth. Hence we learn how much we have to answer for, enjoying as we do the full knowledge of the Gospel; how closely we are bound to own Him for the Christ, by loving Him, and serving Him, as the Saviour of our souls.

But in thus doing we meet with two chief difficulties; the one in doctrine, the other in practice. In doctrine, our stumbling-block is the cross of Christ crucified; our difficulty is the reluctance of human pride to owe all to his ignominious death. In practice, our difficulty is the cross which we must ourselves take up, it is the aversion of our will to deny ourselves, and to lose, if it be required, for his sake, our very lives. Of both these hindrances we have here full notice from our Lord. No sooner is He acknowledged by the apostles for the Christ, than He warns them how "the Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and chief priests and scribes, and be slain." And that He straitly charged them to tell no man that He was the Christ, this shews that He was aware how the cross He had to suffer would prove a scandal, both to others, and to themselves. Ill would they have done to proclaim Him for the Christ, when they were likely afterwards, in his sufferings, to forsake Him, and fly. Ill too does it become us to make profession of Christianity, unless we receive into our hearts this humiliating truth, unless we can be faithful to Christ, when on the cross, as well as to Christ entered into his glory. It pleased God to make the Captain of our salvation perfect through suffering. See Heb. 2. 10. Enough this must be to satisfy all doubts. Enough this must be to humble all pride. Enough this must be to make us place all our trust in Christ crucified.

But, secondly, "he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." This, observe, "he said to them all." This, we must all acknowledge, this is our great difficulty in the practice of religion. This is a difficulty that besets us every hour of our lives. For, observe further, we must take up our cross "daily." It is not in great matters only, it is not only on extraordinary occasions, that our Christianity is put to the test. It is to do ordinary things, even all things that we do, or say, or think; it is to think, to say, to do them, in a Christian spirit. This is needful, in order for us to be counted true followers of Christ. And what this Christian spirit is, we here evidently see. It is the spirit of humility. It is the spirit of selfdenial. It is a spirit whereby we patiently submit to affronts, and wrongs, and even to the loss of life. This spirit we must have always. Not only daily, or hourly must we be ready to do right at all costs; but always. For this is the only proof that the heart is changed. Not when we do a few things, on a few occasions, as Christ would have us; but when it is our heart's delight always so to act. We lose indeed hereby the world. We lose, many times, its profits, its pleasures, its approbation. But either we must lose these, or lose ourselves, and be cast away. If we are ashamed of the cross of Christ, if we are not resolved to take it up ourselves, our sentence is here fearfully set forth: "of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory and in his Father's, and of the holy angels."

Teach us, Lord, to follow Thee, through evil report and good! At all risk of scorn, at all cost of suffering, through all hindrances to faith, through all difficulties in practice, teach us to follow Thee!

Christ is transfigured. The apostles sleep.

28 ¹ And it came to pass about an eight days after these || sayings, he took Peter and John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray.

29 And as he prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening.

30 And, behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias:

31 Who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem.

32 But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep: and when they were awake, they saw his glory, and the two men that stood with him.

¹ Matt. 17. 1.

33 And it came to pass, as they departed from him, Peter said unto Jesus, Master, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias: not knowing what he said.

34 While he thus spake, there came a cloud and overshadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud.

35 And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear him.

36 And when the voice was past, Jesus was found alone. And they kept it close, and told no man in those days any of those things which they had seen.

|| Or, things.

§ 212. How glorious are our hopes; and how feebly we entertain them.

It was whilst our Lord prayed that his transfiguration took place; "the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening." Prayer, with us also, will change both the face without, and the heart within; making the countenance to express that cheerfulness and love, which it enables the soul to feel. Nor will even our raiment remain uninfluenced by the practice of devotion. Instead of a chief instrument of vanity, we shall learn to esteem dress no more than a needful covering, on which we cannot easily spend too little pains for show, or too much for cleanliness, neatness, and propriety. But the change, which here ensued upon the prayer of our Lord, was of a kind rather like to what we hope to attain, at our departure from this present life. And the sight of it, which the apostles enjoyed with their outward senses, is well suited for the encouragement of our faith; that we may, without seeing, have a lively conviction of the glories of the world which is to come. And thus we may apply what is here set down of our Lord's transfiguration. First "the fashion of his countenance was altered." This is like to what St. Paul says of the resurrection of the body: "it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15. 44. The form of the glorified saints, like the form of our Lord in his transfiguration, will be altered. How we know not. Only this we know, that it will not be what now it is; that it will be something far better. In the second place, "his raiment was white and glistening." Of raiment like to this we read in the Revelation of St. John, and we are there told that "fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Rev. 19. 8. In heaven, it seems thus to be signified, that we shall be both benefited ourselves, and distinguished amongst each other, by that righteousness which here we may attain, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Thirdly, "there talked with him two men, which were Moses and Elias; who appeared in glory." This may lead us to expect, that hereafter it will be our privilege to converse with the great and the good of all generations. Fourthly, they "spake of his decease, which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." This may serve to shew us what will be one chief topic of our conversation in the future state; even the love of God, in the redemption of mankind, by the blood of Christ; what one chief employment, even to join with thousands and tens of thousands, in the song that never endeth, "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." Rev. 5. 13.

"But Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep." Here we may see represented our own too common condition, whilst all this great glory is so near at hand to us. We are, as it were, "heavy with sleep." Our minds, whilst we are awake, are as insensible to things divine, as they are to things earthly, whilst we sleep. The faint wishes we conceive of reaching unto the glory of the saints in heaven, how little are they better than unprofitable dreams! How seldom do they produce in us any corresponding conduct! How far do we fall short, in diligence and pains, of the great objects we profess to be aiming at! The apostles, when awakened, perceived the glory of the Lord, and would then fain have continued where they were. When we are roused from our condition of indifference, we long to be with Christ where He is. But a cloud must for a time overshadow us. The troubles of life must be first endured. The valley of the shadow of death must be first encountered; and that, in most cases, with fear and trembling. Blessed be God, that in the midst of the surrounding cloud, his voice has been heard to say: "This is my beloved Son!" And blessed be his name, that we through his Son are called to be sons also; accepted in the beloved, through his precious blood! Blessed be God, that we have been chosen to the privilege of hearing his Gospel; and to the grace, whereby if we fail not of ourselves, we may hear to the saving of our souls! And blessed be his name that it is no longer our duty to keep these things close, but rather to tell every man in these days the things which we believe; and to help them, if it may be, to believe likewise!

Christ healeth one that was frantic; foresheweth his sufferings.

37 ¹ And it came to pass, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him.

38 And, behold, a man of the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son: for he is mine only child.

39 And, lo, a spirit taketh him, and he suddenly crieth out; and it teareth him that he foameth again, and bruising him hardly departeth from him.

40 And I besought thy disciples to cast him out; and they could not.

41 And Jesus answering said, O faithless and perverse generation, how long shall I be with you, and suffer you? Bring thy son hither.

42 And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him. And Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father.

¹ Matt. 17. 14.

² Matt. 17. 22.

³ Matt. 18. 1. Mark 9. 34.

43 And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God. But while they wondered every one at all things which Jesus did, he said unto his disciples, 44 ² Let these sayings sink down into your ears: for the Son of man shall be delivered into the hands of men.

45 But they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to ask him of that saying.

46 ³ Then there arose a reasoning among them, which of them should be greatest.

47 And Jesus, perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and set him by him,

48 And said unto them, Whosoever shall receive this child in my name receiveth me: and whosoever shall receive me receiveth him that sent me: for he that is least among you all, the same shall be great.

§ 213. The necessity of watchfulness against spiritual pride.

These things happened the very day after the transfiguration of our Lord. "When they were come down from the hill, much people met him." And a child, having been brought to Him, possessed with a devil, which the disciples were unable to cast out, "Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father." Hence we may learn one great advantage of meditation on the glories of heaven, and on the rest which is there promised to the saints of God. We are never better prepared, than when we come down from that mount, from that height of spiritual devotion, never better prepared for a successful conflict with the enemy who perpetually besets our souls. We are never better supplied with strength to cast out of us the spirit, which both bruise us and hardly departeth, than when we have been reflecting on the heavenly crown, which awaits our victory. If then there be in our hearts any spirit that "taketh" us captive in sin, that "tear" us by distraction of our thoughts from holiness; one from whose assaults we have sorely suffered, and whose dominion we have been hitherto unable to escape; if this have been our ease, and we do now earnestly wish to be healed, let us engage ourselves in the thought of Christ's glory, in the desire to partake of his inheritance. Then shall we best obtain grace to prevail over Satan, when most we have real pleasure in the contemplation of God, when most we dwell with longing hearts on those good things, which He has prepared for them that love Him.

A second thing, to be observed in this passage, is that Christ takes the very time of his exaltation, when He had been transfigured, and had wrought this signal miracle, and had raised the amazement of the beholders; this very time He takes, for reminding his disciples of the humiliation He had yet to endure. Let us learn hence, in our highest flights of devout meditation, and of spiritual hope, to be all the while humble minded. If by resisting the devil, we have made him flee from us, see James 4. 7, let us exult in no unseasonable triumph; but let us remember that we have yet more to conquer, yet more to endure. Presumptuous confidence is a state so full of danger, that it may be probable that our adversary has yielded, on purpose to draw us into it. Pride and boasting are sins so great, that he would gladly give us an advantage which might tempt us to commit them. Whatever therefore be our conflict, whatever our success, let us in the moment of victory call to mind, that we have so much the more need of constant watchfulness. This life is for warfare; the next for triumph. Here we must bear the shame of the cross; hereafter share the glory. Our adversary having ever some new plot for our destruction, we must never consider ourselves safe, until like our Lord we shall have been delivered up to death. May He, who for our sakes underwent that last and most fearful struggle, enable us to pass through it unhurt; both preserving us in safety, until the close of life, and suffering us not in our last hour for any pains of death to fall from Him! (See Burial Service.)

And especially, if we have grace to draw near to Him in faith and love, may He preserve us from spiritual pride, from such a fall as is here recorded of the apostles, who disputed which of them should be the greatest! Rather let us make much of others in comparison with ourselves. Let us receive, in Christ's name, with kind respect, those who seem to be the least in his kingdom. Let us esteem ourselves amongst the least, that so we may be in his sight great. And chiefly in respect of spiritual proficiency let us cherish this just estimate of our proper place. In respect to faith in Christ, and love of God, and practice of Christian holiness, in these let us be aware of our own backwardness. And knowing more of it in ourselves, compared with our opportunities, than we can possibly know in our neighbours, let us in these things, with true lowliness of heart, esteem others better than ourselves. See Phil. 2. 3.

Christ journeyeth towards Jerusalem.

49 ¹ And John answered and said, Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbid him, because he followeth not with us.

50 And Jesus said unto him, Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us.

51 And it came to pass, when the time was come that he should be received up, he stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem,

52 And sent messengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready for him.

53 And they did not receive him, because his face was as though he would go to Jerusalem.

54 And when his disciples James and John saw this, they said, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them, even as ² Elias did?

55 But he turned, and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of.

56 For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them. And they went to another village.

57 ³ And it came to pass, that as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest.

58 And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.

59 ⁴ And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father.

60 Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead: but go thou and preach the kingdom of God.

61 And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house.

62 And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

¹ Mark 9. 38.

² 2 Kings 1. 10.

³ Matt. 8. 19.

⁴ Matt. 8. 21.

§ 214. The nature of our journey heavenward.

The disciples, whilst under rebuke for disputing among themselves, confess that they had been jealous of one, who cast out devils in the name of Christ, and yet followed not with them. Our Lord replies, "Forbid him not; for he that is not against us is for us." This precept should temper with Christian love the thoughts which we are too apt to entertain against those, who differ from us in religion. Amongst the variety of sects which under different systems seek to cast out devils in the name of Christ, we must watch that we are jealous of none, that we envy none. In some things they may be, many of them, against us. But in many respects let us be assured that they are for us. They are for us in all that we and they are agreed upon. They are for us in the preference of heaven to earth. They are for us in urging the necessity of caring for the soul. They are for us in the preaching of faith and hope and charity.

Thus in many things we are agreed. Where we differ, let us examine with the more care whether we ourselves are right. Let us watch with the more caution lest we fall into wrong. Let us contend for the mastery, not with wrath but kindness, with a holy emulation in Christian proficiency. Let us call for no fire from heaven on their heads; unless it be that the warmth of Christian love, coming down from the Father of lights, may melt as into one body the discordant elements of Christ's community. Otherwise we shall be liable to be told by our Lord, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." Otherwise we are neglectful of the lesson which we might hence derive, that even affronts on Himself or his religion, much more objections against that form of it which is ours, are to be answered, not by the heat of persecution, but by the fervour of charity; not by the temper which would destroy men's lives, but by the love that saves them.

In the refusal of the Samaritans to receive our Lord, we see fulfilled what He here says of Himself, "The Son of man hath not where to lay his head." And this remark ought to produce in us the conviction, that here we have no abiding place; ought to prepare us, if we mean to follow Christ, for a pilgrimage in which there is no place for rest. As our Lord went from village to village, so must we travel on from grace to grace. Would we stop at faith? Behold to this we must add virtue. At virtue? Nay, to this we must add knowledge; "and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity." 2 Pet. 1. 7. Nor, in our journey to the spiritual Jerusalem, may we plead any special business, here first to be despatched, in delay of our advancement towards heaven. First I must acquire a competence, say some, and then I will be contented. First I must recover health, then I will be thankful. First lawfully indulge my desires, and then cease to cherish them unlawfully. But no, we must never thus put off our urgent call to be pure, to be patient, to be heavenly-minded. Our Christian duty must be no secondary concern. If we have friends whom it requires us to renounce, we must not so much as stay to bid them farewell; lest whilst we linger we are lost. When once we have put our hands to the heavenly plough, we must give no heed to our worldly pleasure. Not so much as a look may we cast back at the vanities of the life we have left, if we would be fit for the eternity to which we now are bound.

Grant, Lord, that none may be against us! Or if any, grant that we may not be against them. Shed abroad in our hearts those heavenly rays which serve to warm, but help not to consume! Make us to be all one in faith! Or if not, make us to be one in love!

Christ sendeth out the seventy disciples.

1 After ¹these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come.

2 Therefore said he unto them, ²The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest.

3 Go your ways: ³behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.

4 Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes, and salute no man by the way.

5 ⁴And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house.

6 And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again.

7 And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house.

8 And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you:

9 And heal the sick that are therein, and say unto

¹ Matt. 10. 1.

² Matt. 9. 37.

³ Matt. 10. 16.

them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

10 But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say,

11 Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.

12 But I say unto you, that it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city.

13 ⁵Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.

14 But it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you.

15 And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell.

16 ⁶He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me.

⁴ Matt. 10. 11.

⁵ Matt. 11. 21.

⁶ Matt. 10. 40.

§ 215. The privilege of enjoying a Christian ministry.

As the apostles were the same in number with the tribes of Israel, so these seventy disciples corresponded with the seventy elders, of whom we read in the book of Exodus, 24. 1, 9. "They were appointed by our Lord to go, "before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come." In this respect their office was like that of ministers in our own times, whose duty it is to prepare the inhabitants of the earth for the coming of the Son of God. And their being sent forth "two and two," may probably remind us of the union which should always be carefully maintained, amongst all who are engaged, either as ministers or members of the church, in forwarding the work of Christ. With a harvest so great in view, with such abundance of iniquity in the world, with such a prevalence of evil over good, of ignorance over the knowledge of saving truth, how is it that they who wish to do God service are often employed in quarrelling with each other? Oh, when will they go forth, ever "two and two," agreeing with each other in the work they have in hand? When will they be fit, for their gentleness and kindness to each other, in the presence of a world that hates them, to be compared to lambs among wolves?

The instructions of these seventy are nearly the same as those given to the apostles; conveying the same general advice to trust for their support to God's special providence, to consider themselves as labourers in God's spiritual harvest; and, both by healing and by faithful warning, to promote amongst mankind God's kingdom. To the clergy these directions afford an useful lesson of the duties of their calling; constraining them to retire from all worldly care, and to forward, by their prayers and by their labours, the harvest of their Lord. And to the people committed to their charge, it is here very forcibly expressed, that the ministers of Christ must be respected for the sake of Him whose Gospel they preach: "He that heareth you heareth me; he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me." This sentence is true of all whom Christ hath sent to preach the Gospel. And it should teach the rest, however great may be the faults of their ministers, to give heed always to what they teach in virtue of their office, and in harmony with the word of Him that sent them.

To live under a ministry, thus divinely appointed, is a privilege which lays a heavy responsibility on those who enjoy it. They see not indeed the mighty works of Christ, but they have heard, or they may hear, those whom He has appointed to commemorate them to the end of time. They have enjoyed, or it is their own fault, if they enjoy not, to their profit, a ministry, which He has ordained to endure even to the end of the world. Their opportunities may have been more or less favourable, their minister more or less accessible, more or less able, willing, or successful. But in any case let them remember that they have this to answer for, if they respected not, in his ministration, Him that sent him; if they profited not thereby to the utmost of their power. In a Christian land, in a country where there is a Christian church, who is there so out of the reach of Christian instruction, that he can stand on the same ground with them of Tyre and Sidon? Who is there but must tremble then to think that they would have repented, if he has not; and that, wicked as they were, and devoted to destruction, yet for them it may be more tolerable in the day of judgment than for him!

Christ rejoiceth, and teacheth to rejoice.

17 And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.

18 And he said unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.

19 Behold, I give unto you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy: and nothing shall by any means hurt you.

20 Notwithstanding in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven.

21 In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes: even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight.

22 || All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him.

23 And he turned him unto his disciples, and said privately, ¹ Blessed are the eyes which see the things that ye see:

24 For I tell you that many prophets and kings have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

|| Many ancient copies add these words, And turning to his disciples, he said.

¹ Matt. 13. 16.

§ 216. The subject of Christian rejoicing.

When we read of the seventy returning again with joy, and reporting their success to Jesus, we ought to consider how great is our own privilege, that we are permitted in our doings to commune with our Saviour, and to reckon that in what we do, we are forwarding his work. To us has He given grace to tread "over all the power of the enemy," to us the promise is assured that with his grace nothing "shall by any means hurt us." Let us take heed, from what He said to the disciples, not to rejoice merely as conquering the evil spirits, but as having our names written in heaven. To exult, to triumph, to glory over another, is so far from a Christian frame of mind, in our present state of trial and of danger, that not even over devils should we thus boast on earth. But for our hope of heaven, for the assurance that unto them that overcome there is prepared a crown of glory, for this we may rejoice, for this we must rejoice, if we would fulfil the commandments of our Lord.

In this joy He has Himself led the way; thanking God, as He does here, for the revelation of his mercy, and for its being imparted, without respect to persons, not to those who are wise in their own eyes, but to those who are as babes, lowly in mind. We see then in what case we may rejoice with safety; when we are in an humble, teachable frame of mind. For then will God reveal to us, in his Son, the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven. We see too here what are the things to be revealed, the things to be rejoiced in. They are what many prophets and kings desired to see, and saw not. They are what the eyes of the disciples did see, and their ears did hear. They are Christ, and He crucified; a Saviour from sin, a Teacher of holiness, a mediator between God and his fallen creatures. They are the miracles He wrought, the words He spake, the Gospel He preached, the death He died. They are his resurrection from the dead, his ascension into heaven: the one, that we too should be raised from the grave, the other, that where He is, there we might be also. In these things it is our Christian duty to rejoice. In these things if we rejoice not, we neither fulfil the precept Christ gave to his disciples, nor follow the example He gave us in Himself. A Christian without joy, either believes not what God has in Christ revealed, or hopes not to attain to a heavenly inheritance. Let us look to it, that our hope and faith be not hindered by some consciousness of unrepented sin, by some fearful apprehension that our hearts are not right with God, our affection not set on things above. Let us be aware that it is God only who can in these things set us straight, who can reveal to us the truth, and give us the grace to love it. And let us pray to Him, that of his mercy He will make us to know both the Father and the Son; that He will make us to know them to our joy; that He will enable us, according to the rule of the apostle to "rejoice in the Lord alway." Phil. 4. 4.

And especially let us lay seriously to heart the description here given of the persons, to whom the Almighty Father is wont to make these things known. Not to the "wise and prudent," but "unto babes," doth He reveal the things which belong unto salvation. Not unto them that are wise in their own conceit, but unto such as are lowly in their own esteem. If then we have not yet known these things to our joy, let us consider whether the fault be not in our own pride of heart. Let us endeavour more entirely to depend on the teaching of our heavenly Father. Let us remember that He, and He only, can reveal to us what more we need; that He, and He only, has imparted what now we know.

Thanks be to God, that He has made us to know the things that belong unto our peace! Thanks be to God that through his goodness we may know them daily more and more to our endless joy! Thanks be to God that He has given us the power to resist and to overcome the enemy of our souls! Thanks be to God that our names are written, if through his mercy they may be written, in heaven! Thanks, Lord, our lips with joy express! Thanks, Lord, let our lives with holiness declare!

The Samaritan neighbour.

25 And, behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying, 'Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

26 He said unto him, What is written in the law? how readest thou?

27 And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thyself.

28 And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.

29 But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbour?

30 And Jesus answering said, A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.

31 And by chance there came down a certain priest that way: and when he saw him, he passed by on the other side.

32 And likewise a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and passed by on the other side.

33 But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him,

34 And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him.

35 And on the morrow when he departed, he took out || two pence, and gave them to the host, and said unto him, Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again, I will repay thee.

36 Which now of these three, thinkest thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves?

37 And he said, He that shewed mercy on him. Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

¹ Matt. 22. 35.

|| See Matt. 20. 2.

§ 217. Who is our neighbour?

The lawyer, who asked the way to inherit eternal life, was referred by our Lord to "the Law." Christians, under the same doubt, must turn to the Law also; but must take it as it is enforced in the Gospel. "This do, and thou shalt live," is undoubtedly our promise, if we do as Christ has required us; if through faith in his merits, if in the strength of his grace, we love God with all our soul, and our neighbour as ourselves. And here we learn to what extent these duties reach. Here we see, that, as there is no end to the perfections we are to adore in God, so neither is there any limit to the charity we are to feel for man. Vain is all attempt to elude this duty, by raising the question, "Who is my neighbour?" The narrative of this Samaritan expressly teaches us, that not the ties of country or of kindred, not the community of religious profession, but the wants of our common nature, make every man, whom we can in any way assist, our neighbour.

That no other consideration can be depended upon, is well shewn in the conduct of the priest, and of the Levite. Of them it might have been naturally expected, that they would do more than merely look upon their wounded countryman, and pass by on the other side. In them we have a lively proof of the vanity of an outward calling without inward grace. In them we see a true representation of the uncharitable in every age, country, and profession; of all, who in the hardness of their hearts, neglect their fellow creatures in distress. Around them misery abounds. They lift not so much as a finger to remove it. Close to them, as they go along the path of life, there is pain and sickness, hunger and nakedness, ignorance and sin. To see it they cannot always avoid. To look on it they sometimes venture, as in idle curiosity. To relieve it is what they never in earnest attempt. They pass by on the other side, the side of worldly ease, the side of selfish indifference.

Not so must he do who would inherit eternal life. For his guidance he has the example of this Samaritan. For his encouragement he has the exhortation of Christ: "Go and do thou likewise." This pattern of a real neighbour was himself also on his journey. He had business of his own, as well as the priest and Levite. And yet he could find time for waiting on the wounded. He could pour in his own oil and wine, set him on his own beast, and part with his own pence, to provide for his support. Not only then the money which we can easily spare, but our time and attention, though it be to our own hindrance, the very provision we have prepared for ourselves, the very beast we mean to use for our own conveyance, these we ought to offer, with these we ought willingly to assist our neighbour in his need. And we ought, in such a case, to count for our neighbour, not only our acquaintances and friends, but even the enemies of our country, and strangers to ourselves. Thus might we best imitate that one only good Samaritan, who, when we were at enmity through sin, and stripped by Satan, and half dead, came unto us from the glory of the Father, bound up our aching wounds, brought us into the resting place of his covenant; and undertook for our support by his grace, until the time when He should come again to take us to Himself.

"Go and do thou likewise." "Go." Be no longer still, no longer idle, no longer content with pitying the distressed; set about relieving them in earnest. "Go." Leave thy home of comfort. Leave thy haunts of pleasure. Leave thy own idleness. Leave thy own business. "Go, and do thou likewise." Do as did the good Samaritan. Do as did thy Saviour Christ. Do whatsoever good thy hand can find. Relieve whatever misery thine eyes can see. Clothe them that are stripped of their raiment. Bind up the wounded in spirit. And though it be the most bitter of thine enemies that is in want, pour into his reluctant heart the oil and wine of Christian kindness. "Go, and do thou likewise."

Christ teacheth Martha and Mary.

38 Now it came to pass, as they went, that he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house.

39 And she had a sister called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word.

40 But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to him, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me.

41 And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things:

42 But one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

§ 218. The one thing needful.

The history of Martha and Mary, whilst it forms a most striking lesson to the female Christian, is full of profitable instruction for us all. It warns us very forcibly against that, which is frequently our besetting sin. It tells us very seasonably of that, which must be always our most important duty. The sin, against which it warns us, is the having our minds too much occupied, our hearts too much distracted, by the trifling cares of this transitory life. The duty which it enforces is this, that we should choose rather the one thing needful; that we should sit, for this object, at Jesus' feet, and hear his word.

The temptation which beset Martha was contrived by Satan, to spring up, as is often the case, from what is the ordinary duty of her sex, the providing for the wants of a family. To minister to the hospitable entertainment of her guest, so it had been done in due measure and in a proper frame of mind, would have secured for her the praise, and not the censure, of our Lord. It was her being cumbered with thus ministering, it was her paying more attention to it than she should have done, it was her being so engrossed with her business, as to neglect this singular opportunity of religious instruction, and not only to neglect it herself, but to grudge her sister the enjoying it; this it was that called forth the merciful reproof, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

Mary is not here praised for the neglect of household duties; but for putting them readily aside, on being visited by Christ; for choosing as her better part, to listen to his words. Enough might soon have been prepared to satisfy a guest so humble. And He purposely here signifies how much more highly He would feel honoured by a more devout attention, than by a larger feast. Let us watch then, whether we have to earn a livelihood, or to prepare a meal; whether we are engaged in providing the means of sustenance, or employed in helping to dispense it. Let us watch that we so minister to the wants of the body, as not to neglect the necessities of the soul; that whilst we make provision for this present life, we think mainly all the while of the life which is to come. This was Mary's choice. "Mary hath chosen that good part." It was not forced upon her. It was not even prescribed to her. She chose it. We have the power to choose. God has given us this ability. But being given, it is ours. That He gave it, this makes us obliged to Him for the gift. This should constrain us to use it as He would have us. That it is ours, this makes us answerable for how we use it. This makes each act we do, each word we utter, each thought we think, our own. We can choose whether we will think, speak, and do them. We can choose. For God has given us our choice. We can choose. Yet, without God's further help, we can never choose aright.

In our choosing let us remember that "one thing is needful;" and one only. One thing is needful, even life eternal. "And this is life eternal," as our Lord has Himself expressed it, "that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John 17. 3. To know so as to believe unto the saving of the soul, this is that first of duties, with which no other must be allowed to interfere. One thing is needful, the saving of the soul. And one thing for this is needful, faith in Christ. And for this also there is one thing needful, the grace of God. And for this there is on our parts, one thing needful, sincere and fervent prayer. "One thing is needful," and one only; because no other thing is of any value in comparison. "What is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Matt. 16. 26. What is any object we have on earth to gain, any entertainment we have here to provide, any joy we have here to hope for, any immunity from pain we have here to secure what are these, that for them a man should give his soul in exchange?

Grant, Lord, that we may never be so cumbered with the cares of this present life, as in any wise to neglect the salvation of our souls! Give us grace to have a true and saving faith! Give us grace to have a hearty desire to pray! And hear us, whilst with all our hearts we pray, Lord save our souls alive!

Christ teacheth to pray.

1 And it came to pass, that, as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples.

2 And he said unto them, When ye pray, say, 'Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth.

3 Give us || day by day our daily bread.

4 And forgive us our sins; for we also forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation; but deliver us from evil.

5 And he said unto them, Which of you shall have a friend, and shall go unto him at midnight, and say unto him, Friend, lend me three loaves;

6 For a friend of mine † in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him?

7 And he from within shall answer and say, Trouble me not; the door is now shut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot rise and give thee.

¹ Matt. 6. 9.

|| Or, for the day.

† Or, out of his way.

² Matt. 7. 7.

³ Matt. 7. 9.

§ 219. Encouragement in praying.

"Lord, teach us to pray." This is itself a very necessary prayer. Nor must we expect to pray with any good effect, till we are sensible, that in this, as in all other duties, we have need of the divine teaching. The request is answered by that form of supplication, which we commonly call the Lord's Prayer, and which has previously been recorded by St. Matthew 6. 9—13. Though delivered, on two different occasions, there is so little variety in the expressions, that we have herein full authority for using a set form of words to pray by. Whilst what little variety there is shews that we are not bound to one form only, but that we may use any words which express the same kind of wants, in the same humble dependence upon God. Never then let us be weary of praying, either in these words, or after this manner. Never let our devotion flag for want of new prayers, or more fervent prayers; whilst we have this to use, which Christ has taught, and others like to this provided by his church.

This prayer our Lord follows up by two arguments, of great force to encourage us in praying. The first is, that importunity succeeds, even in one who is not of the same family, even in one who is afar off from God. The second is, that we, being his sons, his children by adoption and grace, may so much the more be sure that we shall pray with good success. In the first case we have the master of the house described as having retired to his rest, his family having gone to bed as well as himself; so that there was no one who could be expected to claim admittance or food. Yet if a friend were to persist in calling him up, in pressing him to lend loaves for an urgent occasion, though he should owe no such favour on the score of friendship, yet, rather than be disturbed by his importunity, "he will rise, and give him as many as he needeth." If we agree that this would probably be the case, that thus "every one that asketh receiveth," we must acknowledge also the force of the application to our praying unto God: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

But what, now, if we be not merely friends, but sons, members of the same household, accustomed to receive our daily sustenance from the same parent, who also first gave us life? Of such an one should we expect, that if we were to ask a fish, he would give us a serpent? Of such an one could we doubt that he would give good gifts unto his children? If of this we have no doubt, even in the case of parents who are evil, in the case of an angry or careless father, such as is many a parent upon the earth; how much more shall we be sure of our heavenly Father, that He will "give the Holy Spirit," that best of all good gifts, "to them that ask Him?" Let us pray therefore with importunity, as being sensible that we have urgent need. Let us pray with confidence, as being assured that it is a Father whom we address. Let us pray, as sons who rely on Him for support, and who doubt not that we shall receive it at his hands. Let us pray for the honouring of his name, for the coming of his kingdom, for the fulfilment of his will. Let us pray for our own forgiveness and deliverance from sin, for grace to assist us when tempted, and yet rather to be saved from temptation. Let us pray for wisdom to direct our prayers aright, and for devout attention that we may offer them without offence to Him before whose throne we kneel.

"Lord, teach us to pray!" Lord Jesu Christ, Thou who art Master of our souls, Thou who hast bought us with a price, Thou who art the Giver of all good gifts; "teach us," for of Thee only can we learn; "teach us," for Thou only knowest how; teach us, for Thou art our only Mediator and Advocate; "Lord, teach us to pray!"

Christ casteth out a devil that was dumb.

14 And he was casting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to pass, when the devil was gone out, the dumb spake; and the people wondered.

15 But some of them said, 'He casteth out devils through Beelzebub the chief of the devils.

16 And others tempting him, sought of him a sign from heaven.

17 But he, knowing their thoughts, said unto them, Every kingdom divided against itself is brought to desolation; and a house divided against a house falleth.

18 If Satan also be divided against himself, how shall his kingdom stand? because ye say that I cast out devils through Beelzebub.

19 And if I by Beelzebub cast out devils, by whom do your sons cast them out? therefore shall they be your judges.

20 But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you.

21 When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace:

22 But when a stronger than he shall come upon him and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils.

23 He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth.

24 When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out.

25 And when he cometh, he findeth it swept and garnished.

26 Then goeth he, and taketh to him seven other spirits more wicked than himself; and they enter in, and dwell there: and the last state of that man is worse than the first.

¹ Matt. 9. 34. & 12. 24.

² Matt. 12. 43.

§ 220. That we cannot become good on bad motives.

We need frequently to be reminded that we have an active spiritual enemy. And such passages as this should at once make us sensible of our danger, and turn our thoughts to the right method of avoiding it. The control of evil spirits over the outward sense, as it took place in our Saviour's time, is a forcible proof that they really exist, and that they work for evil to the children of men. Here we learn who it is that alone can master them. Here we see how worse than idle is the thought, that any one of them can be resisted by the aid of any other of them.

This is what men attempt, when they seek to overcome the temptations of sin by mere worldly motives, which are but the suggestions of Satan; when they would cast out the devil of lust, or covetousness, or sloth, by the devil of pride, or false shame, or selfish interest. If it be true, as we know it is, that a kingdom divided against itself is sure to be brought to desolation, we may be certain that Satan is not divided against himself; that he helps not to cast himself out, and that only by the finger of God can he be subdued. It must be a stronger than he; and this is God. It cannot be himself, or his kindred evil spirits. For in this matter whoever is not with Christ is against Him. They work not with Him. They suggest not Christian motives. They whisper that we may do well to be honest, sober and industrious, out of regard, not to Christ, but to our own worldly comfort. But hereby they can never mean to promote in us, and hereby there never can be produced, that true industry and honesty and temperance, which are rooted in the heart. For this would be to hurt their own kingdom. Whereas the outward profession, or the outward action, if it proceed from an unconverted heart, helps only, to their greater triumph, to make us hypocrites in the sight of God. We are farther off from being true members of Christ and his kingdom, if we act on such worldly policy, than if we had no regard to it at all. If we adopt a decent moral exterior, out of respect only to our comfort and advancement here, we are so much the less likely to come to a due sense of our sinfulness in the sight of God, to a due dependence on the atonement of Christ, to a lively faith, to an effectual repentance, to an entire affection for our heavenly calling.

The unclean spirit may indeed have gone out. His house may, to all outward appearance, be "swept and garnished." Gross acts of transgression may have ceased. But the enemy is restless; the defence is weak. And if the abode which he has left be not filled in the mean time with "all the fulness of God," Ephes. 3. 19, the evil one will find no difficulty in returning; and "the last state of that man is worse than the first." It is worse, because it is harder for him to be again stirred up. It is worse, because he may very probably never live to have another opportunity of deliverance. It is worse, because the enemy will have got the stronger hold. It is worse, because He, who alone can help, will not always by his Spirit strive with man. It is worse, for Christ has said that so it is.

God teach us to trust in no one but Himself, to act on no motives but those which He reveals! God help us to cast out the unclean spirit; and when out, to bar against him his lost abode, that he never shall enter into it any more! God grant that we may never fall away from the grace we have once attained, may lose no advantage we once have got; but may have our last state daily better than the first!

Christ denounceth an evil generation.

27 And it came to pass, as he spake these things, a certain woman of the company lifted up her voice, and said unto him, Blessed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou hast sucked.

28 But he said, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.

29 And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign; and there shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet.

30 For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation.

31 The queen of the south shall rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for she came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and behold, a greater than Solomon is here.

¹ Matt. 12. 38.

² Matt. 5. 15.

|| See Matt. 5. 15.

³ Matt. 6. 2.

§ 221. That we have sufficient signs.

For a woman, who saw our Lord's works, and heard his discourses, it was natural to express her admiration, by pronouncing his mother blessed. This was no more than what the angel had said to Mary, "Blessed art thou among women." Luke 1. 28. Nor did Jesus by his remark pass censure on the expression. Only He would have us to know, for our comfort, that, lightly as his mother was favoured, there is a higher favour, a greater blessing, within the reach of every one of us. "Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it." This word it is our privilege to hear. Let it be our earnest endeavour to keep it. Let us feel that it is our own fault if we keep it not; if we find not in it the blessing which is here assured to us by Christ.

"And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to say, This is an evil generation: they seek a sign." It was evil to ask for a further sign, because this shewed that they were not convinced by the many miracles which they had already seen. It was dictating to our Lord on what terms they would believe. It is like what the rich man in the parable said of his brethren, "If one went unto them from the dead, they will repent." Luke 16. 30. It is what many now think, though they do not openly say it: If I could see heaven and hell more plainly, if I could feel the Holy Spirit of God more sensibly, if I could understand more entirely the mystery of Christ crucified for my sins, then I would believe, then I would amend, then I would be not almost only, but altogether a Christian. But it is for God to propose the sign. It is for us in all humility to receive it. And the sign He gives us is the same which was given to the Jews, "the sign of the prophet Jonas." Three days was the prophet in the whale, and Christ the like season in the bowels of the earth. The death and resurrection of Christ, these are our signs; his death by reason of our sins, his rising again for our justification.

This is a sign which God has not put as in a secret place, but which He has so set forth and verified, as that it is visible to all. If we see it not, the fault must be not in the light, but in the eye; in the eye that should behold, but will not. It is because the light that is in us, our own reason, our own choice, our own will, it is because these are darkness, therefore it is that we see not, believe not. If then this be our case, and to whatever degree it is our case, let us be assured that in us it is sin. For against us will rise up in the judgment the queen of the south and the men of Nineveh, and all, in all ages of the world, who, with faculties the same as our own, have chosen better, and obeyed more. And let us consider how greatly our sin is aggravated by being committed in the full sunshine of the Gospel. A greater than Jonas, a greater than Solomon is here. Therefore shall the heathen of the ancient world, and the idolators of distant lands, "rise up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them." For they "repented at the preaching of Jonas." They "came from the utmost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon."

See then, in their example, what is required of ourselves; to labour for knowledge, and to improve in grace: to spare no pains in our search for wisdom, and no sacrifice in our endeavours to amend; to take heed to the light that is in us, and to take heed that it be not darkness; to take pains to hear the word of God, and to take pains to keep it. We must not grudge to spend our time; or, if need be, to move our habitation. We must refuse to go, for earthly benefit, to parts where we should enjoy less spiritual advantage. We must be willing to come from far to a land where the pure Gospel may be heard. And above all, when we hear it, we must repent at the preaching of it; we must believe; we must obey.

Christ reproveth the Pharisees.

37 And as he spake, a certain Pharisee besought him to dine with him: and he went in, and sat down to meat.

38 And when the Pharisee saw it, he marvelled that he had not first washed before dinner.

39 ¹ And the Lord said unto him, Now do ye Pharisees make clean the outside of the cup and the platter; but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedness.

40 Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without make that which is within also?

41 But rather give alms of such things as ye have; and, behold, all things are clean unto you.

42 But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.

43 ² Woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye love the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets.

44 Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them.

¹ Matt. 23. 25.

Or, as you are able.

² Matt. 23. 6.

222. That we must obey in the heart.

Our Lord, who had sat at meat with publicans, now refuses not to dine with Pharisees, who, esteeming themselves righteous, were therein the greater sinners of the two. He prepares to instruct them, by first omitting some trifling ceremony of washing, to which they attached undue importance. Whereupon they had no sooner marvelled, than He pointed out to them the folly of attending so much to outward washing, whilst they neglected all inward purity. This is what his discourses continually aim at. This is what we ought to esteem the very substance of Christian obedience; namely that which is in the heart within. Fools we should be to forget that He who "made that which is without, made that which is within also." To offer unto Him no other than outward homage, whether it be in purity, or charity, or any other matter of duty, is to offer but a small part of that which is his right. Thus did the Pharisees in their washings, in their scrupulous tithing of trifles, in their affected greetings in the markets; they put on an exterior of kindness, justice, and cleanliness, whilst they neglected to cherish these graces in their hearts.

This we also are guilty of, whensoever we make a fair show to the eye of man, whilst our motives, wishes, or designs, are the very reverse of what appears in our conduct. To be just in our dealings, but covetous in our thoughts; just where injustice would disgrace us with the world, but ready to wrong our neighbour if the wrong may be concealed; to greet with needless courtesy those whose company we in reality dislike; to give with bountiful hand what all the while we grudge, and would gladly withhold; this is to be hypocrites as the Pharisees. This is to be subject to their woe. This is to be what our Saviour calls "graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them." Above, the turf is clean, or the ground well ordered and set with flowers. Beneath, the human form is mouldering in decay. The life, as it appears, is sober, honest, kind. The soul within is sensual, false, and cold; it is dead; it is hastening to corruption. Let us remember that the day is at hand when these graves also shall be opened. The hour is coming when the secret iniquity of the hypocrite shall be exposed before the judgment seat of Christ. Let us not only act, but think and wish and feel, as we desire that we should be thought to do by others, as we would be glad to be seen to do by our Saviour Christ. He sees, even now, before the day of judgment. He sees each thought that we conceive, each wish we form, each feeling we entertain. He is aware of them. Let us be always aware that He is so.

Oh, how may we be made clean in his sight? How, but by having our souls washed in his most precious blood? No other cleansing can avail. No outward ceremony can suffice. The corruption is within. The "ravening and wickedness" is in the "inward parts." It is where we cannot see, or hear, or handle. It is where we think, and desire, and choose. It is where we long, and loathe. It is where we love, and hate. There it is that we are by nature foul. There, that by God's grace we must become clean. And only through the merits of the death of Christ can this be done. And only through faith in his blood can this blood be effectual to our salvation. We must believe, in order to be saved. We must believe, in order to be cleansed. We must believe, in order to hate the sin which before we loved; in order to love, what we by nature hate, the ways of holiness and truth. Then shall we be "clean every whit;" John 13. 10; clean if we believe, but not because we believe; clean, because Christ has cleansed us; clean, because washed in his blood. This is saving faith. Not to trust in our own believing; but to believe, and to trust, in Christ. This is saving faith. For in thus believing we are clean. We are clean; and all things are clean to us. When we believe, so as to give alms of such things as we have; when we believe, so as to love; when we believe so as to love all mankind, for this reason that Christ hath loved us; then all things are clean to us. There is nothing we can do wrong, when we do all in love. There is nothing we can do wrong, when we do all in faith. "To the pure all things are pure." Tit. 1. 15. To them that are cleansed by the blood of Christ all things are clean. All things, that they who love God can love to do, are holy, and just, and good.

Christ reproveth the lawyers.

45 Then answered one of the lawyers, and said unto him, Master, thus saying thou reproachest us also.

46 ¹ And he said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers ! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

47 ² Woe unto you ! for ye build the sepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them.

48 Truly ye bear witness that ye allow the deeds of your fathers : for they indeed killed them, and ye build their sepulchres.

49 Therefore also said the wisdom of God, I will send them prophets and apostles, and some of them they shall slay and persecute :

¹ Matt. 23. 4.

² Matt. 23. 29.

³ Gen. 4. 8.

⁴ Matt. 23. 13.

|| Or, forbad.

50 That the blood of all the prophets, which was shed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation ;

51 ³ From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which perished between the altar and the temple : verily I say unto you, It shall be required of this generation.

52 ⁴ Woe unto you, lawyers ! for ye have taken away the key of knowledge : ye enter not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye || hindered.

53 And as he said these things unto them, the scribes and the Pharisees began to urge him vehemently, and to provoke him to speak of many things :

54 Laying wait for him, and seeking to catch something out of his mouth, that they might accuse him.

§ 223. That we must not condemn our neighbours.

The lawyers here mentioned were the same as the scribes ; persons, whose profession it was to interpret the law of Moses. They were aware, it seems, that what our Lord said against hypocrisy in the Pharisees, must needs amount to a reproach against them also. It was well that they should be sensible of their guilt. And the divine Teacher, far from helping them, in false kindness, to excuse it, brings it home to them, by plainly telling them of their chief transgressions. The first is, that they had laden men with burdens grievous to be borne, and yet themselves would not so much as touch them with one of their fingers. This they did as interpreters of the Law. And thus we also offend, whensoever we expect, as we commonly do, in others, a degree of virtue, which, for some specious reason, we allow ourselves to fall short of.

There is no inconsistency in our nature more striking than this. There is none that more frequently requires our self examination. Is this so great a sin in my neighbour ? Let me search, and see, whether I offend in it myself. Is this duty so incumbent upon him ? How can it be not incumbent on me also ? How can I fail, in each burden I lay on him, to be heaping up a load upon my own conscience ? How dare I be idle, when I look for him to be diligent ; sensual, if I expect him to be sober ; proud, if of him I demand humility ; covetous, and require him to be free to give ?

The next charge is, that they had built the sepulchres of the prophets, whom their fathers killed. And the weight of the charge consisted in their being as willing all the time to commit the like murder. And so indeed they proved themselves to be, in their zeal for putting to death that Holy One, of whom the prophets spake, and by reason of whose death there was to be required of that generation the blood of all the prophets, which had been “ shed from the foundation of the world.” Never then let us venture to imply censure on others, where our own conduct is open to rebuke. Never let us commit those sins, which, being known either to man or God, disqualify us for important duties ; forbid us, for very shame, to reprove our brother in offence, or to help in redressing the wrongs of the injured, because we are conscious of having helped to create them. What a weight should this thought have with us, as against the force of temptation. If we fall, our falling will tie our hands from doing good, will restrain our tongues from godly utterance. Our own like transgressions, known to our neighbours, and staring us in the face, will render us unfit to admonish the living, or to defend from such injustice as we ourselves commit, the memory of the dead.

The third charge, against these expounders of the Law, is, that they had taken away the key of knowledge, and whilst they entered not in themselves, they hindered those that would. This offence consisted in their shutting up from the people the use of the inspired volume ; and in not using it for the improvement of their own lives. Not much unlike to theirs is the disposition of such as grudge in their neighbours any height of piety which they are themselves unable to reach. They require it indeed, as was before said, so as to find fault where it is not ; yet they would hinder it, if they could, because they hate it where it is. And the reason is, that it is a reflection on their own deficiency. It makes manifest their unbelief. It aggravates their condemnation. Hence flows the detraction of the wicked against the good. Hence the enmity and jealousy of the world towards the faithful disciples of Christ. Let us take heed that we in no case entertain these evil tempers. Rather let us be stirred up, by what of good we see in others, to a holy emulation of the like excellent gifts. Let us rejoice in their success with unfeigned joy ; blessing God's holy name for all his servants who live or die in his faith and fear : and beseeching Him to give us grace so to follow their good example, that with them we may be partakers of his heavenly kingdom.

Christ teacheth to avoid hypocrisy.

1 In 'the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, insomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to say unto his disciples first of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Pharisees, which is hypocrisy.

2 'For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known.

3 'Therefore whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops.

4 'And I say unto you my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

5 But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear him which after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell; yea, I say unto you, Fear him.

6 Are not five sparrows sold for two || farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God?

7 But even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows.

8 'Also I say unto you, Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man also confess before the angels of God:

9 But he that denieth me before men shall be denied before the angels of God.

10 And whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him; but unto him that blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost it shall not be forgiven.

11 'And when they bring you unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye shall answer, or what ye shall say:

12 For the Holy Ghost shall teach you in the same hour what ye ought to say.

¹ Matt. 16. 6.

² Matt. 10. 26.

³ Matt. 10. 26.

|| See Matt. 10. 29.

⁴ Matt. 10. 32. 2 Tim. 2. 12.

⁵ Matt. 10. 19.

§ 224. The connexion of fear and falsehood.

Hypocrisy is the pretending to be what we are not. It is when we, by our words or actions, make people believe us better, or indeed in any way other than we are. Against this leaven of the Pharisees our Lord here first warns us, by the assurance, that "there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, neither hid that shall not be known." Our lips, or lives, may for the present mislead the beholders, causing them to form too favourable an opinion of our characters. But it is only for the present. It is only for the short duration of our own life, or of the outward world. Soon cometh the end, when everything will be seen to be as it actually is; and not only as it is, but as it has been from the first. How forcibly should this reflection check in us all approach to deceitfulness in our words or conduct! If ever we are thus tempted to transgress, let us call to mind, ere we utter the language of flattery, ere we perform the act of pretended kindness, or of affected devotion, that our inmost thoughts, even what we at that very moment purpose in our hearts, will be hereafter made manifest to those whom we would now deceive.

Our Lord next shews the folly of that fear of man, from which hypocrisy very commonly proceeds. Nothing so often tempts us to conceal the truth, as a dread of offending our fellow creatures. Yet the utmost they can do is to kill the body. And their more ordinary revenges are ill usage, ill words, or some such return for the truth we tell them, as at the utmost, if only we rightly receive it, extends not beyond bodily harm. When therefore we consider the slight importance of the body, compared with the soul, we ought to banish from our minds the fear of man, and to fear Him only, "which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell." He it is who notes those sparrows, which we so lightly value; He, who numbers the very hairs of our head. Therefore ought we never to fear, because of his boundless power, because of his universal providence, because of his assurance, here recorded, that we are of "more value than many sparrows." Therefore ought we never to be "afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass;" Isa. 51. 12; never to be so afraid, as to forget the Lord our Maker, "that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth;" Isa. 51. 13; who has made both body and soul, and can destroy them both for ever.

And especially let us beware, lest, out of the fear of man, we, in any sense, in any degree, commit the great sin of openly denying what is true in Christ Jesus. For the disciples to whom our Lord spake these words, this caution was the more obviously needed, on account of their being persecuted for the profession of Christianity, brought "unto the synagogues, and unto magistrates and powers;" and there tempted to renounce their faith in Christ. This if they had done, it would have implied that his miracles were false; it would have been to blaspheme that Holy Spirit by whom the miracles were wrought. Our use of this warning is to be found, when we are in the company of such as would discountenance the practice of any Christian duty. To smile at their profaneness, or to suspend our own devotion, to join against our conscience in their vain amusements, or to lay aside, out of compliance with their wishes, our own more Christian employments; this, let us remember, is to deny Christ before men. And for them that do so, the end let us remember, is this: they "shall be denied before the angels of God."

At such an hour, in such an emergency, do Thou teach us, Holy Spirit, what we ought to say! Help us to speak "the truth in love!" Eph. 4. 15. Help us to win our brother, whilst we confess our blessed Lord! Help us to fear no man, but to fear only God!

The foolish rich man.

13 And one of the company said unto him, Master, speak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me.

14 And he said unto him, Man, who made me a judge or a divider over you?

15 And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

16 And he spake a parable unto them, saying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully:

17 And he thought within himself, saying, What shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits?

18 And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods.

19 And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry.

20 But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night || thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?

21 So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.

|| Or, do they require thy soul.

§ 225. How to be rich toward God.

Greatly did that man err, who asked our Lord to interfere with his brother, in the matter of a disputed inheritance. His judgment, as we may collect from his reply, is not to be in the perishable riches of this world, but in the treasures of life eternal. These He will divide according to his word, unto all who through faith obey his will. In that will of his, as declared in the Gospel, there is no point more clear than this, that we must be indifferent to the acquisition of worldly wealth, as willing to yield, as to prosecute our claim, to the inheritance which a brother unjustly withholds. And for our improvement in this temper, Christ draws this lively picture of a worldly minded man. Here we have one who thought that a man's life does consist "in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." For no sooner had he received a great increase of his store, than he reckoned on a long continuance of life. He was perplexed as to how he might best secure for himself the enjoyment of all that he possessed. He determined to rebuild his barns, that he might have room to hoard up his goods and fruits. And then he thought he might say to his soul, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry." In the midst of these reflections, God, we are told, said unto him, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?" Folly it is at any time to feel secure of living long. But how doubly foolish, if, as our Lord would teach us in the instance of this rich man, if when most we feel secure of life, the messenger of death is most near at hand! How much better at such a time, instead of building barns, instead of making provision for the flesh, how much better to be found spending freely, and giving liberally, as faithful stewards of God's good gifts!

"Then whose shall those things be?" His no longer. Here we read the vanity of all earthly treasure, of all possessions whether great or small, which are so eagerly sought after in the world. One hour we call them our own property; the next they are gone, or rather we are gone who owned them. We leave them when we least expect it, for the grave, and for the judgment seat of Christ. Such is the case with him "that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." Such is the sentence of all, whether rich or poor, who set their heart on the vanities of this present life, instead of laying up their treasures in heaven. "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." In the hour when thou hast been used to calculate thy gains or to enjoy thy pleasures, at the time when the companions of thy folly are engaged in like mirth or covetousness, then shall the soul which thou hast neglected be summoned, ill prepared as it is, to stand before the judgment seat of Christ.

But not so is the end of the devout Christian; not such his summons to the presence of his Lord. Death comes not to him unlooked for, finds not him making provision for the flesh. Nor does his sentence proclaim him for a fool, but for a good and faithful servant. If he have ground, and it bring forth plentifully, so much the more large is his bounty, so much the more lively is his thankfulness, so much the more earnest is his preparation, that he may give an account of his stewardship. If he be poor, he is contented with his station; not craving for more goods and fruits on earth, but watching with hope and joy, that he may attain to an heavenly inheritance. In either state of life it is his endeavour, not to lay up "treasure for himself," not to secure all that he can for his own enjoyment, but so to use what he has, for the good of others, that he may be counted "rich toward God." The things which he has provided shall still be his. The treasure in heaven, which he has laboured to lay up, will make him rich for evermore. He is "rich toward God," through Jesus Christ; rich in the graces of the Gospel; rich in a lively faith; rich in a holy practice. He is rich through merits not his own, in wealth which no work of his could earn; rich in that heavenly inheritance which the love of Almighty God has prepared for believers in his blessed Son.

Christ teacheth how to view worldly wealth.

22 And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, ¹ Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on.

23 The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment.

24 Consider the ravens: for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; and God feedeth them: how much more are ye better than the fowls?

25 And which of you with taking thought can add to his stature one cubit?

26 If ye then be not able to do that thing which is least, why take ye thought for the rest?

¹ Matt. 6. 25.

27 Consider the lilies how they grow: they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

28 If then God so clothe the grass, which is to day in the field, and to morrow is cast into the oven: how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith?

29 And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, || neither be ye of doubtful mind.

30 For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things.

31 But rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you.

|| Or, live not in careful suspense.

§ 226. Why we must not take thought for this life.

In the parable of the rich man, whose ground brought forth plentifully, we have seen the folly of covetousness. We are now to consider what is the disposition with regard to wealth, which, as Christians, we may rightly entertain. It is described by the words "Take no thought." And this means, that we should not harass ourselves with anxious care about our life, what we shall eat, neither for the body, what we shall put on. We must not make this our main study. We must not allow it the place uppermost in our thoughts. The reasons follow: first, because the life is "more than meat, and the body" "than raiment." So that if God has given life, we may rely on it He will provide also food and raiment. Or we may be content without, if He provide it not, rather than be oppressed with anxiety and carefulness. Secondly, we should consider the ravens, which, without any forethought, such as we possess, to gather into barns, yet are fed by our heavenly Father, with little pains of their own. If then we are, as we probably suppose ourselves, better than the fowls, we should trust, that with due industry on our own part, God will give us also all such things as are needful. Thirdly, let us observe how little we gain by the anxiety which is here condemned. The most intense application of our faculties will not help us so much as to add one cubit to our stature. Though we obtain the food we long for, we cannot insure that it will minister to our nourishment and growth. This we must, after all, leave to God, who "giveth the increase." 1 Cor. 3. 7. And why should we not in like manner trust to Him for the increase of the food which He makes to nourish us? Fourthly, we should consider the very herbage and wild flowers, which with no toil of theirs are more finely arrayed than Solomon in all his glory. Yet these, we know, are even more shortlived than man. How much more then will He be sure to clothe us!

Now in all this it is plainly implied that, though we take no care, we must commit no waste, and indulge in no idleness; that, notwithstanding God's bounty, yet "if any would not work, neither should he eat." 2 Thess. 3. 10. The ravens are not fed without exerting for their support such powers as God has given them. Nor must man expect his providential blessing without labouring, according to his ability, for the supply of all natural wants. They who are duly diligent to day, are the least likely to be distressed about the morrow. They who to day are most idle and extravagant, when the morrow comes will be most full of care. Our Lord does not here preach against due diligence, but against that worldly anxiety which comes of a doubtful mind, that is to say of a feeble faith. And against this He warns us, on purpose that He may the better enforce the true Christian disposition, to seek rather "the kingdom of God." Let but this have its due place as first in our thoughts, and we shall have no difficulty in attaining a right frame of mind in regard to worldly wealth. We shall see clearly of how little value it is in comparison; how little worth our making ourselves unhappy for its sake; how surely, if we seek first things heavenly, these others will be by God bestowed on us, in such measure as He knows to be for the best. And thus we shall be at once thankful for what we have, and content that we have no more; not slothful in business, because we serve the Lord; see Rom. 12. 11, and yet not over careful in it, because we hope to share his glory.

Oh, never may we take that anxious thought for any thing this world can yield, which would distract our wavering hearts from the love of God our Saviour! Never may we forget that to God we owe the life we are so careful to support! Never may we fail to trust that He who created will much more preserve! Never may we neglect the work which He has given us to do, whilst we busy ourselves in that which He has reserved for Himself! Never may we be either cumbered with care, or overtaken in neglect; never hurried, and yet never slothful; but always seeking the kingdom of God, always patient in the work of the Lord!

Christ teacheth to watch.

32 Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

33 Sell that ye have, and give alms; ¹ provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth.

34 For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

35 ² Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning;

36 And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately.

37 Blessed are those servants, whom the lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them.

38 And if he shall come in the second watch, or come in the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants.

39 And ³ this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have suffered his house to be broken through.

40 Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not.

¹ Matt. 6. 20.² 1 Pet. 1. 13.³ Matt. 24. 43.§ 227. Further arguments against a worldly mind.

These are further arguments from our Lord, in behalf of the duty He has been here enforcing, that, in preference to all earthly things, we should seek first the kingdom of God. First, He tells us, for our encouragement, that it is our Father's good pleasure to give us that kingdom. Nor can any topic be better suited to allay our unchristian fears. It is God's good pleasure. He willeth not the death of a sinner. There is joy in the presence of his angels. In our faithful obedience to his will, in our final enjoyment of his mercy, there is the fulfilment of his own good pleasure. Why then should we fear, either for this world or the next? Why be careful for that maintenance, which God designs to provide? Why doubtful of that inheritance, which it is his delight to give?

Secondly, He instructs us how, by the right use of our worldly means, we may provide ourselves bags which wax not old, even a treasure in the heavens which faileth not. This He thus expresses, "Sell that ye have, and give alms." And the reason follows, "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The reason serves to explain, as well as to enforce, the precept. And though the wants of our brethren may now seldom require us to part with what we use ourselves, yet must we so place our treasure in heaven, as that, to increase what we have there, we would gladly give up what we have here. We must renounce all the selfish satisfactions of wealth. We must regard it as if we had parted with it. Nay, we must readily give up a great portion of what we have; keeping little for ourselves here, that we may find much hereafter. How else can our hearts be in heaven? Know we not that, wherever we have property, thither our thoughts frequently are turned? Do we not continually experience that, wherever we have any treasure, as a friend for instance, or a child, though at a distance, there our affections are engaged? Unless then we have treasure in heaven, unless we are persuaded that when we leave this life we shall enter into a heavenly inheritance, how can we have any pleasure in the thought of dying? how can our heart be in heaven? And how, if it be not, how can we expect to be ever there ourselves? How can we reckon to be admitted to joys for which we have no desire? to the company of those for whom we have no love?

Thirdly, the more to turn our thoughts to our eternal inheritance, our Lord reveals this awakening truth; "the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not." Not merely at a time, when we do not think of his coming, but at a time when we think He will not come; when most in careless ease we reckon ourselves secure from his approach, then does our Lord return, as from the wedding He has been solemnizing in heaven with his church; then does He knock, and require that we be ready to open unto Him immediately. If we knew just when He would come, it would be easy to be ready; as it would be easy to make preparations against thieves in the night, if a man had notice at what hour their attempt would be made. But it is Christ's rule, in the summons of our death, and judgment, to come at an hour when we think not. And it is his promise to his servants, that "if he shall come in the second watch, or in the third watch, and find them watching, blessed are those servants."

They then are blessed who in his absence are continually looking out for his return. And their blessedness is thus described: "he shall gird himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them." He shall treat them not as servants but as friends; receive them, as those whom He well loves, with most kind attention; and satisfy them with the plenteousness of his goodness, in the mansions of eternal bliss. Oh, who that hopes for such a feast as this, who would not watch for the hour of its beginning? Who could forbear reckoning tedious the time, which keeps him from the presence of a Lord so good? Who could think of any other object till it comes? Who could help having his loins always girt, and his light always burning; making all preparation, and hastening with all speed that his thoughts can compass, or his strength admit?

Christ teacheth to be always ready.

41 Then Peter said unto him, Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even to all?

42 And the Lord said, Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?

43 Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing.

44 Of a truth I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath.

45 But and if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to beat the menservants and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken;

46 The lord of that servant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will || cut him in sunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers.

47 And that servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

48 But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes. For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will ask the more.

|| Or, cut him off.

§ 228. The danger and sin of delay.

We may take these words for an explanation of the parable, as St. Peter calls it, in the passage preceeding; and especially as enforcing the application of that parable: "Be ye therefore ready also: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not." Ver. 40. For any servant, however gross his negligence, would be sure to put all things right, if he knew the exact time when his master would return. But in this case we should not reckon that he had truly repented. We should see clearly that the change from misconduct to his duty arose, not from love to his master, but from fear of detection. How vain then is it to put off our own amendment till in sickness, or affliction, or old age, we shall have, as we are, apt to reckon, some more certain notice of our Lord's coming! Even if we were sure of such notice, we have no certainty that we should the better repent on its arrival. For we daily see men indifferent to the saving of their souls, under those very circumstances of warning which appear to ourselves most striking.

And further we learn here, not only that we are not likely to have any such notice, but also that the more we rely on it, the less likely we are to have it. For, observe, it is especially true of those, who reckon with security on such leisure for amendment, it is especially true of these, that their end comes suddenly upon them. It is "if that servant say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming;" "the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware." Whatever then be our chief head of offence; whether it be smiting our fellow servants, that is, oppression or unkindness to each other; or whether eating and drinking with the drunken, that is, a sensual, slothful, worldly life; if in any of these things we wilfully persist, on the presumption that at some future time we may easily have recourse to the mercy of God; we have so much the less reason to expect any such opportunity to be granted us, we are so much the more sure to be surprised unawares by Him, who has declared of every such presumptuous servant, that He will "cut him in sunder, and appoint him his portion with the unbelievers."

It is the peculiar aggravation of such a case as this, that it is sin against light and knowledge. The purpose of repenting at some future occasion, implies of necessity, that we now know ourselves to be wrong; that we know so much of our Lord's will as to know that we are not doing it. We cannot say we were in ignorance if we were intending all the while to do better at some future time. We cannot be ignorant that idleness is sin, if we now purpose to be hereafter more industrious. We cannot help now knowing that covetousness is idolatry, if we now purpose to turn away at some future period from that fondness for wealth which we at present allow. Thus good resolutions, if unfulfilled, are sure witnesses to rise up against us in the day of judgment, and condemn us. Thus does the act of putting off this duty both prove that we know we ought to do it, and aggravate the sinfulness of not doing it. Whenever therefore we are tempted to say, in any way, in our hearts, "My Lord delayeth his coming;" whenever we are inclined to say it, by way of encouraging ourselves to continue in sin; let us remember, that besides a more sudden summons of death, we provoke also by such conduct a more severe measure of punishment. We are in the condition of those to whom much is given, and of whom therefore much will be required: who know their Lord's will and who therefore, if they prepare not accordingly, will be beaten with many stripes.

Lord, never let us count slackness as men count slackness; see 2 Pet. 3. 9; but as knowing that Thou art longsuffering to all, let us endeavour to profit by the time Thou sparest us! Let us study how best to give to all their portion out of what Thou hast entrusted to our care! Let us strive to do so now, that, whensoever Thou comest, we may be found so doing! And the more Thou hast committed to us, either of means or graces, the more of honour let us daily offer, by their due improvement unto Thee.

Christ preacheth to the disciples and to the people.

49 I am come to send fire on the earth; and what will I, if it be already kindled?

50 But I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I || straitened till it be accomplished!

51 ¹ Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division:

52 For from henceforth there shall be five in one house divided, three against two, and two against three.

53 The father shall be divided against the son, and the son against the father; the mother against the daughter, and the daughter against the mother; the mother in law against her daughter in law, and the daughter in law against her mother in law.

54 And he said also to the people, ² When ye see a cloud arise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is.

55 And when ye see the south wind blow, ye say, There will be heat; and it cometh to pass.

56 Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?

57 Yea, and why even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?

58 ³ When thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, as thou art in the way, give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison.

59 I tell thee thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last † mite.

|| Or, pained.

¹ Matt. 10. 34.

² Matt. 16. 2.

³ Matt. 5. 25.

† See Mark 12. 42.

§ 229. How by right judgment we might avoid divisions.

This passage contains three important lessons. The first, addressed by Christ to the disciples, is this, that his Gospel will not insure us a peaceable life in this present world. It will indeed, if we truly believe, give us peace in ourselves. But, owing to the evil passions of those, amongst whom true believers live, it will often expose them to persecution and strife from without. The disciples at the first misunderstood the nature of Christ's kingdom. And we may conclude, from the words here addressed to them, that they looked for its immediate establishment amongst mankind, in all outward ease and prosperity. To this notion our Lord opposes his assertion. "I am come to send fire upon the earth," to provoke the fire of persecution, from the evil towards the good; to animate the struggle of truth against falsehood. "I have a baptism to be baptized with;" I have myself great sufferings to undergo. "I am come to give," not peace, but "division;" to reveal truths of such supreme importance, that members of the same family shall be at variance with each other, according to their belief or disbelief of my word. This then should prevent us from ever setting up our rest in this world. It should teach us that our inheritance is elsewhere. It should account to us for the divisions which prevail amongst professing Christians, that they come of man's perversity, and must needs come whilst man is perverse; that they come also of the importance of the things disputed, and are a proof that they are felt to be important. An utter indifference to all points disputed in religion, argues no great reverence for religion itself. These disputes we should be most reluctant to encourage, most anxious to allay. But in the matters disputed we should be most zealous for the prevalence of truth. We should be deeply concerned to have all of one mind. And whilst we seek to win with kindness those who are divided, we should "mark them which cause divisions," "and avoid them." Rom. 16. 17.

"And he said also to the people, When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is." Here, secondly, He signifies that they paid more attention to the signs of the weather, than to these proofs of his coming, which they refused to discern. And these words well reprove those amongst ourselves, who are in like manner dull to the signs of Christ, slow to apprehend the time of their visitation; who apply to their worldly business or pursuits more patience, more ability and skill, than to the judging of what is right in faith and practice. Never then let us so waste those faculties which God has given us on objects which perish with the using, whilst we neglect to apply our understanding to the truth which can make wise unto salvation. If the children of light were thus wise in their generation, there would be less room for division in their creeds. If they were to apply their whole ability to the discovery of truth, why might they not as thoroughly agree about the things of heaven, as about the things of earth? Why not have as little controversy about the necessity of works unto faith, and of faith unto salvation, as they have about the needfulness of honesty and diligence for worldly wealth and worldly character?

And, thirdly, if we were to judge thus rightly, if we thus estimated all things as they really are, we should see at once the urgent necessity of a prompt and hearty repentance. We are here as on the way to a magistrate. We are placed and we ought to feel that we are so, on our trial. Our adversary is hastening to plead against us the very sins he has seduced us to commit. If now we could really see this to be the case, what diligence should we give to be delivered! What depth of contrition should we feel, what hearty amendment should we instantly commence; that we might avoid the prison, which we can never leave, and be forgiven a debt, which we can never pay!

God deliver us from that adversary, whom we cannot by our own strength escape! God help us to judge of our own selves that which is right! God give us amidst dissension, peace; and amongst the lukewarm, zeal!

Christ preacheth repentance. The barren fig tree.

1 There were present at that season some that told him of the Galilæans, whose blood Pilate had mingled with their sacrifices.

2 And Jesus answering said unto them, Suppose ye that these Galilæans were sinners above all the Galilæans, because they suffered such things?

3 I tell you, Nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

4 Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem?

5 I tell you, Nay; but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

6 He spake also this parable; A certain man had a fig tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none.

7 Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig tree, and find none: cut it down; why cumbereth it the ground?

8 And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it:

9 And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down.

|| Or, debtors.

§ 230. That the impenitent sinner will be utterly destroyed.

The Galilæans here spoken of were probably in rebellion against the Roman government, and for this cause put to death by Pilate, in the midst of their sacrificing. The tower of Siloam was a tower in the wall of Jerusalem, which fell, and caused the death of eighteen persons. We learn from our Lord's remark on these occasions, not to judge harshly of those who suffer by the more awful accidents of life; not to attribute their sudden end to any special transgressions of theirs, beyond the sinfulness of their fellow creatures. For though all suffering be God's chastisement for sin, it is made under the Gospel dispensation, a token of God's love to the afflicted. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth." Heb. 12. 6. And this should serve to convince us of how slight moment is any thing we can endure on earth, when compared with what we hope in heaven. Thus, from the most extreme sufferings of our neighbours, we can draw no other conclusion, than a warning to ourselves to repent. It can never prove them to have been greater sinners. It should always move us, sinners as we know ourselves to be, to repent without delay. It should make us feel that we are never for a moment safe from death; except so far as, through faith in Christ, we are saved from its sting. For though we perish not thus instantly, our destruction, if we repent not, is not the less sure in the end. "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish;" as surely, if not as suddenly, our end, if we be impenitent, shall overtake us with destruction.

To make this the more plain, Jesus sets forth the parable of the barren fig tree, under which is represented the more usual dispensation of God's providence to mankind; more usual than very sudden destruction. We are, each of us, as this fig tree, planted in God's vineyard; placed for a while in this church of his; in order that, when He cometh, He may find in us good fruit. "And he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none." How many times must this have been our own sad case! How many times must the eye of God have discerned in our hearts, for devotion vain profession, for practice empty purposes, a worldly instead of a heavenly mind, pride instead of humility, strife instead of love. One there is who makes intercession for us, saying, "Lord, let it alone this year also;" hitherto effectually; but how much longer who dare say? Who but must tremble to think what pains that Holy One has already taken; what labour of love He has expended; what godly motions of his Holy Spirit He has imparted to our hearts in vain!

Certain it is, from his word here set down, that after a time He intercedes no more. "If it bear fruit," said He, "well: and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down." The time of trial is short. It is but as one year to the fig tree. The end, when it comes, is only the more severe, if the respite have been granted in vain. Let us remember then that two things are before us, either to bear fruit, either to glorify God's grace by holiness and love, or to be cut down, and cast out into unquenchable fire. "After that thou shalt cut it down." These are the words of the intercessor Himself. They are the sentence which the Saviour of mankind has uttered, as a warning to the very people He has saved. He has gained for them time. He has given them opportunity. He has secured for them grace for help unto holiness, and pardon on repentance for sin. But He has acknowledged also, that if they notwithstanding refuse to bring forth good fruit, the claims of justice must be fulfilled. The glory of God, if men will not magnify it in their conversion, must be made manifest in their condemnation. This destruction is what we daily see in the order of divine providence. The tree which proves fruitless is rooted up. The useless or inconvenient habitation is pulled down to make room for a house more suitable. Hundreds of seeds are produced for one that ever grows into a plant. Of insects and animals, hundreds fall a prey to each other, for one that proves useful to mankind. Yet in these things there can be no waste, for not a sparrow falls to the ground without our heavenly Father. See Matt. 10. 29. So is it in the destruction of the sinner that is impenitent. For of such hath the Saviour of mankind pronounced, "Thou shalt cut it down." It is God's doing; and therefore it is just. It is the sentence of Christ; and therefore it is surely good. It is best for God's glory. It is most for the good of man. It is in harmony with the will of Him who loved us, and gave Himself for us.

Christ healeth on the sabbath: speaketh in parables.

10 And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath.

11 And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself.

12 And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity.

13 And he laid his hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.

14 And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the sabbath day, and said unto the people, There are six days in which men ought to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the sabbath day.

15 The Lord then answered him, and said, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering?

16 And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the sabbath day?

17 And when he had said these things, all his adversaries were ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

18 Then said he, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto shall I resemble it?

19 It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took, and cast into his garden; and it grew, and waxed a great tree: and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it.

20 And again he said, Whereunto shall I liken the kingdom of God?

21 It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three || measures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

22 And he went through the cities and villages, teaching, and journeying toward Jerusalem.

¹ Matt. 13. 31.

|| See Matt. 13. 33.

² Matt. 9. 35.

§ 231. That the influence of the Gospel should be progressive.

The miracle here related was wrought by our Lord without any application from the woman. "He was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath. And, behold, there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years. And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him." This shews how unjustly the ruler of the synagogue found fault with the people, as though they had pressed to be healed on the sabbath day. And it signifies also how graciously God doth, in Christ, bestow his gifts of grace, beyond what we desire, as well as above what we deserve. And here we should note under what circumstances the woman met with this unlooked for mercy. She was in the synagogue on the sabbath day. She was in the path of duty, observing, to the best of her knowledge, the ordinances of God. She was keeping holy the sabbath day. Let us take care that we observe this day as it is enforced in the Gospel of Christ. Let us spend it in a diligent attendance on the ministry of the church, in patient study of God's word, and in lifting up the soul to heaven by the exercise of prayer and praise. Then will He, who is still with us where two or three are gathered together in his name, call us unto Him, and loose us of our spiritual infirmities; even make us to stand upright in God's sight.

"The ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation." Strange that in a world abounding in distress, there should be found any indignant at beholding it relieved! But so fares it often with the proud and selfish. They are jealous of good done by any one but themselves. And they often frame some objection, as did this "hypocrite," to plead instead of the real reason, which they are ashamed to own. But see how our Lord exposes the folly of our censuring others, when we are open to censure ourselves. There was not one in that synagogue, not excepting the ruler, but would loose each sabbath day his beast from the stall, "and lead him away to watering." They understood therefore for themselves that such necessary labour was no profanation of the sabbath. Yet in Jesus they were ready to condemn a work of much more urgent necessity, the loosing of a daughter of Abraham from a long continued infirmity. Let us remember that the same Lord, who exposed this inconsistency in the ruler, can see it no less clearly wheresoever it exists. And against all who so offend, He will no less severely pronounce in the day of judgment, "Thou hypocrite." Since then Christ will thus put all his adversaries to shame, let us endeavour to be numbered amongst those who rejoice for all the glorious things that are done by Him. Let his Gospel in our hearts, however small may have been its influence at the first, pervade at length, each thought and feeling. Let it be to us as the seed that grew, and waxed a great tree, as the leaven that leavened the whole of the meal; a shelter in the storms of life, a secret vigour in the bonds of death. And let us endeavour to promote this happy influence of the Gospel as widely as we can throughout the world. Let us hope that the tree of truth, once rooted in our hearts, may be extended by our means amongst our neighbours; that the leaven of grace, with which we once are leavened, may not stop short of leavening all mankind. We cannot too often call to mind how greatly this depends upon ourselves. We cannot think too humbly of our own importance, or too highly of that divine wisdom, which out of the very smallest seed can raise so large a tree, which by means of each single particle of leaven, by each action of the least of Christ's disciples, can leaven so many measures of meal, can influence for good so many hearts of men.

Christ exhorteth to strive; reproveth Herod.

23 Then said one unto him, Lord, are there few that be saved? And he said unto them,

24 ¹ Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.

25 When once the master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door, and ye begin to stand without, and to knock at the door, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he shall answer and say unto you, I know you not whence ye are:

26 Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets.

27 ² But he shall say, I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

28 There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth, when ye shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets, in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out.

29 And they shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down in the kingdom of God.

¹ Matt. 7. 13.

² Matt. 7. 23.

30 ³ And, behold, there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last.

31 The same day there came certain of the Pharisees, saying unto him, Get thee out, and depart hence: for Herod will kill thee.

32 And he said unto them, Go ye, and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures to day and to morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected.

33 Nevertheless I must walk to day, and to morrow, and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem.

34 ⁴ O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not?

35 Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

³ Matt. 19. 30.

⁴ Matt. 23. 37.

§ 232. That to die is being perfected.

How many shall be saved, it was not our Lord's purpose here to answer. Only He lets us know that there are many who "shall not be able," as well as many who "shall sit down in the kingdom of God." But chiefly He here tells us, for the instruction of all, that the gate to heaven is strait, and that none can enter in except they strive. A life of ease then is not a Christian life. A life of resting as we are, is not a Christian life. And this we shall find to be the case at that hour when the master of the house shall shut to the door. To eat and drink in his presence, to acknowledge Him for Lord in our daily meals, to have Him teach in our streets, to hear his word continually preached, these things may indeed encourage many to knock at the door, and to say, "Lord, Lord, open to us." But if our religion have consisted in mere form, in hearing without doing, in prayer and praise without devotion and zeal, we must expect no other answer at that day, than "Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity." Let us learn then ever to strive unto the very end of life. Let us feel, that if we strive not, we cannot be right. Let us consider in charity of others, that they often may be striving when we cannot see; and let us in humility acknowledge of ourselves, how often we are not striving when it is thought that we are. Then shall we be not surprised to be told that "there are last which shall be first;" sinners most vile who shall in the end be saved. Then shall we feel not unconcerned to hear, that there are also "first which shall be last:" professors, esteemed most eminent, who shall be lost for ever.

When the Pharisees tried to alarm our Saviour by the mention of Herod, He expressed his resolution to work miracles notwithstanding Herod's cruelty and cunning. "To day and tomorrow," He expresses it; meaning each day of his short continuance on earth. "And the third day I shall be perfected;" meaning that he should soon depart from this present world. Here let us also resolve to continue patient in well doing, however many be the perils that beset our success. Let us in our purposes work not only to morrow, but to day, "whilst it is called to day;" Heb. 3. 13: and to morrow, if to morrow we be spared; let us work the good work which Christ has set us here to do; let us lead the good life of holiness and love which He has led before. Then shall we also the third day be perfected. When our days shall end, their end shall be eternity. Death shall be to us the conclusion of all that here is evil, the perfecting of all that here is good.

In Jerusalem that is on earth, iniquity is still permitted to abound. Her prophets still encounter opposition. Her children still perversely refuse, when Christ would gather them together, "as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings." He uses not force, but hope and fear and love; He exhorts, He promises, He prays. But they will not. That will which He has imparted to them they abuse against Himself. But not so is it in the heavenly Jerusalem. Not so will it be with us when we "shall be perfected." There God's will shall be our will also. There his glory will be our joy. His goodness will then be the pattern of our own. And this if we now know and feel, how joyfully should we say, from our inmost hearts, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Blessed is He that cometh, and blessed is the day when He shall appear! Blessed is the hour when they who through faith have loved, shall enter with Him into their heavenly inheritance!

Christ healeth the dropsy: preacheth humility.

1 And it came to pass as he went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the sabbath day, that they watched him.

2 And, behold, there was a certain man before him which had the dropsy.

3 And Jesus answering spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the sabbath day?

4 And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go;

5 And answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the sabbath day?

6 And they could not answer him again to these things.

7 And he put forth a parable to those which were

¹ Prov. 26. 6, 7.

§ 233. That we should esteem others better than ourselves.

Here we read that our Lord "went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the sabbath day." And afterwards it is said, "he put forth a parable to those which were bidden, when he marked how they chose out the chief rooms." So that the Pharisees allowed themselves on the sabbath day to feast their friends and acquaintances, though they would not have had Jesus so much as heal the sick. Well may we hence take warning against straining at a gnat in the case of others, while for ourselves we are swallowing a camel; see Matt. 23. 24; against pulling out a mote from our brother's eye, when we have, all the while, a beam in our own. See Matt. 7. 3, 4, 5.

Our Lord is said to have answered these Pharisees about healing on the sabbath, though we hear not of their having spoken on the subject. For thoughts are to Him as plain as words; and whether we speak, or hold our peace, He hears. "And they held their peace." Not out of humility, but in sullenness; not because they were unwilling, but unable to gainsay our Lord's conclusion. There is a time when silence is a duty. There is a time when to hold our peace is sin. When we ought to own ourselves in the wrong, when we ought to give glory unto God or to ask forgiveness of each other; then, let us remember, that not to speak at all may convict us, before God, of no less pride and malice, than the utterance of anger or conceit. "And he took him, and healed him, and let him go." The contradiction of sinners should be no obstacle to our doing good. Whether by silence or by words of provocation, whether by opposing, or only refusing to help, they would discourage us in our works of Christian love, our best of answers is to do the good they civil at, to heal the evil they complain of, but allow.

Besides justifying his practice of doing good on the sabbath day, and healing the man afflicted with a dropsy, our Lord designed also, in his visit to this Pharisee, to provide an antidote against pride, that dropsy of the soul, which thirsts ever the more painfully, the more freely it is indulged. And his rule is, that in lowliness of mind we esteem others better than ourselves. See Phil. 2. 3. For this is meant by our going and sitting down in the lowest room. This world is the place of the entertainment here described. God it is who bids both us and all around us to plenty, peace, and welcome. He it is who gives us nourishment both of body and of soul; He who assigns success to diligence, to prayer the gifts of grace; He who insures to them, who leave all for Christ, either abundance in this present world, or, if little, contentment with that little. But at this feast He suffers each to take, as it were, in his own mind, his own place. We sit down according as we are proud or humble, either in the chief rooms or in the lowest; we count ourselves worthy of greater or of less honour than God has allotted to us; we say to ourselves, either how much better or how much worse am I off, than I deserve, in comparison with my neighbours. Thus whatever place God has given us, we are apt, in our imaginations, to take another for ourselves; higher, if we be highminded; but it must be lower, if, in lowliness of mind, we would esteem others better than ourselves.

Let us then mark here the sentence of Him who has invited us. To the proud it is, "Give this man place." To the humble it is, "Friend, go up higher." Thus does He say often in this present world. Often here does He "put down the mighty from their seat, and exalt the humble and meek." See Luke 1. 52. But it is in the visitation of the last day; it is when He "shall judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained," Acts 17. 31, by that blessed Son, who for our sakes became the servant of all: then it is that whosoever has here exalted himself shall be utterly abased; then he, who has here humbled himself, shall be exalted for evermore. And this humility, let us remember, must be in the heart. Mere worldly courtesy may make us take the lowest seat. We must do more; we must think that it best fits us. Mere pride may make us affect to be condescending. We must do more; we must feel ourselves too low to condescend.

God give us, if our estate be high, the grace to think lowly of ourselves! And if our estate be low, God make our hearts still lower!

Christ teacheth to feast the poor. The parable of the supper.

12 Then said he also to him that bade him, When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbours; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee.

13 But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind:

14 And thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.

15 And when one of them that sat at meat with him heard these things, he said unto him, Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

16 Then said he unto him, A certain man made a great supper, and bade many:

17 And sent his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready.

18 And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it: I pray thee have me excused.

19 And another said, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excused.

20 And another said, I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come.

21 So that servant came, and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house being angry said to his servant, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind.

22 And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and there is room.

23 And the lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled.

24 For I say unto you, That none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper.

¹ Tob. 4. 7.

² Rev. 19. 9.

³ Matt. 22. 2.

§ 234. The peril of abusing things lawful.

It was at a feast, and in the house of a Pharisee, that our Lord spake these words. He takes the occasion for explaining what feast we may best give, and whom we may best invite. And He turns the attention of the guests, from the supper they were then eating, to the kingdom of God; to that heavenly feast, from which so many pray to be excused, though there is in it ample room for all. Let us learn at whatever house we are, and in whatever business engaged, always to turn our thoughts, and often our conversation, to that holiness which should be every man's main business; to that heaven, which should be every man's dearest hope.

We have here a comparison between two methods of making a dinner or a supper. "Call not thy friends," but "call the poor," means, if thou wouldest call thy friends, much more call the poor. Christ forbids not our entertaining those who can invite us in return; but He urges us to consider how much more important as a religious duty, is the providing for the maimed, the lame, the blind. The one we do readily enough, for our own present pleasure. The other He would have us do, out of regard to that recompense, which will not be given till the resurrection of the just. For this it is that proves our faith in what is now unseen. This it is which shews whether or no we love Him, who considers as done unto Himself whatsoever good we do unto one of the least of these his brethren. And here observe to what degree this hospitality towards the poor must extend. Christ bids us to do the one, and not the other, Can this possibly mean less, than that we should spend, in the doing of good, more time, more thought, more money, or money's worth, than in the feasting those who in return feast us.

"One of them that sat at meat with him" seems to have understood our Lord to promise at the resurrection of the just, some such feast as he was now partaking of. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." Christ teaches therefore that a great supper is but a figure of the felicity hereafter to be enjoyed; representing the abundance of God's mercy provided for mankind, and furnishing also a striking illustration of our frequent neglect and perversity. "They all with one consent began to make excuse." This is no more than what takes place daily in this Christian land. God invites us to his supper. For our satisfying, He has prepared the good things of the Gospel. Purity and humility and zeal, faith and hope and charity; these He has set before us. These He has put within our reach. With these He would fain nourish our empty souls. "Come; for all things are now ready." This is what He says daily by his word, by his servants the ministers of Christ, by the ordinances which He deals out through their hands, to that church which is his chosen company.

But how many does He thus invite without success! The purchase of ground, the proving of oxen, the marrying of a wife, what are these but the very cares of the world, which at this hour, with this very passage before their eyes, men still dare unblushingly to plead, for the neglect of Christian privileges? And what is it that in these things is sinful? Not the having them, or the doing them; but the neglecting for their sake the love of Christ, which is the one thing needful. Things lawful are thus full of peril to the soul, if they tempt us to reply to any bidding of our Lord, "Therefore I cannot come;" if they bring us under that fearful sentence: "None of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper." When we reflect on the fulfilment of these words, as against the whole nation of the Jews, let us study to escape from them ourselves. And, whilst we thankfully enjoy the many blessings which God allows us here to use, let us never suffer them to displace in our affections the heaven which He has revealed to our faith.

Christ teacheth perseverance. The parable of the salt.

25 And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and said unto them,

26 ¹ If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple.

27 And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple.

28 For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first, and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it?

29 Lest haply, after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finish it, all that behold it begin to mock him,

30 Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finish.

31 Or what king, going to make war against another king, sitteth not down first, and consulteth whether he be able with ten thousand to meet him that cometh against him with twenty thousand?

32 Or else, while the other is yet a great way off, he sendeth an ambassage, and desireth conditions of peace.

33 So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple.

34 ² Salt is good: but if the salt have lost his savour, wherewith shall it be seasoned?

35 It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

¹ Matt. 10. 37.

² Matt. 5. 13.

§ 235. How a Christian must hate, and what.

It was when great multitudes went with Him, that Christ "turned, and said unto them, If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." This then is not a counsel, addressed exclusively to the more eminent in piety, but one which concerns all Christians without exception. All He would have to live at enmity with the world, at once estranged from its pleasures, and averse to any excessive indulgence in its allowed and allowable affections. All He would have to take up their cross; all to count the cost of being Christians: even as one who builds a tower, or a king who goes to war, is used first to consider how much he must expend. How ill do we comply with this advice, if we study rather to conceal from ourselves the amount of our obligations! How far must we be from being disciples of Christ, if we never give up, much less hate, simply for his sake, the practice of any single sin, or the society of any friend who inclines us to transgress!

Let us, then, no longer look only, or chiefly, to the immediate advantages of Christian conduct. Rather let us be prepared to obey Christ to our present harm and loss. Let us enter upon the calculation here forced on our attention. Let us consider what complete selfdenial and restraint, in regard to all which here we most love, is implied in this one word, hatred. And to what does this amount? That we should really hate either our kindred or any single fellow creature? Far from it. It is the express new commandment of our Lord, that we should all love one another. And especially He would have us love those most near to us, with a love far more excellent and pure, than without his Gospel we could ever have conceived. The precept then though literal, is comparative. We are to love our brethren, we are to love our kindred, even those who obey not Christ; but we are to love Him so much more deeply and devoutly, that, compared with the affection we owe to Him, our love to our best friends on earth is hatred. We must so love Him, that for his sake we would oppose, if needful, their wishes, reject their endearments, and even renounce their society. In short we must act as those who hate, and so as that they too, in their ignorance of our motives, will count us to be hating, though all the while we love most kindly. Thus we must act, however painfully to ourselves; nay, thus we ought to act with cheerfulness and joy; whenever we are thereto called by the love we owe to Christ.

These directions were most necessary to the early converts, who, at the first preaching of the Gospel were often opposed by their families and friends, in their desire to become disciples of Christ. Nay often their very lives were put in jeopardy, by their public profession of the Christian faith. But often also, in our own Christian community, the wishes of our friends are inconsistent with what we know of the commands of Christ. And in such a case how profitably might we bear in mind this rule of Christian enmity, thus directed against every thing that would entice us into sin! "Yea, and his own life also." Our very life, if it be a life of iniquity, and in proportion as it is employed, not in pleasing, but in offending God, our very life should be abomination in our own eyes. What thus we hate we should long to part with, to part with by changing it for the better. We should so hate our life of sin, as to labour in amending it: so hate our friends that would lead us astray, as to pray and strive for their conversion. Thus might our Christian hatred be all one with Christian love. Thus might we ourselves be as salt, at once to season others, and to maintain our own purity. And thus might we escape the being counted like salt that has lost its savour, fit only to be cast out.

God teach us so to love our Lord, that, compared with Him, we may hate all others! God make us so to hate what is evil, as to love that which is good! God help us to love both friends and enemies, even as Christ has loved us; in love to leave them when we ought, and when we may, in love also to return; in love to labour for their good, that good, the saving of the soul!

The parables of the lost sheep, and the piece of silver.

1 Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him.

2 And the Pharisees and scribes murmured, saying, This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them.

3 And he spake this parable unto them, saying,

4 'What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?

5 And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his shoulders, rejoicing.

6 And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, saying unto them, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost.

7 I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance.

8 Either what woman having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle, and sweep the house, and seek diligently till she find it?

9 And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.

10 Likewise, I say unto you there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth.

|| Matt. 18. 12.

|| Drachma, here translated a piece of silver, is the eighth part of an ounce, which cometh to seven pence half-penny, and is equal to the Roman penny, Matt. 18. 28.

§ 236. That God willeth not the death of a sinner.

We should first notice the occasion on which these parables were spoken by our Lord; it was when there "drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him." And though they were uttered in reply to the murmurs of the self righteous Pharisees, we may take them for a pattern of the kind of arguments, which Christ thought most effectual for the conviction of acknowledged sin, for the conversion of notorious sinners. When therefore we ourselves most deeply feel our own iniquity in the sight of God let us turn to these lively assurances of his readiness to forgive, of his satisfaction in forgiving. To represent to us these dealings of the Almighty, our Lord describes the joy which would be felt by a man, who, having lost one sheep out of a hundred should succeed in finding it; or by a woman, who out of ten pieces of silver should in like manner lose and find one. "Likewise, I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

This then is the main thing which these parables enforce; the willingness of God to forgive, not the proportion of mankind that go astray, which is neither as one to an hundred, nor as one to ten. Nay, "all we like sheep have gone astray." Isa. 53. 6. All we are lost; even the souls that were at the first stamped with God's image; all lost amidst the filth of sin; lost for ever, unless found in Christ. Neither, therefore, is it here implied, that there are in the world just persons, who need no repentance; either in the proportion of ninety nine to one, or indeed in any proportion at all. But this Christ here teaches, that God wills not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live; that God takes pains to recall us to his flock; that He looks for us, waits for us with all longsuffering; that He rejoices when we are found, even with such liveliness of joy as is felt on the recovery of what had been counted to be lost. Such at least is the joy felt by angels, such is the joy felt in their presence; and where they are, there God is; and where God is, there they have no joy but his.

What a motive, above all others, to constrain us to repent, is afforded by this declaration of our Lord! What a thought to affect our very hearts is this, that the good purposes we form are beheld with approbation by the heavenly host; that by turning them in earnest unto God, we may raise joy in that place where sorrow is unknown! How kind is that Almighty Father who deigns thus to represent to our faint apprehensions his readiness to receive us on our returning to his love! How ungracious, how perverse, must be that soul of man, that can hear these tidings, and not comprehend their meaning; can know them, and yet not joyfully receive them! Who but would have thought, that when we were at enmity with God, He must have been at enmity with us also? Who but would expect of One so great and good, that He must utterly abominate his rebellious creatures when grovelling in the mire of fleshly lusts, or when wandering in the maze of worldly cares, or wilful infidelity? But, behold, even in our most estranged condition, He looks with anxiety for our recovery! Behold even from our most grievous sins He receives us with joy on our return! Thus did He when Adam fell. Thus did He when in Adam all died. Thus does He in those sins of manifold infirmity which are daily committed even by his faithful people. He seeks us, ere ever we seek Him. He watches for us, whilst we think only of ourselves. Whilst we rest, He works in our behalf. Whilst we forget, He loves.

Oh, may we seek Him, who thus seeks us! May we return, whithersoever we have strayed; may we return with contrition to the fold we have deserted! In whatsoever we have been lost, or rather have lost ourselves, may we be found, found of God through Christ, found in Him, not having our own righteousness, but the righteousness which is of God, by faith! See Phil. 3.

The parable of the two sons.

11 And he said, A certain man had two sons:
 12 And the younger of them said to his father, Father, give me the portion of goods that falleth to me. And he divided unto them his living.

13 And not many days after the younger son gathered all together, and took his journey into a far country, and there wasted his substance with riotous living.

14 And when he had spent all, there arose a mighty famine in that land; and he began to be in want.

15 And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his fields to feed swine.

16 And he would fain have filled his belly with the husks that the swine did eat: and no man gave unto him.

17 And when he came to himself, he said, How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!

18 I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee,

19 And am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants.

20 And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him.

21 And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son.

§ 237. The progress of conversion.

The parable of the two sons is added to those of the lost sheep and piece of mancey, for our further encouragement unto effectual repentance. Let us not content ourselves with applying it to the case of the Gentiles and the Jews; the one reclaimed, and the other grudging their restoration to the favour of God. Neither let us suppose that it applies only to those amongst us who spend their substance in riotous living; that they especially have a title to the forgiveness here described, or that they only have occasion for the repentance here enforced. Have we not all received from our heavenly Father, as it were a goodly heritage, our life, our youth, our strength; all the opportunities of improvement, all the motions of grace, that have been imparted to us from our birth to this present hour? And have we not in many respects wasted these our goods in a country far from God? Have we not spent prodigally our precious time, in that which we now feel to be only vanity and vexation of spirit? Have we not experienced, after trying the pleasures or comforts of the world, that there is a mighty famine in that land, that in it there is nothing to satisfy the craving of the soul, nothing but as the husks which the swine do eat; even food which fits not the renewed man, treasures which make not his soul rich, joys which make not his soul happy? Have we not felt as if far from God; as if in want, and no one to relieve us; as if ruined, and lost, and dead? If this have been our case, and it is the case of every one, in proportion as he has to any degree indulged in sin; if these are our convictions, and they are the convictions of all, in proportion as they are enlightened by the truth; let us learn now what further is required of us, by considering what is here set down for our imitation, in the behaviour of the prodigal son.

First "he came to himself." This then is one step in our recovery. As long as we live at enmity with God we are no better than out of our senses. We have eyes, yet see not, ears have we yet hear not; reason, and yet cannot understand; sense, and yet cannot perceive. We doat on trifles. We neglect matters of most vital concern to us, death and judgment, heaven and hell. First then let us come to ourselves. Let us see in its true light the supreme necessity of caring for the soul, the supreme importance of that spiritual work, which our Lord has here given us to do. Next observe in the prodigal the reflection which he uttered, the resolution which he formed. "How many hired servants of my father's have bread enough and to spare, and I perish with hunger!" How large, let us consider, is God's mercy; how comprehensive his redeeming love; how boundless to all who seek his face are his promises, his gifts, his goodness! "I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son: make me as one of thy hired servants." How profitable is it in our sense of sin, how helpful to our contrition and amendment, still to regard God as a Father; still to bear in mind that He loves us; and, instead of trusting in any amendment of our own, to cast ourselves, with confession of unworthiness, on his mercy, and on the merits of our Saviour. But the prodigal not only said these words. He did what He resolved. "He arose and came to his father." And though received with all kindness by a forgiving parent, he neglected not his purpose of contrition, he professed himself, whilst in the arms of his reconciled parent, unworthy to be called his son.

Never then let us presume on mercy, either to sin beforehand, or, when forgiven, to cease from confession of our offences! Never let us forget, when we sin, that it is against heaven, and in the sight of God! Never let us doubt when we would wish to reform, that God is more ready to hear than we to pray, more willing to forgive than we to repent!

The parable of the two sons concluded.

22 But the father said to his servants, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet:

23 And bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry:

24 For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost and is found. And they began to be merry.

25 Now his elder son was in the field: and as he came and drew nigh to the house, he heard musick and dancing.

26 And he called one of the servants, and asked what these things meant.

27 And he said unto him, Thy brother is come; and thy father hath killed the fatted calf, because he hath received him safe and sound.

28 And he was angry, and would not go in: therefore came his father out, and importuned him,

29 And he answering, said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment: and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends:

30 But as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf.

31 And he said unto him, Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine.

32 It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found.

§ 238. How we should rejoice in the conversion of a sinner.

"Make me as one of thy hired servants," ver. 19. was part of what the younger son designed to say to his father. No condition seemed to himself too low for his deserts. So entirely ought we also, when convinced of sin, to humble our souls before God. But before he could complete his profession of unworthiness, the father interrupted him, and said to his servants, "Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him." No kindness seemed too great for the expression of his love. So glad is our heavenly Father to do more than we desire as well as more than we deserve! So kindly does He both invite us to Himself, and when we come, turn our shame to glory, our mourning into joy and gladness. Here too we see what things they are which cause pleasure in heaven, and which should chiefly therefore delight us whilst on earth; not wealth and plenty; not splendour, gaiety, or indulgence of the sense; but the victory of good over evil, the conversion of a sinner from the error of his way.

And yet these are things in which many seem to take no interest at all. Nay there are some, who like the elder brother here described, seem to grudge that any should share with themselves God's favour, and are sorry instead of glad, to think, that the prodigal and the profligate may be admitted through grace into the kingdom of heaven. These are they who conceive themselves, in their spiritual pride, to have served God more faithfully than their neighbours, and who eagerly enlarge upon the faults of others, as if they themselves must gain on the comparison. Like the labourers in the vineyard, they complain that such as have wrought less than themselves, should be allowed to receive as much. They ask, with the elder brother, what these things mean. They are angry; observe the folly of the proud! they dare to be angry with God. They refuse to go in. They think heaven itself scarce worth having, if there they should have to meet with such as they there despise.

This evil temper is exposed by our Lord, in all its deformity. He shews it to be directly opposite to that love which was his new commandment. He shews it to be inconsistent with what the elder son enjoyed of his father's daily favour. "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." How ungrateful then to say that nothing has been given thee, when thou hast every thing at thy disposal; thy brother's share having been already allotted, and what remains being as much thine, if saved for thee, as if given to thee now to spend. But being thine, it is thy duty to spend it on this occasion. "It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad;" we, out of that which is mine and thine. For else thou must transgress my commandment, to rejoice with them that do rejoice. See Rom. 12. 15. And with what friend shouldst thou be so ready to make merry, as with him whom thou hast called "this thy son," and who is therefore "this thy brother:" who "was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found."

However eminent then may have been our devotion, however long our service unto God, however high our expected commendation; all this, we here learn, we must expect to lose if we either rejoice over the iniquity of our brethren, or grieve their being pardoned in God's good time. For we should thus be in point of charity, defaulters no less than as in God's sight, than they have been in point of temperance or honesty, of meekness, purity, or truth. Let us rejoice therefore in the forgiveness of sinners, that thus we may insure our own. Let us rejoice in their behalf, when they do right. When they sin, let us be so truly grieved, that we can neither speak nor think of their offence without lively concern and reproof. And when, by God's grace they repent and amend, let us be so truly glad, that in our Father's house there is ample room for them and us. Let us be ready to hope that if we would be ourselves, there they may, through Christ, be also. This might we do, if we are always in charity with all mankind: if, like God, we love them that love not us, and those that love not Him. *

The unjust steward.

1 And he said also unto his disciples, There was a certain rich man, which had a steward; and the same was accused unto him that he had wasted his goods.

2 And he called him, and said unto him, How is it that I hear this of thee? give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

3 Then the steward said within himself, what shall I do? for my lord taketh away from me the stewardship: I cannot dig; to beg I am ashamed.

4 I am resolved what to do, that, when I am put out of the stewardship, they may receive me into their houses.

5 So he called every one of his lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my lord?

6 And he said, An hundred || measures of oil. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.

7 Then said he to another, And how much owest thou? And he said, An hundred † measures of wheat. And he said unto him, Take thy bill, and write four score.

8 And the lord commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely: for the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light.

9 And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the ‡ mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations.

|| The word Batus in the original containeth nine gallons three quarts.

† The word here interpreted a measure in the original containeth about fourteen bushels and a pottle.

‡ Or, riches.

§ 239. The right use of worldly goods.

We have elsewhere a lesson of heavenly wisdom from the conduct of an unjust judge. We have here another from an unjust steward. Whence we may take occasion to observe that there is no wickedness in this world which may not afford us some useful instruction, if only we take a right Christian view of it. God can in all cases bring good out of evil. And He would have us, for ourselves, derive from the sight of sin the resolutions of watchfulness in prayer, of prudence, and forethought in our heavenly calling.

This steward was accused of having wasted his master's goods. Let us remember, if we are guilty of the like offence in the talents God has committed to our charge, the same sentence will soon be sounded in our ears, "Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward." Under a lively apprehension of this summons, we may do well to say within ourselves, "What shall I do?" And we may do well to take a lesson for our behaviour, from the prudence, though not from the dishonesty, of the unjust steward. He was dismissed for wasting his master's goods; and he wasted them still further, that he might make to himself friends in his dismissal. He charged those who were in his master's debt, with sums less than what they owed. And his master, the rich man, here called "the lord, commended the unjust steward, because he had done wisely." This was giving him credit for cleverness, as any worldly minded master might have done; instead of blaming him for doing what was unjust. And this may shew us, how carefully we should refrain from speaking lightly of sin, whether we are masters or servants; how ill it becomes a Christian to praise that conduct as wise, which he ought rather to abhor as unjust.

Thus did the master of the steward, "the lord" who had been himself wronged by his servant's dishonesty. But what sentence is it that our Lord delivers on the occasion? Does He commend the unjust steward? Far from it. He remarks upon this conduct for the perpetual condemnation of the unjust, and of all kinds of transgressors; He remarks how much more wise are the children of this world, in their generation, than the children of light are in theirs. He adds, as his own practical application of the parable, after commenting on what "the lord" had said, "And I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations."

Here then we have both reproof for our spiritual foolishness, and instruction towards our increase in spiritual wisdom. Compared with the lovers of the world we take not so much pains for heavenly treasure, as they do for that which is on earth; we use not as much patience, labour, forethought, skill, for the crown of glory which fadeth not away, as they for the vanities of this present life, for what they shall eat, and what they shall drink, for things which perish in the using. This is our reproof; and our instruction follows. Whilst we think more of treasure in heaven, and less of our earthly goods, we should use these latter so as to help towards the former; so as to be the better prepared against the day, when it shall be said to all, whether diligent or idle, whether honest or unjust, "Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou mayest be no longer steward." It is not the steward who is held up to our imitation, but his forethought. Nor is even his forethought commended by our Lord, but mentioned as commended by his own master. It is not worldly wisdom that we are to learn from his behaviour; nor are they worldly friends that we are to make. For we are to make them by a Christian use of the mammon of unrighteousness, of those riches, talents, and time, which are commonly wasted in sinful indulgence. And the more we are wise in our generation, as children of light, the more we shall be inclined to seek for heaven, at all cost of our worldly riches, at all risk of losing our earthly friends.

Help us, Lord, to dig diligently, for the treasures which are at thy disposal! Make us not ashamed to beg for those good things, which Thou alone canst give!

Christ reproveth the covetous Pharisees.

10 He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much.

11 If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous || mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?

12 And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?

13 ¹ No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon.

14 And the Pharisees also, who were covetous,

|| Or, riches.

¹ Matt. 6. 24.

² Matt. 11. 12.

³ Matt. 5. 18.

⁴ Matt. 5. 32.

heard all these things: and they derided him.

15 And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men; but God knoweth your hearts: for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God.

16 ² The Law and the Prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.

17 ³ And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail.

18 ⁴ Whosoever putteth away his wife, and marrieth another, committeth adultery: and whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery.

§ 240. That the judgment of God differs from man's.

These verses, occurring between two parables, are in some measure connected with both; and help to point them the more forcibly against that love of riches which our Saviour here chiefly condemns. The moral of the whole chapter is this, that we should make a wise use of our present possessions, with a view to our everlasting habitations. And with this intent our Lord here argues, that our faithfulness in this unrighteous mammon is a fair test or trial, of whether we are fit or unfit to be entrusted with the riches of eternity. The one is indeed "least," in itself a trifle of no worth; the other "much," even more than we can desire or deserve. The one is "unrighteous;" as being usually spent in unrighteousness, or as being itself unjust, false, not being what it pretends to be. The other is "true," real, and yielding all the advantage it professes. The one is "another man's," foreign to the Christian, of no value except when rightly spent for the good of others. Whilst the latter is "our own;" counted so for Christ's sake, by whose grace alone it is committed to us. And yet the one is to be the test of whether we are fit for the other. For so has our Lord ordained; He who is Himself "our righteousness;" but who will not count us to be righteous through faith in Him, unless our faith bring forth good works.

He next adds, what He had insisted on before, that it is impossible to serve at once two masters; implying that we can serve only one, we must look to one only for our payment. So that if we would have God's wages, we must here do his work. And to do his work, we must love his word. And to love his work, we must love Himself. And to love Him, we must believe in Him, even have faith in Christ. Then shall we gladly take Him for our Master, employ to his honour what is his, not ours, and receive from his hand those riches, which are ours, only because He freely gives them.

The Pharisees "who were covetous, heard all these things; and they derided him." This is what all covetous people do. For what else but mockery is it, to set at nought his counsel for the employment of their wealth? And what, short of foolish, do they reckon a Christian, who spends all his substance as a steward of Christ? If ever this scornful language should meet our ears, let us call to mind the rebuke here pronounced by our Lord. Let us consider how widely the judgment of man differs from the judgment of God; how what the one highly esteems, may be, and often is, abomination in the Other's sight. This is the case with wealth, if acquired by dishonesty, if hoarded with fond affection, if wasted in luxurious living. It may still command the respect of the multitude, conciliate the voice of flattery, and secure to its possessor, at his pleasure, all the goods that man can barter. But it is at the same time abomination in the sight of Him who is of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look on iniquity. See Hab. 1. 12.

This was the case also with that pretended zeal for the Law, on the ground of which the Pharisees objected to the Gospel. It might pass with men for a fair excuse, it might preserve for the objectors high repute among their fellows. But in the sight of God it was abomination, because in his sight it was seen to be hypocrisy. For the preaching of John gave ample warning that the Law and the Prophets were to be thenceforth fulfilled in the Gospel. And they were to be fulfilled, as in the law of divorce, by a more pure and spiritual interpretation. And is not this the case also with the different systems on which the Gospel itself has been preached in the world? Must we not fear of some of the schemes for its support, which among men have been most highly esteemed, that they have been little better than abomination in God's sight? Never then let us set up the moral law, as an objection to the doctrine of the Gospel. Never let us doubt of gospel doctrine that it fulfils and comprehends the moral law. Least of all let us be influenced in our views of truth by considering which opinions are of best repute in the world. The judgment of the best may sometimes fail. The judgment of many is often false. The church itself is liable to err. The world is always wrong.

The rich man and Lazarus.

19 There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day :

20 And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate, full of sores,

21 And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table : moreover the dogs came and licked his sores.

22 And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom : the rich man also died, and was buried ;

23 And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom.

24 And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue ; for I am tormented in this flame.

25 But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things : but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented.

26 And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed : so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot ; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence.

27 Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house :

28 For I have five brethren ; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment.

29 Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets ; let them hear them.

30 And he said, Nay, father Abraham : but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

31 And he said unto him, If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.

§ 241. The perils of wealth.

It is possible then for a man to have all that wealth can purchase, and yet to die, and to be buried ; aye, and to be also in torments. And this is the first general lesson which this parable seems designed to inculcate ; even as our Lord had before declared, that what is highly esteemed among men may be all the while abomination in the sight of God. See ver. 15. And some such contrast as this parable affords, was no more than necessary, to confound our high notions of worldly wealth ; so much are we accustomed to see it coveted, and the wealthy so highly honoured, envied, and adored. Here then we see what wealth may come to ; what it is sure to come to, if it have been ill gotten, if it have been ill spent, nay if it have not been spent well. For we have here little said against this rich man, except that he possessed riches, and spent them in fine clothing, and sumptuous fare. The chief thing set before us is, how rich he was. And the chief thing we have to observe is this, that after all the enjoyment of his riches, he died and was buried ; and was tormented in that flame which is never quenched. Whilst Lazarus, who during his life time had suffered at once from abject poverty, and from loathsome disease, "was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom." And can we, after this, be any longer dazzled with this world's vanities ? Can we any longer hesitate to seek first that treasure in heaven, which is freely offered through God's grace alike to rich and poor ?

But further, prosperity in this world not only may end, as we seem scarce to think possible, in eternal misery ; it may even be the cause of that misery. If abused, if enjoyed without thankfulness, if spent without consideration of Christian duty, it will aggravate the sufferings of those who shall in the end be condemned. "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivest thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things : but now he is comforted and thou art tormented." How great then is the responsibility of being rich ! How gracious that dispensation of the Almighty, which has ordered to so far the larger portion of mankind the less perilous condition of being poor ! How grievous is the end of receiving good things, without doing good works ! How much better is it here to receive evil things, and so to live as to receive good hereafter !

And here note further at what period our sentence becomes unalterable, "Between us and you there is a great gulf fixed : so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot ; neither can they pass to us, that would come from thence." No change to affect our eternal condition can take place after the close of this transitory life. The moment of death must determine, God only knows how soon, the condition of our souls for ever. What a fearful moment must that be to those, who have been in this world "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." 2 Tim. 3. 4. But how full of joy to the faithful servant, to him who has here shared the cross of Christ, how full of joy is the thought, that, once in bliss, he is there for ever. No temptation can there beset him ; no sin there make him fall. Though he would pass thence, he cannot.

Lastly, observe the reply of Abraham to the proposal of sending Lazarus, that he might warn the rich man's brethren. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." How foolish then, how faithless is it, to imagine that our faithlessness and sin are for want of better warning ! How vain to plead that we would be more holy, if we were more assured : that we would repent, if we were to see one rise from the dead ! We have Moses and the prophets. We have Christ and his apostles. Do we, or do we not hear them ? Nay, we have one risen from the dead, even Jesus, the first fruits of them that slept. Are we, or are we not persuaded ? Do we, or do we not repent ? Do we, or do we not believe, so as to lead new and Christian lives ? If not, let us at least not wait for warnings more awful, proofs more clear ; but strive to profit more, to our eternal joy, by those we already have.

The master and servant.

1 Then said he unto the disciples, ¹ It is impossible but that offences will come: but woe unto him through whom they come!

2 It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones.

3 Take heed to yourselves: ² If thy brother trespass against thee, rebuke him; and if he repent, forgive him.

4 And if he trespass against thee seven times in a day, and seven times in a day turn again to thee, saying, I repent; thou shalt forgive him.

5 And the apostles said unto the Lord, Increase our faith.

6 ³ And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you.

7 But which of you, having a servant plowing or feeding cattle, will say unto him by and by, when he is come from the field, Go and sit down to meat?

8 And will not rather say unto him, Make ready wherewith I may sup, and gird thyself, and serve me, till I have eaten and drunken; and afterward thou shalt eat and drink.

9 Doth he thank that servant because he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not.

10 So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do.

¹ Matt. 18. 7.

² Matt. 18. 21.

³ Matt. 17. 20.

§ 242. That we are unprofitable servants.

"It is impossible but that offences will come;" impossible according to the order of our present dispensation. It is implied in the very nature of our trial, that we may ourselves transgress. And from the frame of our society it follows, that we may also tempt others to sin. Let us never then be disheartened at the sight of evil all around us. Christ has told us beforehand that it was sure to come. Only let us take heed that we help not to promote it. He has no less plainly denounced woe to all those by whom offences come. Far be it therefore from us to imagine, that the prevalence of offences in the world can make it safe for us to commit them! Far be it from us, by any word or deed of ours, to make a brother to offend! Though he be but as a little one, abject in our estimation, he is, we may be sure, dear in God's sight. And for us, rather than to make him fall, it were better to be cast with a millstone about the neck into the depth of the sea.

And on the other hand let us take heed that we ourselves stumble not at the conduct of our brother. However frequently he trespass against us, let us as often, though it were seven times in one day, forgive. This is a duty on which our Lord continually insists. And why? Because He was aware how slow we should be to practise it. Herein we have need, all of us, very greatly to amend. Here we have need earnestly to pray, like the apostles, "Lord, increase our faith:" not the faith they asked for, by which miracles were wrought, but that by which passions are subdued, and hearts are changed. To be convinced of our own sinfulness; to be persuaded of God's readiness to pardon, by reason of the atonement of our Lord; to remember his condition, so repeatedly expressed, that, if we forgive not men their trespasses, neither will He forgive us ours; a belief in these things unseen, such a belief as Christ alone can give us, this faith if we had genuine, though never so feeble, we might say to the spirit of revenge within us, "Be thou plucked up by the root," "and it should obey."

But if thus we should succeed in subduing any evil temper, or in attaining any excellency of grace, let us beware of imagining that we have achieved, in proportion to our success, any very great service to God. And on the other hand, if we fall short, let us beware of excusing ourselves, as though success were beyond our reach. It is no more than our bounden duty that God requires. That we forgive our offending brother, or bring forth any other fruit of faith, to the honour of our Lord and Saviour, what is this but the very work we stand engaged to perform? Is the slave more the property of his master, than we, who are God's creatures, the work of his hands, servants whom Christ has bought with a price, even with his own most precious blood? And know we not, how even with servants that are hired, their whole time is paid for by their master, and is employed in their master's work? From ploughing and feeding cattle in the morning, they turn not to their own refreshment, till first they have served at supper in the evening. And yet they look not for extraordinary thanks, because this is the very work they hired themselves to do; and for their hiring, and for their wages, they need be thankful themselves. Such is the obligation of earthly service; such the relation of master and servant upon earth; where each ministers to the convenience of the other. Such also is our heavenly service; except that here the benefit is altogether on one side. God gives us both food and raiment; both life, and in our death, the hope of glory. What give we unto Him in return? Repentance, and that usually such as needs to be repented of. And though we could even give Him unsinning obedience; what profit could it be to Him who inhabiteth eternity? How could we do more than it is our duty to do?

May He make us to do all that we are commanded! May He enable us to take heed and do nothing that we are forbidden! May we feel, as well as say, that we are unprofitable servants! May we be thankful that we are counted to be his servants at all!

Christ healeth ten lepers.

11 And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem, that he passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee.

12 And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off:

13 And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us.

14 And when he saw them, he said unto them, ¹ Go shew yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that, as they went, they were cleansed.

15 And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God.

16 And fell down on his face nt his feet, giving him thanks: and he was a Samaritan.

17 And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?

18 There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger.

19 And he said unto him, Arise, go thy way: thy faith hath made thee whole.

¹ Lev. 14. 2.

§ 243. How few are thankful.

In this history we have a lively picture of that unthankfulness, which we often complain of in each other; but which we have more need to amend in ourselves. The ten lepers, when they wanted our Lord's assistance, all "lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us." But one only, "when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God." How many, when they are overtaken by affliction, when sickness has laid low their strength, or death stares them in the face, how many then acknowledge Jesus for their Master, cry loudly for his help, and proclaim their dependence on his mercy! But when health is restored, when friends that we thought lost, are recovered, when our affairs again flourish, and when it is our duty to give God the glory, must we not then ask, with Jesus, of ourselves, "Where are the nine?"

We have, each of us, many temporal advantages to acknowledge. That we have been born in a fruitful and pleasant land; that we live under good laws, and these uprightly administered; that we enjoy a peaceful state, where it is our own fault if we do not our work with cheerfulness, and eat our bread with quietness, looking for, and hasting unto the home of heaven; all this we have from God received, for all this each of us owe our thanks to God. "But where are the nine?" Much more have we to be thankful for the hope of heaven, for the glad tidings of the Gospel of Christ, for the having been washed by the waters of baptism, and for the renewing of the Holy Ghost. Truly we may say, all are cleansed; all helped, as well as exhorted, through Christ, to become holy as God is holy, and pure as he is pure. See 1 John 3. 3. But when we look for that return of praise, which all these great blessings should produce; when we look for it to be shewn forth, not with the lips but in the life; when we look at our own lives; when we look therein for holiness, for devotion, for charity, for a heavenly mind; again we must ask in sorrow, "Where are the nine?"

The house of God is opened for his worship. Even on the sabbath day, how large is the proportion of those that stay away! How many come too late for the beginning of the service! How few attend on other days, if on other days the privilege be afforded them, to meet for prayer and praise! And above all other ordinances, in the sacrament of our Lord's most blessed body and blood, an ordinance which He has enjoined on all, a thing which He has bidden all to do, in remembrance of Himself, how is this sad question forced upon our thoughts, "Where are the nine?" They are engaged in the world. They have been indulging the flesh. They have been fulfilling the lusts of the devil. They are estranged, by their own act and deed, from the communion of their Lord and Saviour. They call loudly for his help in the time of their necessity; but in the hour that is set apart for the celebration of his mercy, and in the things which they are concerned to do for his honour, in these they are not found to give God the glory.

Whilst the nine, who had received like healing from our Lord, were thus found insensible to his goodness, let us now see who it was that fell on his face at the feet of his Deliverer, giving Him thanks. "He was a Samaritan," a stranger to the privileges of the Jews; one whom they rejected and despised. Let the honest, the sober, the diligent take warning! How often do they trust in themselves that they are righteous! How often do they neglect to give God the glory! Whilst there are many who have strayed further from his ways, but are more deeply touched by the tidings of his mercy. Instead therefore of despising others, let us consider of ourselves how we have all been estranged from God, and He has brought us nigh unto Himself: how foul have been our many sins, and how great his love to cleanse. Let us consider of our neighbours how many times they may be thankful, when we least suppose it; how high they may stand with God, whilst they seem in our eyes most low. And above all, let us in any case be thankful ourselves; where we have obeyed, thankful for the grace whereby we stand; where we have sinned, thankful for the mercy whereby we are assured of pardon; in affliction thankful for our chastisement; in prosperity for our joy; in poverty, for being safe from the snares of wealth; in riches, for having the greater means to do good; in life, for the continuance of our day of grace; in death, for our entrance into endless glory!

Christ teacheth of the kingdom of God.

20 And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not || with observation :

21 Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is † within you.

22 And he said unto the disciples, The days will come, when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it.

23 ¹ And they shall say to you, See here; or, see there: go not after them, nor follow them.

24 For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of man be in his day.

25 But first must he suffer many things and be rejected of this generation.

26 ² And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man.

27 They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all.

28 ³ Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot;

|| Or, with outward show. † Or, among you.

⁴ Matt. 16. 25

⁵ Matt. 24. 40.

¹ Matt. 24. 23.

² Gen. 7.

³ Gen. 10.

⁴ Gen. 19. 26.

⁵ Matt. 24. 28

† This 36th verse is wanting in most of the Greek copies.

§ 244. How to behave when the Son of man is revealed.

“The kingdom of God” is an expression often used by our Saviour. The Pharisees supposed it to mean some great revolution in their own government, by which Jehovah should become visibly their king. Under this impression they anxiously inquired when it should come. Jesus explains his meaning by telling them, “the kingdom of God is within you.” The great change which He has first to work, is the conversion of the hearts of his people. It is that God may therein reign, and the world no longer; that his will may be acknowledged for supreme, and the will of man no more oppose it. This is the true kingdom of God first to be established, this the revolution first to take place within, ere we shall see with joy the great change, of new heavens and a new earth, at the second coming of Christ.

Of the kingdom of heaven, in this latter sense, we are not now to reckon with any certainty as to when it will take place. Come when it will, it will come suddenly, it will come when we are apt to reckon that it will not. It will come as the lightning, which flashes in one moment over the sky; from which no screen can hide us, and which darkness only makes more bright. “So shall also the Son of man be in his day.” Though the kingdom of heaven is for the present within us, it will hereafter be without us also. A great change will take place in all that we see around us. It will arrive suddenly, when mankind as little look for it, as for the fire on Sodom, or for the flood in the times of Noah. It will come when all things are going on just as they are now; and when we shall have no more warning from without to look for it, than we can at this moment discern. Eating and drinking, buying and selling, planting and building, marrying and giving in marriage, these are the very things that will take place up to the moment when Christ shall come. These are the things now daily happening. Let us then daily now expect the coming of our Lord. In these things let us engage as we should do if we daily expected Him. Already He is revealed to our faith. Hereafter He is to be revealed to our sense. Let us note how, when at length He shall arrive, we are here instructed to behave.

First, we are not to be careful at that moment, and therefore we ought not to be over careful now, about any worldly property we may possess, about any worldly business we may have in hand. We must be warned by the example of Lot's wife, not so much as to look back on this world's goods, but counting all things as loss for Christ, to flee through Him for refuge to the mercy of God. For the more we think, either at such a juncture, or even now, of preserving this present life, the more we run risk to lose both it and that which is to come. Whilst the more freely we renounce all, for God's sake, we shall the more surely both preserve what we have, and gain more than we can conceive. And secondly, we must never consider ourselves prepared for that great day, merely because we seem to be as good as our neighbours. Many will be the instances of persons, to all outward appearance in the same condition, of whom nevertheless the one shall be taken, and the other left.

Not in those only who are in the same worldly employment, grinding at the same mill, labouring in the same field, but in those also whom men reckon in the same degree of spiritual proficiency, God sees such a difference in their hearts, that whilst the one is left to perish everlastingly, the other will be taken, through the merits of Christ, to inherit eternal glory.

they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded;

29 But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all.

30 Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed:

31 In that day, he which shall be upon the house top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away: and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back.

32 ⁴ Remember Lot's wife.

33 ⁵ Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it.

34 ⁶ I tell you in that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken and the other shall be left.

35 Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken and the other left.

36 † Two men shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left.

37 And they answered and said unto him, ⁷ Where, Lord? And he said unto them, Wheresoever, the body is, thither will the eagles be gathered together.

The unjust judge.

1 And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought 'always to pray, and not to faint;

2 Saying, There was in a city a judge, which feared not God, neither regarded man:

3 And there was a widow in that city; and she came unto him, saying, Avenge me of mine adversary.

4 And he would not for a while: but afterward he said within himself, Though I fear not God, nor regard man;

5 Yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me.

6 And the Lord said, Hear what the unjust judge saith.

7 And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?

8 I tell you that he will avenge them speedily. Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?

1 Thess. 5. 17.

§ 245. That men ought always to pray.

This parable has its key hanging at the very door, namely, "that men ought always to pray, and not to faint." And to enforce this duty, our Lord tells of an unjust judge, how he for a time refused to do justice to a forlorn suitor, but was overcome by her perseverance in asking him: "Though I fear not God, nor regard man; yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me." And these are the words, which Christ bids us hear, to which He would have us diligently attend. And the conclusion He would have us draw is this: if man, sinful man, can be by long crying prevailed on, even against his will, much more will God hear our steadfast prayers, seeing that He rejoices to grant them.

Is there then in any one a reluctance to pray? Do you kneel down without a lively interest in the things you ask for? Is it a burden thus to kneel, and a relief to rise up to your ordinary work? "Hear what the unjust judge saith." And consider how great those blessings are which God offers to your fervent prayers, and how sure you may hence feel that your prayers are not offered in vain. Or do you reason that God is afar off, and cares not to hear the wishes of his creatures? "Hear what the unjust judge saith." And be hence assured, that the righteous Judge of all the earth will much more redress the wrongs, and relieve the wants of all them that call upon Him. Or is it that your thoughts wander whilst you pray? Convinced though you are that God attends, are you unable to command your own attention, unable to restrain your roving thoughts from the business or the pleasures of the world? "Hear what the unjust judge saith." And remember, that it was said to a suitor who prayed, not only often, but earnestly; not only with the lips, but with the heart. Or is it that you have prayed long and earnestly, and have hitherto prayed utterly in vain? Are you tempted by failure to despond? By despondency are you tempted to leave off praying? "Hear what the unjust judge saith." And know, that if you ask, it shall at length be given you; if you seek, you shall at length be sure to find; if you knock, it shall without fail be opened unto you. See Matt. 7. 7.

The prayer of the widow was, "Avenge me of mine adversary." Do justice between me and one who is oppressing me. And thus our Lord also speaks of God as avenging his own elect, doing justice between them and the wicked, between those who love Him and those who hate his commandments. Here their lot seems in many things ill proportioned to their respective dispositions. The wicked prosper; the righteous are afflicted. But He that hears our prayers, shall hereafter set these things right, shall justify before the assembled world his dealings to mankind. This then should be one great object of our prayer even that God's kingdom come. For this we should cry day and night, if we would be counted for God's elect. Nor shall we fail to do so, if only we have faith. If only we believe heartily in Christ, and, through Him, in a blessed immortality; there is no object we could more earnestly desire, none for which we should be more continually inclined to make known our petitions unto God.

And therefore when our Lord exhorts us thus to pray, and not to faint, He asks, at the conclusion of the parable, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" If He were to come now, would He find it in us? Would He find in us a lively, practical conviction, that the end of this life is the beginning of a better? Would He find in us such faith as makes us long to be with Christ where He is? as makes us pray in earnest that his kingdom come? This is a question which each of us must answer for himself; and it is one of which each must soon give an account before God. Let us remember, for our comfort, that as faith is needful for our rightly praying, so praying is helpful to our effectual believing. Let us pray then with perseverance. Let us pray that we may believe, and that God may help our unbelief. Let us pray with the assurance that He is more willing to hear than we to pray; that, although He bear with us, and keep us waiting, what we reckon a long time, yet speedily, as God reckons speed, speedily, as He knows to be for their good, He will avenge his own elect.

Lord, avenge us of our adversary, of him that seeks the destruction of our souls! But, Lord, if there be any who bear ill will to us on earth, we pray Thee, turn their hearts; we pray Thee, as we hope to be forgiven ourselves, Lord, forgive our enemies!

The Pharisee and the Publican.

9 And he spake this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves || that they were righteous, and despised others :

10 Two men went up into the temple to pray ; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican.

11 The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican.

12 I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess.

13 And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner.

14 I tell you, this man went down to his house justified rather than the other : 'for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased ; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

15 And they brought unto him also infants, that he would touch them : but when his disciples saw it they rebuked them.

16 But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not : for of such is the kingdom of God.

17 Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein.

|| Or, as being righteous.

1 Matt. 23. 12.

§ 246. Humility in things spiritual.

Here we have humility most forcibly recommended, both by an affecting parable and by a significant action. In the parable our Lord has so described the pride of the Pharisee, that it cannot fail to be odious in our sight. Whilst the lowly contrition of the publican is made to be as amiable before men, as it is declared to be acceptable unto God. And this is common with the divine Teacher in matters which He most wishes to enforce. He would convince us out of our own feelings. He would condemn us out of our own mouths. How hateful must we ever henceforth own it to be in ourselves, to trust that we are righteous, and despise others ! How plain, that, whether in our worship, or in our ordinary thoughts, it is only when we are sensible of our sinfulness that we can be justified through Christ, in the sight of God !

And, observe, it is against spiritual pride, it is of humility in things spiritual, that our Lord here chiefly speaks. It is the estimate we form of our condition in God's sight, as his servants, of the service we render Him, of our worthiness or unworthiness, it is of this that we might derive from this parable a correct impression. The Pharisee in this instance stands excused of ostentation before men. He prayed indeed proudly ; but "he prayed thus with himself." Only also with himself there was God whom he addressed ; God, whose divine majesty he profaned, by thus dwelling on his own good deeds. It is not enough then that in man's presence we abase ourselves. It is not enough that we are ready to take the lowest place in the company we keep, among the friends we honour. This we may do outwardly ; whilst yet it is seen by Him who seeth in secret, that we esteem ourselves among the highest in his sight.

Let us examine then, are there none whom, in our secret thoughts, we set down for extortioners, unjust, adulterers, with much such presumption on our own superiority, as was felt by the Pharisee in the parable before us ? Do we never, in taking account of our spiritual condition, reckon up with complacency the good which we have done, instead of dwelling on our manifold infirmities, and flying unto the refuge of God's mercy for the forgiveness of our countless sins ? Do we never conceive ourselves to be excused, as by some special favour, in the things which in others we condemn ; never hope to escape, by some signal providence, the judgments which for others we profess to apprehend ? If we do, there can be no doubt which of the parties in this parable we most closely resemble ; there can be no question which sentence we deserve. We cannot deny that we are exalting ourselves. We cannot expect but that in the end we must be abased.

To be exalted of God, we must humble ourselves, where He sees in the heart. We must feel both how deficient we are in his sight, and how inferior, according to his reckoning, inferior in many points of Christian duty, to those who enjoy no better light than we do. We must thank God for others that they are faithful and obedient, for ourselves that we are not cut off in our impenitence. We must receive, in short, the kingdom of God as little children ; as having no more merit of our own to plead, than new born babes, who have done neither good nor evil. This must be the feeling with which we enter on a course of Christian life. This the view we are bound to take of our past years, though we have spent them faithfully in the service of our Lord. The testimony of conscience, the conviction that we have so served and so believed, this is indeed the best proof which we can have, that we have been born of God, have been led by the Spirit, and have henceforth a crown of glory laid up for us in heaven. But a holy life, though it be the only sure sign of faith, and therefore the only safe ground of hope, is no meritorious cause of salvation. It is not the thing we are to trust in. He that should do all, would be still but an unprofitable servant. And they who have done most must be most careful to remember that they have no claim of right ; must receive the kingdom of God as little children, or they will in no wise enter therein.

God be merciful to us, miserable offenders ! To our many faulty and wicked works, God be merciful ! To our many idle and wanton words, God be merciful ! To our many vain and evil thoughts, God be merciful ! For the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord !

Christ answereth the ruler touching the way of life.

18 ¹ And a certain ruler asked him, saying, Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

19 And Jesus said unto him, Why callest thou me good? none is good, save one, that is, God.

20 Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Honour thy father and thy mother.

21 And he said, All these have I kept from my youth up.

22 Now when Jesus heard these things, he said unto him, Yet lackest thou one thing: sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me.

23 And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich.

24 And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!

25 For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26 And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

27 And he said, The things which are impossible with men are possible with God.

²28 Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all, and followed thee.

29 And he said unto them, Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake,

30 Who shall not receive manifold more in this present time, and in the world to come life everlasting.

¹ Matt. 19. 16.

² Matt. 19. 27.

§ 247. How much for Christ we must do, and through Him we may.

The question of this ruler is one which we ought daily to be putting to our Lord, as we study his revealed word. "Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" The answer we may interpret as follows. "Why callest thou me good?" Is it as believing me to be that one only Being to whom this name belongs? If so, follow up thy profession by corresponding practice. Fulfil those commandments which thou knowest to come of God. Take those which thou knowest in the Old Testament. Obey them, not in the letter only, but in the spirit, devoting thyself and thy whole substance to the service of Christ. And begin, by way of trial, with this rule, which I lay down for my disciples: "sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, follow me." Such was the course marked out for this enquirer, as the best he could pursue towards eternal life. Such therefore must be the spirit of our minds, in our progress towards the same great end.

"And when he heard this, he was very sorrowful: for he was very rich." See how near these two things sorrow and riches are to each other! The last what we so greatly covet! The first what we so diligently avoid! Yet the ruler being rich, might have been glad to think he had at his disposal the means required. The more he was rich, the more he should have rejoiced to become poor for the kingdom of heaven's sake. Such is the joy we should feel on gaining information, however much it may cost us to abide by it, if we ask out of a real desire to know the way of eternal life! such is the pleasure which this world's goods should afford to the true disciple, that he may so use them as to be laying up treasure in heaven. This however is not the way in which we view these things by nature. But rather, the more we have, we desire to obtain more, to spend more on ourselves, to enjoy more of worldly satisfaction. And hence it is so difficult for them that have riches to enter into the kingdom of God.

And this our Lord goes on to represent as being not only hard, but actually impossible; as a thing that is no more to be attained, than for a camel to go through a needle's eye. And so He would have us feel in all cases, whether of wealth or poverty, that to be saved is altogether out of the power of man. And when thus we once duly feel, then would He assure us, for our comfort, "the things which are impossible with men are possible with God." And of this we have signal instances in the miracles our Lord wrought whilst He was on earth in the flesh. From which we should do well always to conclude that, in like manner as He could give health to the diseased, He can impart holiness to the soul; and that as He raised the dead to life, so He can fit us by his grace to live for ever.

Thus it was that Peter and the other apostles were enabled, through God's assistance, to leave all, and follow Christ. Thus may any one of us have grace, if only we duly seek it, to leave "house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake." Not that we are often required, in our present circumstances, to relinquish, on a Christian principle, the society of our nearest relations. On the contrary it is usually one of our first duties to live with them on terms of affection and respect. And yet we must be prepared to give them up, if necessary. We must be in that frame of mind which would have made us give them up, in the times when there was no choice but so to do, or to renounce the profession of the Christian faith. And for this, we must now not so love our dearest friends, as that for their sake we would less love God. We must not so love them, as that, to gratify their wishes, we would do any single thing which we suspect to be wrong, or leave undone any single thing which we know to be right. We must not so love them, as not to love, far more than them, that Lord who has vouchsafed to call us "friends," John 15. 14, who is described as "the first born among many brethren," Rom. 8. 29, and as the Spouse of his spouse the church. See Ephes. 5. 23.

Christ foresheweth his death ; healeth a blind man.

31 ¹ Then he took unto him the twelve, and said unto them, Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of man shall be accomplished.

32 For he shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on :

33 And they shall scourge him, and put him to death : and the third day he shall rise again.

34 And they understood none of these things : and this saying was hid from them, neither knew they the things which were spoken.

35 ² And it came to pass, that as he was come nigh unto Jericho, a certain blind man sat by the way side begging :

36 And hearing the multitude pass by, he asked what it meant.

37 And they told him, that Jesus of Nazareth passeth by.

38 And he cried, saying, Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on me.

39 And they which went before rebuked him, that he should hold his peace : but he cried so much the more, Thou son of David, have mercy on me.

40 And Jesus stood, and commanded him to be brought unto him : and when he was come near, he asked him,

41 Saying, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee ? And he said, Lord, that I may receive my sight.

42 And Jesus said unto him, Receive thy sight : thy faith hath saved thee.

43 And immediately he received his sight, and followed him, glorifying God : and all the people, when they saw it, gave praise unto God.

Matt. 20. 17.

² Matt. 20. 29.

§ 248. The progress of spiritual sight.

How forward is our Lord to speak to his disciples of the things which He should suffer at Jerusalem ! How welcome unto Him was the fulfilment of this his Father's will ! How cheerfully ought we too to look forward to the change we must undergo in death ; nay, to the sufferings which we shall probably then endure ! Are they not our Father's will ? Is not this the way in which it seemed good to Him to make perfect the Captain of our salvation ? See Heb. 2. 10. And shall we not rejoice to think, whensoever our time shall come, that we are going where He has gone before, and by the same way He went ? Thus then let us think, thus speak of death ; as knowing that we also shall rise again. And though the world understand not our saying, we shall have spoken what it is profitable for the world to hear.

In the miracle which follows, we must first adore the divine power of Him who could make the blind to see. We may next apply it to our own spiritual infirmity of sight, and hence learn by what means it may be effectually removed. First, we must be sensible of our defect. We must be aware, that by nature we cannot see the things that belong to our salvation ; that we cannot, by any faculty of our own, discern God's power and providence and love, the way of life He offers, or how we may walk therein. Next we must be content to apply for our instruction to those who are authorized to give it. This blind man consulted such as could see, asking what the passing by of Jesus meant. We too must be apt to learn. We must be humble and patient in attending to the teaching of those whom we may well allow to know far better than ourselves.

But further, even where we cannot clearly understand, it is our duty unfeignedly to believe ; to believe in God's goodness and ability to order all things for the best, whether we can know how, or not. For this blind man persisted in applying unto Christ, though he could not himself see Him, and was forbidden by those who could. And his blindness must have rendered him unable to understand how Christ could make him see, or even what sight truly meant. Yet he was clearly aware that Christ could convey to him a great blessing, could relieve him of a grievous defect ; in a word, could "have mercy" on him. And this he understood well enough for him to believe heartily, and to pray effectually. Thus we also, before we have tasted by experience may believe in the power of God's grace, in the influence of his Spirit on our souls, and on our redemption unto life through Christ. These things we may understand enough of beforehand for us to believe in them heartily, to pray for them fervently, to attain unto them thankfully.

Lastly, when we have attained them, and in proportion as we have attained, we must do as did this blind man, who upon receiving his sight, followed Christ, glorifying God. Our sense of deficiency, our readiness to learn, our understanding, our faith, must all end in this one thing, a zeal to obey. The end of our calling, as far as this life is concerned, is to walk in the steps of Christ's example ourselves, and make others when they see us, give praise to God. Thus will our faith save us ; if at the present it deliver us from sin, we shall in the end be delivered from eternal death. Thus will our faith be not dead, but living ; if it bring forth the fruit of a holy life. And thus, however faintly we may see at first, we shall by degrees be fitted to behold the glory of God most High.

Grant, Lord, that in our life, and in our death, we may both glorify, and make others to glorify, thy holy name ! Grant us to see now, in thy Gospel, what eye hath not seen ; and hereafter to enjoy, in thy blessed kingdom, what no imagination of man's heart hath conceived. See 1 Cor. 2. 9.

Christ converteth Zacchæus.

1 And Jesus entered and passed through Jericho.

2 And, behold, there was a man named Zacchæus, which was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich.

3 And he sought to see Jesus who he was; and could not for the press, because he was little of stature.

4 And he ran before, and climbed up into a sycamore tree to see him: for he was to pass that way.

5 And when Jesus came to the place, he looked up, and saw him, and said unto him, Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for to day I must abide at thy house.

6 And he made haste, and came down, and received him joyfully.

7 And when they saw it, they all murmured, saying, That he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner.

8 And Zacchæus stood, and said unto the Lord; Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor; and if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold.

9 And Jesus said unto him, This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham.

10 ¹ For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

¹ Matt. 18. 11.

§ 249. Almsgiving and restitution.

That Zacchæus was little in stature may signify to us how slight is the importance of outward advantages, compared with the disposition of the inner man. What he wanted in height he could make up for by activity in climbing up the tree. There he could both see, and be seen of Jesus. And thence he was invited to come down, and to receive the Lord into his house. However great be our hindrances by defect of nature, or default of education, whether we be weakly in body or in mind, let us never imagine that this is any reason for us to come short of the love of Christ. There is always some tree which we may by faith ascend, some eminence of holiness, in thought, or word, or deed, which will make us both better to see Him, and to be the better by Him regarded. The less we have attained, let us learn the more to strive. And the shorter is our measure of talents or of gifts, the more let us exert what strength we have, that we may behold the glory of God.

But Zacchæus laboured under other and greater disadvantages. He "was the chief among the publicans, and he was rich." The mention of these circumstances is most seasonable, after the difficulty so lately insisted on, "for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." 18. 25. Here we find how "the things which are impossible with men are possible with God." 18. 27. Here we see how "the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He encourages the zeal of this chief of publicans, by proposing the same day to abide at his house. And in the resolution which Zacchæus immediately declared, we have ample proof that our Lord, when there, converted the heart of his host. "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor." I devote them to be so given, from this day forth. I put not off till to-morrow the giving of them. I give them now. In the presence of this company, and before Thee, I part with the half of all that I possess, for the benefit of my poorer brethren. "And if I have taken any thing from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." I am not ashamed to own my sins. I am willing to redress the wrongs I have inflicted. This profession of Zacchæus is not the account of what his life had been, but the resolution of what by God's grace it should be. It is not the empty boast of the past, or the vain intention for the future, but the action of the hour then present, the expression of his repentance and amendment of life, through faith in Jesus Christ. And therefore is he assured by our Lord, "This day is salvation come to this house, forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham;" that is to say, a son of his faith.

Let us then note for our improvement the two chief things of this holy resolution. He gives to the poor the half of his goods. Here is a proportion no less striking, for the imitation of the rich, than is the widow's mite for the encouragement of the poor. When we are called upon to give and are in doubt as to the amount we should contribute, let us think of the proportion here offered by Zacchæus. It may kindle our zeal, to give more than we otherwise should. It will convince us of sin, in a disposition to give less. And though it should not constrain us to give the half of our goods, it must teach us to make a conscience of how we spend the whole. Next, where he had done wrong, he restores fourfold. It were well if we were careful to restore but once. It were well if we could always bear in mind that what we have received wrongfully of any other, is not ours, but his. And as long as we neither give it him, nor so much as own that we have taken it, we may be sorry for having done so, but we have not repented. For why is it that we are averse to restore? Either we are unwilling to confess our faults; and then how can we be humble? or else we are reluctant to part with our unjust gains; and if so, how are we just? And how, if either we lack humility, or are wanting in a resolution to be just, how can we be counted for repentant?

Lord, help us to give largely of that which is our own! And that which is not ours teach us to restore! Seek, Lord, in us that which is gone astray! Save that which was lost! And that which Thou hast found, preserve!

The parable of the nobleman and the ten pounds.

11 And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.

12 ¹ He said therefore, A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and to return.

13 And he called his ten servants, and delivered them ten \parallel pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come.

14 But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us.

15 And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading.

16 Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds.

17 And he said unto him, Well, thou good servant: because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities.

18 And the second came, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained five pounds.

19 And he said likewise to him, Be thou also over five cities.

20 And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I have kept laid up in a napkin:

21 For I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layedst not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow.

22 And he saith unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant, Thou knewest that I was an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow:

23 Wherefore then gavest not thou my money into the bank, that at my coming I might have required mine own with usury?

24 And he said unto them that stood by, Take from him the pound, and give it to him that hath ten pounds.

25 (And they said unto him, Lord, he hath ten pounds.)

26 For I say unto you, ² That unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him.

27 But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither, and slay them before me.

¹ Matt. 25. 14.

\parallel Mina, here translated a pound, is twelve ounces and a half: which according to five shillings the ounce is three pounds two shillings and sixpence.

² Matt. 13. 12.

§ 250. That God's ways are not our ways.

The disciples who attended on our Lord were apt to think that He would establish in Jerusalem a new and divine kingdom. In these thoughts they were the more inclined to indulge as He drew nigh to the holy city. He spake therefore now this parable, on purpose to shew them that his kingdom was "not of this world," John 18. 36; that it was not here that they should share his reign; but that they must wait, and work with patience till the time of his return from heaven. He was to go, He is now gone, as into a far country, there "to receive for himself," and for us, "a kingdom;" and thence, at the end of all things, "to return." Our condition in the meantime is far from being what the disciples expected, a condition of ease and prosperity under the manifest favour of Christ reigning upon earth. It is a state like that of servants in the absence of their lord, entrusted with a sum to improve, a business of importance to transact. It is a state of trial, of labour, of risk. The less therefore we reckon on God's special favour in this world's concerns, the more entirely we refer all that we receive, and all we do, to the account we shall have to give in the world which is to come; so much the better shall we fulfil the great lesson which is in this parable set forth.

We have each of us some one pound to employ to our Master's honour. Ten we gain with it, or five, or none, according to our diligence in his service, or our sloth. Let us observe that to gain none, is itself a sin. Not only is there wrath denounced against those enemies who will not have Christ reign over them. Not only to do much wilful evil, but to do no good, not to purpose, not to try to do any, this will draw on us the sentence of the "wicked servant:" "Take from him the pound, and give to him that hath ten pounds." In vain should we complain, by way of justifying ourselves, that this is harsh treatment, and that the Lord, who thus uses us, is an austere master. If we could indeed suppose that He were so, this would be but the more urgent reason for us to comply with his demands. As we cannot help having to answer unto Him, this should but the more powerfully constrain us to "flee from the wrath to come," Matt. 3. 7. In vain too should we plead, after the manner of worldly wisdom, "Lord, he hath ten pounds;" as grudging the reward of diligence, whilst we murmur at the chastisement of sloth. God's ways are not our ways. And it is his rule of justice, that "unto every one which hath shall be given; and from him that hath not, even that he hath shall be taken away from him." Already do we find this to be the case in those gifts of grace within the soul, which are from time to time enlarged, the more we profit by them; and which, the less we grow in them, are the less freely imparted. The same principle will be hereafter applied in the allotting of our everlasting reward. In proportion to the grace we have attained will be the measure of the joy we shall receive. And to those who have attained none, to those who have wasted their opportunities, and made no improvement by their privileges, there will be no joy, but only condemnation.

Reign, Lord, we pray Thee, over us; be Thou our Guide and Ruler, until death! Much Thou hast already given us, we own with thanks. Oh continue, as Thou art wont, to give us more and more!

Christ rideth into Jerusalem in triumph.

28 And when he had thus spoken, he went before, ascending up to Jerusalem.

29 ¹ And it came to pass, when he was come nigh to Bethphage and Bethany, at the mount called the mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples,

30 Saying, Go ye into the village over against you; in the which at your entering ye shall find a colt tied, whereon yet never man sat: loose him, and bring him hither.

31 And if any man ask you, Why do ye loose him? thus shall ye say unto him, Because the Lord hath need of him.

32 And they that were sent went their way, and found even as he had said unto them.

33 And as they were loosing the colt, the owners thereof said unto them, Why loose ye the colt?

34 And they said, The Lord hath need of him.

35 And they brought him to Jesus: and they cast their garments upon the colt, and they set Jesus thereon.

36 And as they went, they spread their clothes in the way.

37 And when he was come nigh, even now at the descent of the mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works that they had seen;

38 Saying, Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord: peace in heaven, and glory in the highest.

39 And some of the Pharisees from among the multitude said unto him, Master, rebuke thy disciples.

40 And he answered and said unto them, I tell you that, if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out.

¹ Matt. 21. 1.

§ 251. How we must fulfil the will of Christ.

The last words of this passage may greatly help to explain the meaning of the whole transaction. It was a public testimony to Jesus as the Messiah, forced by a miracle from the multitude, whilst they were ignorant of his real kingdom. The disciples indeed cried, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord." But their joy was only for "the mighty works that they had seen." They had as yet no notion of the great end of our Lord's coming, of the great blessing He was to bring upon the world. They proclaimed "peace in heaven, and glory in the highest." But they were all the while expecting Him to assume a visible throne on earth. They knew nothing or but little of that peace between God and man, which Christ was to establish by the shedding of his blood; of that glory in the highest, which was to arise not from his throne but from his cross. The words therefore which they uttered were overruled by that Almighty Power which could with equal ease have made the stones "immediately cry out." He it is who must also move our stony hearts to praise our Lord and Saviour. Not by our own strength can we offer the sacrifice of thanksgiving and prayer. Not without God can we feel what to God we owe, can we give what to God is due.

For this solemn occasion the disciples were prepared by a manifestation of divine foreknowledge in Christ, as to the very manner in which they should obtain a colt for Him to ride on. And to this was added a miraculous interference, operating on the disposition of the owners, and inclining them to grant the request preferred. "The Lord hath need of him," was an answer which could else by no means have satisfied them, which they could not else so much as have understood. We have the privilege of knowing who is meant by "the Lord." We have the advantage of being instructed as to what it is He needs. Let us be aware that for us to fulfil his will there must be exercised in our hearts the same heavenly influence. Let us reflect also that Christ in like manner knows of us beforehand, in case we shall obey his commandments. Let our conviction of his divine foreknowledge, and our trust in his sufficient grace, make this same reason ever conclusive with us: "The Lord hath need of him." Whether it be our property He requires us to bestow, our passions to deny, or our friends to resign to the grave; whether it be to give, or to forgive, to lend, to lose, or to refrain from enjoying what we possess, it must be enough for us to know the will of Christ; we must feel no hesitation in complying.

Thus might we best prepare for entering with Christ into the heavenly Jerusalem. Thus might we there share his glory, there receive the crown which through his gift is ours. Meantime, whilst on our road to that goodly city, let us take our lesson from the conduct of the multitude here described. Let us, by faith and holiness, devote to our Lord's service all that we have, all that we are. Let us with our lips and by our lives confess Him before men, that He may confess us before our Father which is in heaven. Not like the stones which feel not, not like the disciples who understood not, but with heart and mind, with all our soul and with all our strength, let us declare in the fulness of our conviction, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord!"

We praise Thee, Lord, for all the mighty works which Thou hast done; for the peace which Thou hast made for us in heaven; for the glory which Thou hast prepared for us in the highest! Come, Lord, we pray Thee, come speedily in the glory of thy kingdom! Come "in the name of the Lord," come in the majesty of power, come in the robe of mercy; come as Isaiah prophesied, "the Prince of peace." Isa. 9. 6. Come as the angel has interpreted thy name, "to save thy people from their sins." Matt. 1. 21.

Christ cometh to Jerusalem.

41 And when he was come near, he beheld the city, and wept over it,

42 Saying, If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes.

43 For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side,

44 And shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another; because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation.

45 ¹ And he went into the temple, and began to cast out them that sold therein, and them that bought;

46 Saying unto them, It is written, My house is the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves.

47 And he taught daily in the temple. But the chief priests and the scribes and the chief of the people sought to destroy him,

48 And could not find what they might do: for all the people || were very attentive to hear him.

¹ Matt. 21. 12.

|| Or, hanged on him.

§ 252. Justice and mercy.

Here we see both the justice and the mercifulness, “the goodness and severity of God.” Rom. 11. 22. Here we see Christ pitying those whom He so soon must punish, and casting out in wrath those whom He had so lately pitied. We are apt, in our weak apprehension, to confound these two great features in the dealings of the Almighty. We are tempted often so to trust in his mercy, as on the strength of it to continue in sin. Against this error let us take warning from the behaviour of our Lord here set down. Do we doubt his affectionate concern for Jerusalem? Let us then observe his tears, let us hear his words of bitter regret: “If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace!” Such are the tears our Saviour sheds for souls that perish! Such are the words He utters in our behalf, whilst we yet might perish not! Such is his tender love, his anxious desire to save, his concern for them that are lost!

But will He therefore forbear to punish? Did He forbear to punish Jerusalem? No, surely; the days did come upon that city when their enemies laid it even with the ground. Shall it be said that this was the work of man; and that, though man may destroy, Christ can only save? Nay we know that this destruction of Jerusalem is spoken of in Scripture as the visitation of Christ Himself. We know that it signifies with what certainty He will come in like manner, at the end of the world, to judge the quick and the dead. Then will He again enter into his temple; then purify his church, now many times polluted by sin. For what are Christians in this world but one temple of God; see 1 Cor. 3. 16; one house, which ought to be a “house of prayer?” If, instead of knowing the time of their visitation, they waste it in pleasurable sin; if, instead of seeking first the kingdom of God, they set their hearts on the comforts of the world; if they rob God of his honour, and defraud the Lord who bought them of their reasonable service; must they not take to themselves this description of the Jewish temple, “ye have made it a den of thieves?” Let not such men hope to escape through God’s great mercy, and through Christ’s great merits. It is by reason of those very merits, and of that very mercy, that He will assuredly cast them out. His goodness abused is the utmost aggravation of their sin. His having left the glory of the Father, taken on Him our flesh, and died for our sakes upon the cross, these are the things which above all others, render us inexcusable in our iniquity. We can no longer plead our weakness, when through Christ we might now have strength, when through Him we might have access to the Father, and grace to help in time of need. We need no longer feel the future hopeless, because of the burden of the past; when through Christ we may enjoy the assurance, that the past is all forgiven, that our sins are blotted out from the remembrance of God.

Let none then be led by hope of mercy, to continue in transgression. Least of all let any attempt to gainsay the truth which condemns themselves; to scoff at God’s word, or to make light of the excellency of their Saviour’s love. Unbelievers, like the scribes and Pharisees, seem often to be bent upon destroying Christ. But, like them, they cannot find what they might do. And the obstacle is in some sort still the same, that all the people are “very attentive to hear him.” The confidence which has been entertained by so great a multitude of mankind in the truth of Christianity, the minute attention that has been bestowed upon its history and proofs, render vain all attempts to subvert it. No one thing which we can know, is more certain than that Jesus is the Son of God; that in the Gospel the will of God is revealed. By that Gospel we shall be judged in the last day. Not according to our notions of goodness shall we be tried; but according to that goodness, which, whilst it pities the sinner, is for ever at enmity with sin.

Christ maintaineth his authority.

1 And it came to pass, that on one of those days, as he taught the people in the temple, and preached the gospel, the chief priests and the scribes came upon him with the elders,

2 And spake unto him, saying, Tell us, by what authority doest thou these things? or who is he that gave thee this authority?

3 And he answered and said unto them, I will also ask you one thing; and answer me:

4 The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?

5 And they reasoned with themselves, saying, If we shall say, From heaven; he will say, Why then believed ye him not?

6 But and if we say, Of men; all the people will stone us: for they be persuaded that John was a prophet.

7 And they answered, that they could not tell whence it was.

8 And Jesus said unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things.

1 Matt. 21 23.

§ 253. The misery of unbelief.

The Jewish rulers, having first resolved against belief, next demand of our Lord his authority. Thus they also, who set at nought Christ's ministers, are apt to question the validity of their office. "By what authority doest thou these things?" this is the secret murmur of the sinner who has been faithfully rebuked; this is the open objection of those who gainsay the ministry of the church. Such persons, in order to justify themselves, feel continually urged to prove in error those from whom they separate. And it is this circumstance, we may hope, rather than hatred, malice, and uncharitableness, which accounts for the bitterness that is apt to prevail between members of different communions. Let us resolve neither to revile those from whom we feel compelled to differ, nor to hate, though they revile us, those who differ from ourselves. And let us direct our anxiety, not so much to the making out others to be wrong, as to the ascertaining that we ourselves are right.

And for this end let us here put to our own hearts the question with which our Lord perplexed the chief priests and scribes and elders. Let us see whether it would not perplex ourselves, if it were put in some such form as this following. The Gospel of Christ, was it from heaven, or of men? However little we live as if it were from heaven, we dare not say, Of men. For "all the people," all our friends and neighbours and acquaintances, all the people amongst whom we live, are persuaded that He was even more than a prophet, and would hate though not stone us, for avowed infidelity. Many thus profess to be Christians merely because to be otherwise is a thing contemptible; because it argues a conceit of being wiser than the rest of mankind, and an ignorance of what all the rest of mankind well know. Not because they know any thing of the words or works of Christ, not because they care in any thing to serve Him, or hope in any thing to profit by his redemption, not on the grounds of real conviction are these Christians firm in their profession; but rather because the Gospel is the religion of the land, the religion which all around them acknowledge to be true.

And now to Christians such as these, if this question were put concerning the Gospel of Christ, Whence was it? Dare they say "From heaven?" Nay, dare any of us say "From heaven," without risk of the severe expostulation, "Why then believed ye him not?" Is believing to call one hour on the name of Christ, and the next to deceive, to flatter, to slander our fellow creatures? Is believing no more, than that morning and evening, we should cry, Lord, Lord, and all the rest of the day set at nought the will of our Father which is in heaven? Is it to indulge the flesh in every pleasure we have a mind to? Is it to seek after the enjoyments of the world, no matter at what risk to the saving of the soul? Is it to have our thoughts, our lives, our conversation, engrossed with the things seen, which are temporal; and neither to meditate on, nor hope for, nor so much as to desire, the things which are not seen, which are eternal? If this be to believe, then may we answer without risk of shame, that Christ and his Gospel are from heaven. But if whilst this has been the tenour of our lives, we feel it to be as far from faith as darkness is from light, who must not fear, lest in owning Jesus for the Christ, he expose himself to be reproved by the question, "Why then believed ye him not?"

What a sad consideration must this be to those who believe one way, and live another; or rather, who professing to believe, are in fact destitute of faith! What a miserable condition; that a man dare not so much as own to the faint convictions which he has, lest he only the more aggravate his sinfulness, in the lack of those graces which he has not! Never may we be thus afraid to answer, because thus unwilling to believe! Never may we be thus ashamed to confess to what we know, because it so ill agrees with what we do! Yet is not this the real reason why we so seldom speak as if the Gospel did indeed come from heaven? Is not this the reason why our lips are so seldom found to utter "that which is good to the use of edifying?" Eph. 4. 29. How else could it be that Christ has died in our behalf, and we never discourse of his sufferings or death? How, that for us He obtained the gifts of grace, and opened the gates of heaven, and that we never commune with each other of his love? How; if it be not, that when we would express the thoughts of how good He has been, we are silenced by the secret consciousness of how wicked we are ourselves!

The parable of the vineyard.

9 Then began he to speak to the people this parable; ¹A certain man planted a vineyard, and let it forth to husbandmen, and went into a far country for a long time.

10 And at the season he sent a servant to the husbandmen, that they should give him of the fruit of the vineyard: but the husbandmen beat him, and sent him away empty.

11 And again he sent another servant: and they beat him also, and entreated him shamefully, and sent him away empty.

12 And again he sent a third: and they wounded him also, and cast him out.

13 Then said the lord of the vineyard, What shall I do? I will send my beloved son: it may be they will reverence him when they see him.

14 But when the husbandmen saw him, they reasoned among themselves, saying, This is the heir:

come, let us kill him, that the inheritance may be our's.

15 So they cast him out of the vineyard, and killed him. What therefore shall the lord of the vineyard do unto them?

16 He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and shall give the vineyard to others. And when they heard it, they said, God forbid.

17 And he beheld them, and said, What is this then that is written, ²The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner?

18 Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

19 And the chief priests and the scribes the same hour sought to lay hands on him; and they feared the people: for they perceived that he had spoken this parable against them.

¹ Matt. 21. 33.

² Psal. 118. 22.

§ 254. That we must beware of rejecting Christ.

The Jews readily understood that this parable was directed against themselves. Their nation was the vineyard planted by the Almighty. Their prophets were the servants whom He had commissioned to receive the appointed fruits, obedience and holiness in his people. When they had cast out these, He at length sent unto them his Son. So much the more intent were the wicked husbandmen to put to death this last Messenger of the covenant. Therefore was their sentence thus fearfully set forth: "He shall come and destroy these husbandmen, and give the vineyard to others." And therefore was it written aforetime: "The stone which the builders rejected the same is become the head of the corner." See Psalm 118. 22. It was in these words foretold of the Jews, by their own king, that they would refuse the very stone which was of chief honour in their building, even their own Christ Himself.

The practical use, which we are to make of the punishment here denounced against the Jews, is to consider it as a warning to ourselves. God's vineyard is now given unto us. Of us does He require holiness and love, as the appropriate fruits of faith. To us does He in this parable very plainly threaten, that if we pay not this tribute, He will utterly destroy the husbandmen, and give again this vineyard to others. Shall we be content to say, "God forbid?" Shall we feel affected for one hour with the sense of our being accountable for every thing that we do; and the next, do without compunction all manner of sin? Shall we one while deprecate the pains of hell; and at another altogether forget their existence? Shall we see to day the necessity of caring for the soul, and tomorrow care only, or chiefly, for the comforts of the body? This would be like the Jews saying, "God forbid," whilst they continued to provoke his judgments; praying that He would not visit them in wrath, and yet seeking, as in the very next verse we read, "the same hour," to lay hands on his blessed Son.

It is not enough to say "God forbid;" unless we act so as for Him to withhold his arm from punishment. It is not enough to pray that his kingdom come; if we put it away from us in our thoughts and in our lives. He judges of our real wishes not by what we say, but by what we do; not only by what we do, but by what He sees we wish. These inward desires, these movements of the affection of the heart, these are our real prayers. And many times, it is to be feared, whilst outwardly we bow the knee to Christ, and with our tongues say, God forbid that we deny Him, our hearts do all the time, with stronger utterance proclaim, "Come let us kill him, that the inheritance may be our's." This is, if we would put Christ out of our thoughts, in order to enjoy the world as though it were our own. This is, if we would put out of our sight the duty we here owe to Him; that so we may follow only our own will, or go freely with the multitude to do evil. If we do so, and in proportion as we do so, we are rejecting that stone which is the head of the corner. We are stumbling at it, so as to fall to our destruction; so as that it will fall on us, and grind us to powder. Let us see then that above all we reverence the Son. Let us take heed that in all things we are glad to act as in his presence. Let us be thankful to the Father for having sent Him; to the Son for having come. Let us be careful to obey all the words that He has spoken. Let us be watchful to avoid all the sins He has denounced. Let us pray against sin, that we do it not, as well as against punishment, that we suffer it not; "God forbid!" God forbid that we should any longer love that which is evil! God not only forbid, but by his grace prevent! God bar against us the path of evil; stay us in our career of sin; make us to love that which He commands, and to hate that which He forbids!

Christ answereth the spies.

20 And they watched him, and sent forth spies, which should feign themselves just men, that they might take hold of his words, that so they might deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor.

21 And they asked him, saying, 'Master, we know that thou sayest and teachest rightly, neither acceptest thou the person of any, but teachest the way of God || truly:

22 Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar, or no?

23 But he perceived their craftiness, and said unto them, Why tempt ye me?

24 Shew me a penny. Whose image and superscription hath it? They answered and said, Cæsar's.

25 And he said unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which be Cæsar's, and unto God the things which be God's.

26 And they could not take hold of his words before the people: and they marvelled at his answer, and held their peace.

1 Matt. 22. 16.

|| Or, of a truth.

† See Matt. 18. 28.

§ 255. The end of worldly cunning.

We see here the common end of worldly cunning. These spies, who were sent on purpose to entrap our Saviour, are caught in their own snare; "in the same net which they hid privily, is their foot taken." Ps. 9. 15. The Jews had been many times, for their sins, made subject to a foreign yoke. They were now under the dominion of the Romans. And this circumstance was taken by the spies for the foundation of their captions question. They so framed their inquiry, as that it seemed to admit of no safe answer from our Lord. And their object all the while was, not to learn what they inquired, but to "deliver him unto the power and authority of the governor." They said one thing and meant another. They praised Him for teaching "the way of God truly," whilst they aimed to betray Him into the hand of man. They went to Him buying peace on their lips, but war in their hearts. Their words were "smoother than oil," and yet were they "very swords." Ps. 55. 22.

This then was the craftiness which Christ perceived in the spies. And now mark how ill they succeeded. "They could not take hold of his words before the people; and they marvelled at his answer, and they held their peace." Such is the common end of worldly cunning. It fails of its own object. It exposes those who practise it to disgrace. Whatever therefore you undertake, act openly, honestly. Go straight forward to what you aim at. Lay no snares for others, lest you be entangled in them yourselves. If you have a complaint to make, make it plainly; if a fault to find, do it without reserve. State your grievance; and if needful, assign your reason. Avow your object; and be ready on due occasions, to declare your motives. If you are afraid or ashamed to do this, there is probably something in them that there ought not to be. Either you are selfish in what you aim at; or at least you are not sure that you are charitable. You are indulging your own evil passions; or at least you are not working for your brother's good. There is nothing that you can have to do to him, out of true Christian love, which you might not better do openly, if painful, than by stealth. There is nothing you can wish to say, out of concern for his improvement, which you may not better say directly, than indirectly. Approach him not with fair words and a foul design; approach not with words of any kind different from your intent; lest you be acting like these spies, and have your end like theirs.

Christ easily confuted their questions, by the image and superscription of the money about which they inquired. This shewed them that they were wrong, to raise any question at all about the lawfulness of giving tribute to Cæsar. And his words should impress on us our bounden duty, to offer to the government, under which we live, both our tribute and our good will, our allegiance and our prayers. And further they may serve to remind us, that bearing as we do in us, the image and superscription of Christ, we are bound to render unto Him ourselves, our souls and bodies, as a tribute which is his just due. Are we not all called by his name, Christians? The appellations we are known by amongst each other, were not these given us at the time when we were dedicated to his service? Were we not at the first made after the image of God! See Gen. 1. 27. And though afterwards begotten by Adam, after his own image, see Gen. 5. 3, have we not, as Christians, been "renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created" us? Col. 3. 10. Have we not been predestinated to be conformed to the image of the Son of God? See Rom. 8. 29. Have we not in us now this blessed assurance, that "as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly?" 1 Cor. 15. 49. Thus the image and superscription which we have is Christ's. Let us render then unto Christ the things which are his. Let us render unto Christ ourselves. This is to render unto God the things which be God's; when we render unto God, through Christ, our hearts and souls, our outward conduct, and our inmost motives, our thoughts, our words, our deeds. He is King of kings, and Lord of lords. He is the Judge of all the earth; and He the fount of mercy. He makes war and makes peace; declares Himself to be ever at enmity with sin, and yet at all times ready to be reconciled to sinners, through the mediation of his blessed Son.

Christ refuteth the Sadducees.

27 ¹ Then came to him certain of the Sadducees, which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him,

28 Saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother.

29 There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children.

30 And the second took her to wife, and he died childless.

31 And the third took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children, and died.

32 Last of all the woman died also.

33 Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? for seven had her to wife.

34 And Jesus answering, said unto them, The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage:

35 But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage:

36 Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection.

37 Now that the dead are raised, ² even Moses shewed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob.

38 For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him.

¹ Matt. 22. 23.

² Exod. 3. 6.

§ 256. Of heavenly happiness.

That the happiness of heaven is of a kind far above our comprehension, is rendered probable, by our being told in Scripture what it is not rather than what it is. "There the wicked cease from troubling," Job 3. 17. The poor are there poor no more. See Luke 6. 20. The city, which we shall there inhabit, is one that has "no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it." Rev. 21. 23. The condition, in which men shall then exist, is one in which "they neither marry nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more." It is indeed added, "for they are equal unto the angels." But whilst we know so little of what angels are, this gives us no explicit information. Nor can we learn much more of what the righteous then will be, from their being called "the children of God," and the "children of the resurrection." For of God's ways we know only that they are not as our ways. See Isaiah 55. 8. And of the resurrection, we may still ask in ignorance, though we must never demand in doubt, "How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" 1 Cor. 15. 35.

St. Paul puts this question into the mouth of an unbeliever, who denied the resurrection of the body, because he could not imagine how it would take place. The Sadducees, on the other hand, took for granted that they knew how it must be, if at all. And as they conceived that they could prove this way to be impossible, they denied the resurrection altogether. Hence we learn the danger, as well as folly, of being wise beyond what is written; of setting up for knowing more of things spiritual than God has revealed in his word. God has not told us of those particulars, in which the glory of the next life will consist. If we determine for ourselves that it will be like our life on earth, we are surrounded by difficulties which no one can explain; and we run the risk of making shipwreck of our faith. If we are content to know nothing beyond what God has taught us, we are in the way to know more, both by the teaching of his Spirit in this present life, and by the actual enjoyment of the life which is to come.

This single consideration shewed the Sadducees, that they had no ground for denying the resurrection of the dead. Our Lord next shews them how, if they had searched the Scriptures, they might have found sufficient ground for believing it. This He argues from Jehovah being therein described, as "the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Exod. 3. 6. "For he is not," adds our Lord, "the God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him." They must have been alive therefore, when these words were spoken unto Moses. But they had long ceased to live in this world we live in. They were alive therefore in another world. They were alive in that world, in which we hope to live for ever. There we shall see Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob. There we shall meet the spirits of all just men made perfect. There we shall sit down in the kingdom of heaven, with all who are fit to dwell in the presence of the Lord.

How deeply should this great doctrine sink into our hearts! How powerfully should it affect the practice of our lives! We shall rise of a certainty from the dead. We shall rise to stand before the judgment seat of Christ. We shall rise, if only here we die in the Lord, to live with the Lord for ever. What a crown of glory is here set before us! And how faintly do we strive to obtain it! How high and heavenly is our calling! How low our hopes, how feeble our exertions! How spiritual is the life which we ought now to lead, with a view to that which we then might enter! How carnal are our thoughts, both of our present duties, and of our everlasting inheritance! Oh, never may we think of the resurrection of the dead, as of any earthly joys however excellent! Never may we conceive of heavenly love, as of any earthly affections, however pure and fervent! Let us set them, in our imagination, above all that we can now experience; and we shall be likely to desire them with the greater earnestness, and to seek them with the more lively and effectual zeal.

Christ denounceth the scribes.

39 Then certain of the scribes answering said, Master, thou hast well said.

40 And after that they durst not ask him any question at all.

41 And he said unto them, ¹How say they that Christ is David's son?

42 And David himself saith in the book of Psalms, The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand,

43 Till I make thine enemies thy footstool.

44 David therefore calleth him Lord, how is he then his son?

45 Then in the audience of all the people he said unto his disciples,

46 ²Beware of the scribes, which desire to walk in long robes, and love greetings in the markets, and the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts;

47 Which devour widows' houses, and for a shew make long prayers: the same shall receive greater damnation.

¹ Matt. 22. 42.

² Matt. 23. 5.

§ 257. That we must beware of hypocrites.

When the scribes found that the Sadducees were put to silence, they acknowledged to Jesus, "Master, thou hast well said." We might expect that thereupon they became converts to his doctrine. But far from it; they merely refrained from any further questions. "And after that they durst not ask him any." This we may fear is no very uncommon result of inquiry into Christian truth. Men are convinced in their minds, but their lives, their hearts, remain unchanged. They inquire no further, merely because they dare not: because they feel that each question more deeply convicts them of sin, far not believing unto repentance. But whatsoever truth we take in hand to examine, let us never stop, out of the fear of being convinced by Christ. Let us be prepared to cast away any prejudice, however strong, to leave off any practice, however greatly endeared to us, if we find it on inquiry, inconsistent with his word. Let us never be stayed by the fear of thus losing in his behalf the indulgences we love. But rather wherever we most suspect ourselves to be wrong, there let us the more endeavour to become right.

It is in this spirit that we must receive the doctrine which our Lord here next delivers, a doctrine most unwelcome to human pride, that Christ was at once David's Son and David's Lord; that He was at once both man and God. Here we have a great difficulty presented to our understanding. Here we might be tempted by an unworthy fear to close our hearts against inquiry. But how useful shall we find it to consider, that whilst as man He died in our behalf, as God He was able to atone for our sins! Let us desire therefore to know Him more and more, in both his characters. Was He man? Let us rejoice to think of Him, as One who called us his brethren. Was He God? Let us take Him for our Lord, for the Master of our thoughts and actions. Let us be assured, that if this be the truth of Scripture, it must be profitable for us to know it; and that it must be profitable for our growth in faith and love, in proportion as it is unwelcome to our pride.

In the charges which follow against the scribes, we see the reason of their reluctance to inquire and believe. They were not likely to desire to know the truth, when their hearts were set on the wearing of their robes, and "greetings in the markets," on "the highest seats in the synagogues, and the chief rooms at feasts." These things they loved out of ostentation; to shew their own consequence, to exalt themselves in the estimation of mankind. And to these they added the devouring of widows' houses, and the making long prayers, for a display of piety. As if it were the length, and not the fervency of prayer, that renders it a sign of devotion in the heart! As if any prayer could fail to aggravate their sins, if they all the while continued deliberately to wrong the most helpless of their fellow creatures.

Beware then of the scribes; not of their sins only, but of themselves! "Beware of the scribes." Beware of such as do what the scribes did! Beware of such as give their thoughts to dress! Beware of such as court the favour of the world, or delight in the world's distinctions! Beware of such as cover wicked actions by a fair outside, wrong those who are least able to right themselves, and pray, not in order to be, but to be thought, devout! Beware of them for they are dangerous to their friends and neighbours. Beware; for you are else not safe, either from their ill conduct, or from their ill example. Beware; for remember how awful is their sentence: "the same shall receive the greater damnation." The longer their prayers, their sin is so much the greater, and their condemnation so much the more severe. They offend the more against light and knowledge: they abuse, for a cloak of iniquity, that which is meant for the attainment of grace. Never may our prayers thus aggravate our sin! Never may they fail to help us unto holiness! Never may they be designed for show! Never destitute of faith and love! Then the more frequently we pray, we shall live the nearer unto God. And the longer we make our prayers, we shall pass the more time in thoughts of heaven. And the more we think of heaven, and the nearer we live to God, we shall be so much the less likely to oppress the weak or to defraud the helpless; so much the less ambitious of worldly honour, or vain of worldly dress.

Lord, be Thou ever at our right hand, to make all our enemies our footstool; to subdue our pride and covetousness; to set us above the world, the flesh, and the devil!

Christ commendeth a poor widow.

1 And he looked up, ¹and saw the rich men casting their gifts into the treasury.

2 And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two || mites.

3 And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all:

4 For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had.

5 ⁵ And as some spake of the temple, how it was adorned with goodly stones and gifts, he said,

6 As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down.

7 And they asked him, saying, Master, but when shall these things be? and what sign will there be, when these things shall come to pass?

8 And he said, Take heed that ye be not deceived: for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near: go ye not therefore after them.

¹ Mark 12. 41.

|| See Mark 12. 42.

⁵ Matt. 24. 1.

§ 258. That our actions are estimated by our means and motives.

The praising of this widow by our Lord enforces a doctrine, which we cannot too often call to mind; that our actions under the Gospel are estimated according to our means and motives. Christ pronounced expressly, "this poor widow hath cast in more than they all." And He adds the reason, that she of her penury had "cast in all the living that she had." This should convince us that the different conditions of life are by no means so uneven in reality, as we are too apt to suppose. There is no widow so poor, but that she may give as much, in the judgment at least of Christ, as the very wealthiest in the land. There is no man so feeble, so ignorant or so forlorn, but that he may be counted to serve God as effectually, if only he serve as faithfully, as the most able, the most active of mankind. We may be equal then in faith. We may be equal in love. We may be equal in being beloved by our Lord. We may be equal in being saved through his merits, in enjoying through his merey everlasting life. How trifling in comparison, are the things in which we differ! One may have a spacious residence, and another not know where to lay his head. One may be clothed in purple and fine linen; and another scarce covered with rags. One may fare sumptuously every day; and another be glad to feed on the crumbs which fall from a rich man's table. All this difference may seem important today. But what will it be found to be tomorrow? what, if the sentence shall have gone forth to both, "This night thy soul shall be required of thee?" Ch. 12. 20. Are they not both made of the same dust? and must they not both to the same dust return? Have they not both the same hope of glory set before them? Did not the same Saviour die for both?

But further this sentence should make us look well to our own hearts, in whatsoever we may reckon ourselves to be serving God. If we are lowly, only where we have no room for pride; if sober, only where there is no occasion for intemperance; if we are honest where there is no profit in deceit, pure where no lust, and meek where no provocation to be cross; we do but out of our "abundance cast in unto the offerings of God." We are yet short of the spirit of the Gospel, till we can be patient in suffering, humble in prosperity; till we can in plenty deny ourselves, or out of penury, cast in all the living that we have. What an incredible amount of alms would this appear in the possessor of ample wealth! But are his lands and horses more to him, than were to the widow those two mites which were all she had? How far less than her's must their bounty be esteemed, if they give only what they never miss, what they scarcely know how else to dispose of!

The treasury, into which those offerings were cast, was for the use and repair of the temple. And whilst his disciples admired the building, and its contents, the stones in its walls, and the gifts within, our Lord began to warn them that it was soon to be destroyed. "As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." When we consider that the gifts were cast in unto the treasury for this very temple's repair, we have fresh proof of how little their amount could signify, compared with the motive from which they were bestowed. Long before they could be wanted, both gifts and temple would be taken by the Romans and destroyed. And thus frequently it happens with that which here we undertake. However, carefully we plan, however diligently we labour, however freely we give; our object, as far as this world is concerned, many times fails. But if it have been our hearts' desire to do herein the will of Christ, in this we may notwithstanding have succeeded. If it have been our intent to subdue by selfdenial our rebellious passions, to mortify our covetousness, to suppress our anger, to humble our pride, in this we may have been making progress no less sure, from this we may derive no less ample profit. Let us then, in all we do, make our main end the honour of our Lord. Let us plan, let us labour, let us give, with a view always to the crown of glory. Then though we can give but little, we may be counted to give more than they all, more than all who give for earthly ends; and though the work of our hands here perish, we shall rejoice in the fruit of it for ever.

Christ foretelleth the visitation of Jerusalem.

9 But when ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified: for these things must first come to pass; but the end is not by and by.

10 'Then said he unto them, Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom:

11 And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven.

12 But before all these, they shall lay their hands on you, and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for my name's sake.

13 And it shall turn to you for a testimony.

14 'Settle it therefore in your hearts not to meditate before what ye shall answer:

15 For I will give you a mouth and wisdom, which all your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay nor resist.

16 And ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death.

17 And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.

18 'But there shall not an hair of your head perish.

19 In your patience possess ye your souls.

20 'And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh.

21 Then let them which are in Judæa flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto.

22 For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.

23 But woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days! for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people.

24 And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

¹ Matt. 24. 7.

² Matt. 10. 19.

³ Matt. 10. 30.

⁴ Matt. 24. 15.

§ 259. That we must not give way to fear.

This discourse evidently relates to what our Lord had before been speaking of, the destruction of the temple, as well as of the city of Jerusalem. It contains directions for the conduct of the disciples, under the pressure of this approaching distress. And these we may apply to our own instruction, under sorrow and suffering, to our preparation for the last coming of Christ to judge the world. And first we may here learn never to be alarmed, whether by wars or by commotions, whether by earthquakes, by famine, or by pestilence. Under all these trying circumstances, the duty of a Christian is still the same. "Be not terrified." Be not afraid, but that God will make all things work together for your good. Be not afraid, but believe. Be not afraid, but trust that through Christ you are redeemed to everlasting life. Be not afraid, but love.

The disciples are next warned that they should be delivered up to synagogues, to prisons, and to rulers, for the sake of Christ's name. They are assured that this shall turn for a testimony in their favour. They are exhorted to trust to Christ for direction from Heaven, as to what answer they should make. These their perils may lead us, when we reflect on them, to be thankful for the peace and security we enjoy, in the profession of the Christian faith. And as we have no testimony to bear to it, by imprisonment and stripes, so much the more should we do it honour in the conduct of our lives. How can we imagine that we should then have been willing to be martyrs, if we are not now desirous to be saints? How can we suppose that we should cheerfully have submitted to the pains of fire and sword, if we cannot now bear meekly the smile of scorn, or resist the cravings of desire? Again, the disciples are informed, that they shall be betrayed by their dearest friends and hated of all men, for the sake of the name of Christ. But they are told that not a hair of their heads should perish. And they are taught in patience to possess their souls. So likewise, if our Christian duty ever draws on us the displeasure of the world, or the hatred of those we love, we should console ourselves with thinking of God's tender care for all who obey his will. Not a hair of their heads shall perish. For we may not count that for lost which shall be restored in endless glory. And patience, if it have its perfect work, will secure both to soul and body, that through Christ they shall live for ever.

But though the disciples were to be patient, under any degree of persecution, which they might incur for the sake of the name of Christ, yet when the calamities of war began to encompass Jerusalem, then they were to fly for safety. The sword of foreigners was a fit scourge for the wickedness of the Jews; but to encounter it would then do no service to the cause of the Christians. Hence we learn the true method of discerning what dangers we ought patiently to abide, and what we should do well to flee from. We must cheerfully encounter all those in which the cause of the Gospel would be compromised by our flight; in which we may prove by our fortitude, our Christian faith. Whilst those which threaten health, or strength, or life for no better than a mere worldly end, those in which we risk our continuance in well doing for no end that concerns either God's honour, or the good of man, these are dangers which we must depart out of, if we are in the midst of them; and if we are out of them, we must not "enter thereinto."

God grant, that whilst we are never terrified by that which it is sin to fear, we may never fail to fear that which it is sin to do!

Christ foretelleth the last day.

25 And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring;

26 Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken.

27 And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

28 And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh.

29 And he spake to them a parable; Behold the fig tree, and all the trees;

30 When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand.

31 So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

32 Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled.

33 Heaven and earth shall pass away: but my words shall not pass away.

34 And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares.

35 For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth.

36 Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man.

37 And in the day time he was teaching in the temple; and at night he went out, and abode in the mount that is called the mount of Olives.

38 And all the people came early in the morning to him in the temple, for to hear him.

¹ Matt. 24. 29.

§ 260. The certainty of the judgment.

At this conclusion of the prophecy, our attention is more entirely directed to that day, when God "will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained." Acts 17. 31. The sun, and the moon, and the stars, may possibly in the first instance represent the powers that are of earth; but the signs here spoken of, will at length be seen in the lights of the firmament on high. The first great distress might be in the land of Judæa; but the last will be in all nations of the earth. The hearts of the Jews no doubt failed them for fear, as the time of their punishment approached; but so will those of all mankind, when they shall see the Son of man "coming in a cloud with power and great glory." When He should so come to visit his rebellious city, the disciples were to look up, and lift up their heads: when He shall so come to visit a disobedient world, the faithful of all ages shall then rise in glory. And surely as the shooting forth of the fig tree is the sign of the coming of summer; so certainly is the fulfilment of this prophecy in its first sense, so certainly is the beginning of these things to come to pass, so certainly this is the sign, that the prophecy in its more obvious application, will be finally fulfilled. When therefore the disciples saw Jerusalem destroyed; when we are assured of its having been destroyed exactly in the manner here foretold; we may thence of a certainty know, that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

By "nigh at hand," in this and other like passages, our Saviour does not so much mean near in point of time, as close to us in point of reality. He designs, by these expressions and illustrations, to bring, as we may say, home to our hearts, the apprehension of things eternal, the expectation of his second coming to judge the world. These things are so strange, so passing all our ordinary notions, and require of us, if heartily believed, such painful selfdenial, such arduous exertion; that we are apt to shake off the impression of their certainty, by dwelling on the probability of their being far distant. Our Lord therefore here gives us a sign, by which we may be as sure of their taking place, as we are of summer's arriving after the shooting of the trees. And further He tells us, that "this generation," this order of things we live in, "shall not pass away," till all that He has spoken of be fulfilled. Perishable as that which we see around us is, it shall be preserved for the sake of Christ's words being accomplished, in order that the will of God may be done. And to this He adds, that "heaven and earth shall pass away;" this outward world, which we deem so sure, shall fail, and utterly vanish, whilst yet his words, shall "not pass away;" this prophecy shall surely take effect. What an argument have we here for conviction; what a motive for sobriety and watchfulness! Death and judgment are more sure than life and all its vanities. The sun, and moon, and stars, the earth and all that is therein, shall fail; but Christ's words shall not fail, his glorious advent shall come to pass. Let us take heed then to ourselves, for "as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." By soberness and temperance, by charity, devotion, and faith, let us take heed that, however unawares it come, it may find us always ready. Let us watch always, and pray always; always be on our guard against sin, always have our hearts both aware that God is present to help, and leaning on his help for safety. That so we may be accounted worthy to escape "all these things that shall come to pass;" worthy not for our own sakes, worthy not by our own righteousness; but worthy for the sake of Jesus Christ, worthy through that righteousness which is by faith in Him.

Christ is sold to the Jews.

1 Now 'the feast of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is called the passover.

2 And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people.

3 'Then entered Satan into Judas surnamed Iscariot, being of the number of the twelve.

4 And he went his way, and communed with the chief priests and captains, how he might betray him unto them.

5 And they were glad, and covenanted to give him money.

6 And he promised, and sought opportunity to betray him unto them || in the absence of the multitude.

7 'Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed.

¹ Matt. 26. 2.

² Matt. 26. 14.

8 And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go and prepare us the passover, that we may eat.

9 And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare?

10 And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house where he entereth in.

11 And ye shall say unto the goodman of the house, The Master saith unto thee, Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?

12 And he shall shew you a large upper room furnished: there make ready.

13 And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.

|| Or, without tumult

³ Matt. 26. 17.

§ 261. The duty of being prepared.

See what it is that money once has done, all ye who delight in heaping up riches! It was for money, that Judas covenanted to betray his Lord. It was for money, that Christ was sold. It was for money, that they who thirsted for his blood, gained possession of our merciful Redeemer. Whosoever we are tempted to be covetous, when we long for what is not justly ours, when we would make haste to gain, or be slow to spend or give; let us think of this sad use that money once was put to, and beware lest we also sell our Lord for silver. Ere Jesus was thus betrayed, "Satan," we read, "entered into Judas." Satan enters into us, ere we wilfully undertake any flagrant sin. How else could we be so mad, as to defy the Father who made us, the Son who redeemed us, the Holy Ghost who alone can make us holy? How else could we be so ungrateful, as to fail to love Him, who has first so greatly loved us? It is an enemy that has done this. It is Satan who has entered into us. God forbid that we should suffer him so to enter any more! God help us to cast him out of our hearts for ever!

It is added of Judas Iscariot, that he was "of the number of the twelve." This is often noted in the Gospels; and therefore it is worthy of our frequent observation. It should remind us, that when God uses the ministry of man, He need not make his ministers perfect. It should help us to look up, through the ministry, unto Him who is our only true minister and priest, our one only shepherd and bishop of our souls. If we were accustomed to look more to Him for help and guidance, we should be less forward to censure those whom He has appointed to assist us, during the time of his absence from the earth. We should be less disheartened to find in them imperfection and sin, when we are sure of all truth, all strength, all virtue, all grace, in Him.

Our Lord would have preparation made as usual for the passover, though He knew that He Himself was, as the apostle calls Him, "our Passover." 1 Cor. 5. 7. That is to say, He was the very "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world," Rev. 13. 8; to save us from the death eternal, due to every one of us for our sins. The passover was a type or figure of his death, and of the atonement of his blood. And now that the reality should take place, it was time that the sign should be done away with. And yet even at the very end, He honours it with observing it. Let us learn to honour all the ordinances of God, for this single reason that they are his. Let us be assured that it is good for us to observe them, whether we can tell why it is good for us, or no. We shall find, as He has said to us. We shall be sure of profit, where He has promised grace. Let us make ready, not only where we know not why, but when we reckon it scarce possible to do what we prepare for. In temptation, though we might expect to fall, let us be prepared to give thanks, as for the victory. In death, though we might reasonably apprehend to perish, let us die with thoughts fitted for eternal life. And whilst this life and this world continue, and we might be apt to suppose that they will long abide, let us daily watch, and daily trim our lamps, that we may be ready to meet the bridegroom, in case He should this very hour return to judgment.

How busy were the Jews, on the occasion of the Passover, to put away all leaven from their houses! But how loath often are we to remove from our hearts that leaven of malice and wickedness, which our Lord commands us to suppress! How much is there still remaining of those evil propensities, which perpetually engender renewed transgression; which keep alive the succession of iniquity, both in ourselves and in those around us! Would that we might once be free from evil; once clean in our own consciences, and in the sight of God; once purposed, without reserve of evil inclination, to love God, and God only; to serve God, and God only; and to love and serve Him, as He is revealed to our faith, in Jesus Christ our Lord!

Christ ordaineth his holy supper.

14 ¹ And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him.

15 And he said unto them, || With desire I have desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer:

16 For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

17 And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves:

18 For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

19 ² And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.

20 Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood, which is shed for you.

21 ³ But, behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table.

22 And truly the Son of man goeth, as it was determined: but woe unto that man by whom he is betrayed!

23 And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

¹ Matt. 26. 20.

|| Or, I have heartily desired.

² Matt. 26. 26.

³ Matt. 26. 21.

§ 262. How kindly we are invited to the Lord's supper.

How careful was our Lord to observe the exact time for the eating of unleavened bread! "When the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him." What pains ought we to take to be punctual in our attendance on all religious duties! Let us mark, in each year, and month, and week, the days that are set apart for religious solemnities. Let us mark in each day the appointed hour for public worship or for private devotion. How great was the condescension of our Lord, that He should desire to eat with his disciples the passover before He suffered! How great is his condescension unto us, that He should desire to eat with us also his last supper; that He should have left us an ordinance, wherein we may, as it were, eat with Him, and drink with Him; whilst our thoughts are engaged with what He suffered for our sakes? Oh that every one who accounts himself a disciple, would apply to himself these gracious words: "with desire have I desired to eat this passover with you!" Oh that every one would accept this kind invitation: "Take this, and divide it among yourselves!" Oh that every one would consider, how the bread eaten at the supper here ordained is the body of Christ given for them, how the cup there administered is the new testament in the blood of Christ, which is shed for them! And yet far be it from those to come to the communion of Christ's body and blood, who are conscious all the while that they indulge in sins, which they neither repent of, nor endeavour to amend. Far be it from our communicants, that it should be said of them, "Behold the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table!" Let them still stay away, who purpose still wilfully to sin. Let them still stay away, who still hesitate between two masters. Let them still stay away from the supper of the Lord; for they have as yet no part in his inheritance, they must be shut out from sharing in his joys. And yet if any such frequent that table, this should be no hindrance to the rest. This should no more keep back others from communion, this will no more rob them of the spiritual food there given than the presence of Judas could deprive the other apostles of the comfort they derived from the blessing of the Lord.

And think not, that because it must be that many sin, therefore any may sin on with impunity. It was determined in the divine counsels that the Son of man should thus go, thus be betrayed to death. And yet woe was also determined against him, by whom the Son of man should go! It may be certain that many will offend; and yet it is "woe unto the world because of offences!" and especially, remember, it is "woe to that man by whom the offence cometh!" Matt. 18. 7. Let us never then be encouraged in doing wrong by the prevalence of sin in our neighbours. Let us inquire rather each among ourselves, let us each in our own selves examine whether we are guilty of doing this thing; whether in any way we have a hand in the betraying of our Lord. If we have, we may reasonably conclude that we are unfit to eat of his supper. But then let us examine further how sad is our condition if for any reason we eat not of it. Let us consider, how great was his love in this ordinance, how pressing his invitation, how earnest his desire, that we should with Himself partake of it. And then let us ask ourselves what thing can we do worse, what sin can we commit greater, than never to go nigh unto that table at all?

Ought we not of our own selves to wish to partake of food so excellent provided for our use? Ought we not to desire with very earnest affection to eat this passover with our Lord? Ought we to be glad of any excuse to avoid receiving this holy sacrament? Or ought we not rather to be deeply concerned at any thing which prevents us from attending? Ought we not to be anxious to receive it as often as opportunity is presented; that we may shew forth, as frequently as possible, the Lord's death, till He come? See 1 Cor. 11. 26. And should we not be sure thus to do, and thus to feel if only on that death of his our hopes of heaven were founded; if from that death of his we were deriving, as we ought to do, by faith, the nourishment of that spiritual life, in which alone we truly live?

Christ exhorteth to humility.

24 And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest.

25 ¹ And he said unto them, The kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.

26 But ye shall not be so: but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

27 For whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? is not he that sitteth at meat? but I am among you as he that serveth.

28 Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations.

29 And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me;

30 That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, ² and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel.

31 And the Lord said, Simon, Simon, behold, ³ Satan hath desired to haze you, that he may sift you as wheat:

32 But I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren.

33 And he said unto him, Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both into prison, and to death.

34 ⁴ And he said, I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest me.

¹ Matt. 20. 25.

² Matt. 19. 28.

³ 1 Pet. 5. 8

⁴ Matt. 26. 34.

§ 263. Consolation to the fallen.

Who would have thought that at this last supper of their Lord, there would have been strife among the disciples, which of them should be accounted the greatest? What a sure proof have we here that our Lord had given to St. Peter no such supreme authority as some mistaken Christians have imagined! What a warning, that the seeking after any such supremacy is an utter violation of the spirit of the Gospel! What an untimely question was this to raise at any hour, but most of all in an hour of affliction; in an hour when the disciples had been warned that their Lord was then actually betrayed, when they had begun to inquire among themselves which of them it was that should do this thing! If ever we are ourselves compassed with difficulties, if we are beset with trouble and temptation, let us at least not add wrangling and strife. Let us meet our difficulties by an increase of goodwill amongst each other. And the more we are distressed from without, we shall be the more at peace within. Times of public peril, or of private distress, are times, above all others, for every one to give up somewhat of his own claim to precedence; for every one to vie with his neighbour only in doing good, only in being humble, only in striving which should most serve his brethren, most help the helpless and relieve the sufferers.

And yet it must be owned that the times of trouble are also times of great temptation. It was in our Lord's greatest difficulty, and when Peter most thought that he never should have denied Him, then it was that Satan took opportunity to tempt Him to the denying of his Lord. Let us look to it then, that we suffer not ourselves to be led astray by too lively a confidence in our resolutions to do good. Often indeed, and especially when in trouble, we do no doubt all of us resolve, the liar to speak truth, the drunkard to become sober, the unclean to be henceforth pure, and the covetous no longer to love this present world. But if we make these resolutions in our own strength, we are none the nearer to a Christian life and conversation. For we live in a world of spirits. Satan is desiring to have us, that he may sift us as wheat; that he may toss us in temptations, as corn in a sieve. And it is only by the help of God's Holy Spirit that we can resist the devil, keep our good purposes, and have grace to stand in the hour of temptation.

Christ Himself prayed for Peter, calling him Simon, as if to shew that he now would lose that character for firmness, which his new name Peter signified. See Matt. 16. 18. John 1. 42. Christ Himself prayed for Simon, that his faith should not fail; and yet Simon, as we read afterwards, transgressed. Shall we then marvel if our prayers for a time seem fruitless? Shall we despond if occasionally we even greatly fall? Shall we doubt that we may yet be converted, yet return unto the fulness of faith and love, yet be able hereafter when strengthened ourselves, be able, both by our counsel and example to strengthen our brethren? No; let us be persuaded, that though thrice we should deny the Lord that bought us, though thrice we should fall into any grievous sin, there is pardon still ready to be vouchsafed, there is grace still accessible to our prayers. Only the more deeply we are persuaded of this truth, we must the more heartily endeavour to sin not at all; we must pray more fervently, purpose more stedfastly, more utterly distrust ourselves, and more entirely rely on God for help. In proportion as we are convinced that there is mercy with Him, therefore must we more fear to offend. See Ps. 130. 4. In proportion as we are more assured of his love, therefore must we love Him more. See 1 John 4. 19.

Thou, Lord, who knowest all things, knowest in how many things we offend. Pray for us, we pray Thee, that our faith fail not! Pray for us, and teach us to pray for ourselves! Teach us to pray with the firm assurance, that through Thee we shall be heard! Teach us, the more we pray for pardon, the more to labour that we sin no more!

Christ prayeth at the mount of Olives: is betrayed by Judas.

35 'And he said unto them, When I sent you without purse, and scrip, and shoes, lacked ye any thing? And they said, Nothing.

36 Then said he unto them, But now, he that hath a purse, let him take it, and likewise his scrip: and he that hath no sword, let him sell his garment, and buy one.

37 For I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in me, ' And he was reckoned among the transgressors: for the things concerning me have an end.

38 And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough.

39 'And he came out, and went, as he was wont, to the mount of Olives; and his disciples also followed him.

40 'And when he was at the place, he said unto them, Pray that ye enter not into temptation.

41 And he was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast, and kneeled down, and prayed,

42 Saying, Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me: nevertheless not my will, but thine, be done.

43 And there appeared an angel unto him from heaven, strengthening him.

44 And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.

45 And when he rose up from prayer, and was come to his disciples, he found them sleeping for sorrow,

46 And said unto them, Why sleep ye? rise and pray, lest ye enter into temptation.

47 And while he yet spake, 'behold a multitude, and he that was called Judas, one of the twelve, went before them, and drew near unto Jesus to kiss him.

48 But Jesus said unto him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?

¹ Matt. 10. 9.

² Is. 53. 12.

³ Matt. 26. 36.

⁴ Matt. 26. 41.

⁵ Matt. 26. 47.

§ 264. Watchfulness and prayer.

Our Lord first reminds his apostles, that when He sent them without purse and scrip, they lacked nothing. He now bids them provide themselves with all things needful, as for a journey; nay, and with a sword also as for war. This no doubt He speaks by way of shewing them, in a figure, what difficulties they had now to contend with, what zeal, and courage, and forethought, would be required for success in the work of an apostle. For that He did not mean them to use swords for self defence, much less for the conversion of the heathen, is evident from what passed afterwards, when Peter smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear. See ver. 51. Matt. 26. 52. And besides amongst so many as twelve, two swords could not have been "enough" for use, though they might well serve to represent in a lively manner the necessity of activity and resolution. Hence we may profitably observe, that there is no profession however evil in itself, however baneful in its consequences, either to those who follow it, or to the rest of mankind, which may not be made to furnish us with useful instruction in our Christian course. We are to be prudent, as the unjust steward was. And as soldiers are reckless of their lives, patient of fatigue, obedient to command, and ever watchful at their post; so should Christians, with like diligence and zeal in their high and holy cause, take to themselves "the shield of faith," "and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God;" Eph. 6. 16, 17; and go forth at all risk of labour and of life, to be made, like the great Captain of their salvation, "perfect through sufferings." Heb. 2. 10.

To his description of the weapons of our spiritual warfare, St. Paul adds the two great points, which were on this occasion also enforced by Christ, watchfulness and prayer: "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." Eph. 6. 18. "Why sleep ye?" This question we may well put unto ourselves, in our lethargy and apathy to every holy work. "Why sleep ye?" This we well may ask of those who suffer the enemy of souls to draw them into sin without resistance. "Why sleep ye?" This we well may say of what faint resistance we ourselves have offered to his daily and hourly temptations. "Why sleep ye! rise, and pray." Awake, my soul! Arise to prayer! Rouse up thy sluggish faculties, thy cold affections! Shake off thy dreams of worldly vanity! Hear with thine ears! See with thine eyes! Behold thine enemy is upon thee! Behold he has at hand the pit of destruction! Put on thine armour of celestial temper! Betake thyself to praying unto God! Kneel, stubborn knees, for see how Jesus, when He prayed, "kneeled down!" Feel, hardened heart, for see how Jesus felt! Behold his agony of pain, his sweat "as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground!" Behold, and feel thou thus! Behold, and do thou likewise!

"And while he yet spake," during the utterance of his earnest prayer, the multitude were approaching to take Him by force. At the very moment when He was thus counselling his disciples to pray, Judas came, and betrayed Him with a kiss. Would we see in its most offensive light the traitor's treason? Would we see in their true and hateful colours our own manifold iniquities? Let us take into the same view the sufferings of Christ, the prayer He uttered, the agony He felt, the gracious words He spake, the bitter death He died. How could we then fail to pray, if we were to feel his love in praying in our behalf? And how, if we were to pray as He would have us, how could we then fail to conquer?

Christ is denied by Peter.

49 When they which were about him saw what would follow, they said unto him, Lord, shall we smite with the sword?

50 And one of them smote the servant of the high priest, and cut off his right ear.

51 And Jesus answered and said, Suffer ye thus far. And he touched his ear, and healed him.

52 Then Jesus said unto the chief priests, and captains of the temple, and the elders, which were come to him, Be ye come out, as against a thief, with swords and staves?

53 When I was daily with you in the temple, ye stretched forth no hands against me: but this is your hour, and the power of darkness.

54 Then took they him, and led him, and brought him into the high priest's house. And Peter followed afar off.

55 And when they had kindled a fire in the midst of the hall, and were set down together, Peter sat down among them.

56 But a certain maid beheld him as he sat by the fire, and earnestly looked upon him, and said, This man was also with him.

57 And he denied him, saying, Woman, I know him not.

58 And after a little while another saw him, and said, Thou art also of them. And Peter said, Man, I am not.

59 And about the space of one hour after another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with him: for he is a Galilean.

60 And Peter said, Man, I know not what thou sayest. And immediately, while he yet spake, the cock crew.

61 And the Lord turned, and looked upon Peter. And Peter remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said unto him, Before the cock crew, thou shalt deny me thrice.

62 And Peter went out, and wept bitterly.

¹ Matt. 26. 57.

² Matt. 26. 69.

§ 265. How we should be good to the evil.

It was Peter, we learn from St. John 18. 10, who in his zeal seems to have taken literally the injunction of Christ, to provide himself with a sword; and who was now anxious to use it in the defence of his Master. It was Peter who so soon afterwards, in spite of all his resolution, was guilty of thrice denying Christ in public. Let us learn how close is the connexion between presumptuous confidence and shameful frailty. Let us call to mind, for our own greater warning, the declaration of Solomon, that "pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." Prov. 16. 18. It was for Peter to smite with the sword. It was for Christ to touch the ear of him that was smitten, and to heal him. Which then would we follow for our example? Which system would we pursue for the redress of evil in the world? severity or gentleness, punishment or love? They who are in authority may lawfully use punishment; for of the magistrate it is thus written by the apostle, "he beareth not the sword in vain." Rom. 13. 4. But for private persons to take the law into their own hands, for them to oppose wrong by violence, to avenge themselves of robbery, or even murder, by blood shedding, this seems most remote from that Christian temper, which would melt with kindness the obdurate hearts of those who are most bent on doing ill.

In the fall of Peter we see what comes of evil company. The apostle had sat down amongst the enemies of his Lord. Let us avoid the conversation of them that know not Christ, if we would not ourselves be tempted to deny Him. Here too we see the risk of making a brother to offend, by indulging as did the maidservants here spoken of, a vain or vexatious curiosity. Let us never for our own satisfaction persist in those unwelcome questions which are likely to provoke anger or to tempt to falsehood. Here further we see how one offence usually leads to the commission of another. And let us take warning against denying our Lord once, lest we be led on to deny Him thrice. But, Lord, in our oft repeated transgressions, be Thou nigh to look on us with love, and we may yet have hope to be forgiven! What a look was that which Thou didst cast on Peter! What tears of bitterness were those he shed! What sweetness was mingled in his cup of woe, to think that, when most utterly he had forgotten Thee, when most he had set at naught thy love, Thou wert still caring for him, thinking of him, looking at him, loving him!

When we were sinners, God gave his Son for us; when we were sinners, Christ died for us on the cross. Such was his love for us. Such should be our love towards each other. Let no unworthiness in the objects of relief be any hindrance to our zeal in relieving them! Let no inposition that may be practised, no denial of benefits received, check in us the desire to cast our bread upon the waters; or make us for one moment doubt the assurance, that, though it may be in some cases ill bestowed, and in many unthankfully received, we shall be sure to find it "after many days!" Eccles. 11. 1. And let us take pains, after the example here set us by our Lord, to add kindness in our manner to charity in our deeds. Let our very looks convince those, who have used us ill, that we desire to return good for evil. And how know we, or have we ever tried, whether love so unexpected, so undeserved, would not wring from the most bitter of our enemies the tears of conviction, remorse, and thankfulness?

How often, Lord, must Thou have looked upon us, and we not have noted thy kind regards! How often in our sins must we have stayed to smile, when we should rather have gone out to weep bitterly! Never may we henceforth fail to mourn for sin; never fail to love in return for pardon!

Christ is blasphemed ; owneth to being the Son of God.

63 And the men that held Jesus mocked him, and smote him.

64 And when they had blindfolded him, they struck him on the face, and asked him, saying, Prophecy, who is it that smote thee?

65 And many other things blasphemously spake they against him.

66 And as soon as it was day, the elders of the people and the chief priests and the scribes came together, and led him unto their council, saying,

67 Art thou the Christ? tell us. And he said unto them, If I tell you, ye will not believe:

68 And if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, nor let me go.

69 Hereafter shall the Son of man sit on the right hand of the power of God.

70 Then said they all, Art thou then the Son of God? And he said unto them, Ye say that I am.

71 And they said, What need we any further witness? for we ourselves have heard of his own mouth.

¹ Matt. 27. 1.

² Mark 14. 62.

§ 266. That we should follow readily our own convictions.

It was a chief part of our Lord's humiliation to be mocked and spoken against blasphemously. Words of contempt are often more hurtful to the feelings, than acts of injury. Let us learn from this divine example to bear with patience even these most trying of all affronts. What can be said to us more offensive, than for them that held Jesus to bid Him prophecy who it was that smote Him? What could be more offensive to Him, considering that He was not only a prophet, but even Himself God? And how, if He was not God, how else could St. Luke mean, that what was said was spoken blasphemously against Him? Nay how else could Christ assent to what the elders and chief priests and scribes demanded of Him, "art thou then the Son of God?"

And yet shocking to our feelings as such blasphemy must seem, we may do well to consider, with shame, that even in this Christian land Christ is still blasphemed every day. There are some who still deny Him to be the Son of God. There are many, who, owning Him for the blessed Son, yet profanely take his name in vain. There are many more who make light of his commandments. And what is this but mocking at his words? Whilst thus his word is by many set at nought, and He Himself denied, let us on all due occasions make profession of our faith in Him. And often also in our thoughts and prayers let us repeat our solemn conviction that we hold Him to be the Son of God, the Redeemer of the world. Let us lay the ground of our trust in this rock of our salvation. Let us love Him as our Redeemer, whilst we praise Him, and pray to Him, as our God.

How fearful to the professed unbeliever, how profitable as a warning to ourselves, are these words of Christ to the rulers of the Jews: "If I tell you, ye will not believe: And if I also ask you, ye will not answer me, nor let me go." Is it not here plainly taught us, that no testimony however strong can suffice, where the heart is bent against belief? Is it not here expressly signified, that there are questions, which we are averse to answer, and would not, if we could help it, answer even to our Lord? And has not this often been our case with those inquiries, which are put to us in the word of God, or which our conscience, God's voice within us, puts? Has it not asked, and we would not answer, how long wilt thou continue in sin? how long wilt thou refuse to repent? Has it not said, and we would not believe, thy iniquity will be thy ruin, thy Saviour has died for thy sins, his grace is sufficient for thee, his word can make thee whole? Are not these things written in God's word? Are they not set before us for our deliverance from sin, for our encouragement in holiness, for our peace, for our assurance of joy? Why then are we not glad at these tidings? Why are we not all at peace with each other, at peace with our consciences, and at peace with God? Is it not God that has told us these things? has He not told us by his only begotten Son? Is it not He who is the Word of the Father? Is it not He who came down from heaven on purpose to give us life and light? Why then do we not believe? Why? if it be not that we are still bent on sin, still prefer in our hearts sin to holiness, earth to heaven.

Lord, if thus Thou tellest us, grant that we may believe thy word! Lord, if thus thy Holy Spirit asks us for our good, grant that we may truly answer; may own with humility our own offences, and acknowledge thankfully thy love! Make us to bear faithful testimony to thy most gracious dealings! Make us glad to receive that witness which Thou with thine own mouth hast given! Help us both to say and know that Thou art the Son of God! Help us to have a lively faith in the atonement of thy death! Teach us to love that which Thou dost command, and to desire that which Thou dost promise! Guide us to follow Thee, in all lowliness, patience, and long suffering; and in the end let us enter into thy blessed inheritance, there to reign with Thee where Thou art, on the right hand of the power of God!

Christ is accused before Pilate ; is sent to Herod.

1 And the whole multitude of them arose, and led him unto Pilate.

2 And they began to accuse him, saying, We found this fellow perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæsar, saying that he himself is Christ a King.

3 And Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews? And he answered him, and said, Thou sayest it.

4 Then said Pilate to the chief priests and to the people, I find no fault in this man.

5 And they were the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people, teaching throughout all Jewry, beginning from Galilee to this place.

6 When Pilate heard of Galilee, he asked whether the man were a Galilæan.

7 And as soon as he knew that he belonged unto

Herod's jurisdiction, he sent him to Herod, who himself also was at Jerusalem at that time.

8 And when Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad: for he was desirous to see him of a long season, because he had heard many things of him; and he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him.

9 Then he questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing.

10 And the chief priests and scribes stood and vehemently accused him.

11 And Herod with his men of war set him at nought, and mocked him, and arrayed him in a gorgeous robe, and sent him again to Pilate.

12 And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together: for before they were at enmity between themselves.

Matt. 27. 11.

§ 267. What companions we ought to prefer.

Pilate was the Roman governor of Judæa, holding the supreme court at Jerusalem. Cæsar was the head of the Roman empire, unto whom the whole world was then subject. So that if Jesus had set up for being a king, as here pretended, He would have been easily found guilty of treason. His enemies, however, well knew that He laid no claim to any earthly tribute; and therefore their accusation of his having done so, was wilfully and maliciously false. And this probably is the reason why our Lord takes no notice of it at all. Whereas when Pilate asked Him, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" He is now no longer silent. "Thou sayest it." Thou sayest the thing that is. He assents, because here to have been silent might have led the governor into error. For He was indeed a King, though not in the sense which his enemies intended. Let us learn that there may be falsehood even in silence; let us learn from our Lord to beware of committing it. Let us not be content to keep our tongues from lying. Let us make a point, when we speak the truth, to speak the whole truth. For the sin of falsehood is in the heart; it is the attempt, it is the intention to deceive. It is the misleading the fellow creature whom we are bound to inform. Whether by our words or by our silence, by our actions or by our looks, if by any means we give him a notion other than we know to be the truth, we are false, in the sight of God who sees our hearts, and who hears though we hold our peace.

Notwithstanding our Lord's acknowledging that He was a King, Pilate could find no fault in Him. To this heathen it was plain that no treason was intended. But the Jews were only so much "the more fierce, saying, He stirreth up the people." Thus our Lord's going about to do good, his preaching of repentance, his healing the sick, his raising the dead, were construed into unlawful and seditious conduct. And thus also was the preaching of the apostles described by the Jews which believed not, as a turning of the world upside down. See Acts 17. 6. Would that both their writings and our Saviour's words might produce in us a conversion worthy of this description, might stir up in our hearts that strife of good against evil, which is the only tumult that Christ would wish to raise!

Pilate being aware of our Lord's innocency, ought at once to have set Him free. But though he appears to have been unwilling to do wrong, he was much more afraid to do that which was right. It is not enough to be afraid of doing evil; we must also love to do good. We must rejoice, at all cost of our own convenience to be the means of giving liberty to the captive, or maintaining the cause of the innocent. It was out of a sinful fear, that Pilate sent Christ to Herod. It was with a sinful joy that Herod received Him. "He was exceeding glad;" not with any view of the saving of his soul, but for the gratifying of a vain curiosity. "And he hoped to have seen some miracle done by him;" not for the conviction of his heart, but merely for the entertainment of his eyes. Never may we seek in any ordinance of religion, the amusement of the outward sense, but only the improvement of the inward disposition! Never sounds or sights of earthly pleasure, but only the edification of the soul!

"And the same day Pilate and Herod were made friends together:" the very day on which Herod sent back Christ to Pilate, and that, as one would think, much to his annoyance. What a reproof is here for Christians who fall out with each other over trifling grievances, such as helped rather to make friends of a heathen and a Jew! And what a friendship have we here described; a friendship, that was enmity with God! an unjust judge, and a king whose amusement was to mock the innocent; these were fit to shake hands on so sad an occasion! Never, Lord, may we make friends with thine enemies! Never may we be at variance with them that are thy friends! Never may we make sinful pleasure the bond of our society! Rather let us choose for our companions those whom we may believe that Thou hast chosen; those whom from their piety and zeal we may suppose to have been appointed through thy merits to the fellowship of saints and angels!

Christ is delivered to the will of the Jews.

13 ¹ And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people,

14 Said unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him:

15 No, nor yet Herod: for I sent you to him; and, lo, nothing worthy of death is done unto him.

16 I will therefore chastise him, and release him.

17 (For of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast.)

18 And they cried out all at once, saying, Away with this man, and release unto us Barabbas:

19 (Who for a certain sedition made in the city, and for murder, was cast into prison.)

20 Pilate therefore, willing to release Jesus, spake again to them.

21 But they cried, saying, Crucify him, crucify him.

22 And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.

23 And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed.

24 And Pilate || gave sentence that it should be as they required.

25 And he released unto them him that for sedition and murder was cast into prison, whom they had desired; but he delivered Jesus to their will.

26 ² And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one Simon, a Cyrenian, coming out of the country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus.

¹ Matt. 27. 23.

|| Or, assented.

² Matt. 27. 32.

§ 268. How we should bear the cross of Christ.

Pilate again bears witness that he could find no fault in Jesus. Again he shews a willingness to release his prisoner. Whilst the Jews "were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified." Thus far we see the uncircumcision, which was by nature judging them who by the letter and circumcision did transgress the law. See Rom. 2. 27. And herein we may have a warning, how privileges abused both sear the conscience and increase the condemnation. But would we know what we should be without privileges? would we see how far the uncircumcision, which was by nature, could fulfil the law? would we understand how much we owe to the grace of the Holy Ghost in any good that we have ever actually done? We need only look to what Pilate did. We need only observe that, willing as he was to release Jesus, he delivered Him in the end to the will of the Jews. Thus end the good intentions of the natural man. Thus end the best of purposes we can form, if we form them in reliance on our own strength and wisdom.

Herod too had examined our blessed Lord, and found in Him "nothing worthy of death." So ample is the testimony of his innocency! So important was it for us to know, that his enemies could prove no offence against Him. He was then a Lamb without spot. His atonement was entire, perfect; sufficient for the sins of all mankind. But the more He was proved to be innocent the more the people would have Him punished as guilty. What abundance of consolation should this fact afford to such of us as suffer from the malice of others, when we are aware that we have in no wise provoked it. For our sins we do indeed well deserve all this, and all other evil we can meet with. But though this were not the case, though we had no sins meriting this punishment at God's hands, might we not be still content to suffer wrong, when we reflect that it was thus that Christ suffered; when we consider that He who was the express image of the Father submitted for our sakes to such indignity as this? Surely it must be good for us also to endure the scorn and contradiction of those, who, as we should hope, know no better. It would be good for us, if first it reminded us that though we deserve not such treatment of our fellow creatures, we deserve much more severity at the hand of God. It will be good for us, if it make us both humble in our hearts, and in our conduct more circumspect not to give offence, not to have our good evil spoken of. See Rom. 14. 16. It will be good for us, if it incline us still the more to be patient in well-doing, in the hope that we may overcome evil with good. See Rom. 12. 21.

Thus might we, like Simon the Cyrenian, bear the cross after Jesus. This was done probably when our Lord, through weariness, could no longer carry it Himself. For the weight must have been heavy; and the spirits must at such a time have been greatly oppressed. What then must be the common frame of mind, of those amongst the disciples of Christ, who would take up their cross daily, and follow Him? Is it to be mirth without sobriety, or ought it not to be seriousness without gloom? A cross bearer is one who has a burden on his heart, one who feels the weight of sin to be grievous and intolerable. He is one who thinks often of what Christ endured; who mourns that he himself has helped by sin to swell those bitter pangs; and who laments with unaffected sorrow that they are so little regarded by the world. And this burden he bears "after Jesus;" in the way Christ went before him, after the pattern of his meekness, gentleness, and love. Whilst he is ready to condemn himself, he thinks no evil of his neighbour. And whilst he grieves continually in his own heart, he rejoices in the Lord always. See Phil. 4. 4.

Christ is crucified.

27 And there followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him.

28 But Jesus turning unto them said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves, and for your children.

29 For, behold, the days are coming, in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck.

30 ¹ Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us.

31 ² For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

32 ³ And there were also two other, malefactors, led with him to be put to death.

33 And when they were come to the place which is called || Calvary, there they crucified him, and the malefactors, one on the right hand, and the other on the left.

34 Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do. And they parted his raiment, and cast lots.

¹ Is. li. 19. Hos. x. 8. Rev. vi. 16.

² 1 Pet. iv. 17.

³ Matt. xxvii. 38.

|| Or, the place of a skull.

§ 269. The fruit of forgiveness.

It was well meant in this great company to follow Jesus, and in the women also to weep and lament for Him. Sympathy in affliction is sweet to those who suffer; and it is our duty both to feel and to express it. But in this case the Saviour of mankind was not so greatly to be pitied, as they who wept in his behalf. The cross was to Him, what our cross might always be to us, a crown of glory. Whilst to them the day was soon to come, when they should suffer, in the desolation of their city, the extremity of want and woe. So will it be also hereafter, amongst all nations of mankind. A day is fast approaching, when the wicked will "say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us." To be buried in the depths of the earth will be greatly to be preferred, to meeting the countenance of a Judge whom the sinner has ever wilfully affronted. For if these things were done in a green tree, if on Christ, the source of life to all things living, such suffering and death could be inflicted, what must we think that they will undergo who are dead in trespasses and sins, "what shall be done in the dry?" Surely neither all that our Lord endured, nor all that befel afterwards these daughters of Jerusalem, can give us the least notion of that endless misery, which awaits the impenitent offender. Let us weep then for ourselves and for our children. Let us weep to think that we are born into the world liable to this eternal perdition. Let us weep to conceive it possible, God grant it may not be probable, that either we, or they, or any of us, may thus perish from the light of his countenance for ever.

Two malefactors were led with Christ to be put to death at the same time. This was the very height of indignity. But this was also the fulfilling of a prophecy. There is no evil that man can do, out of which God cannot bring forth good. The affront, here offered by the Jews to our Lord, served to accomplish a prophecy of their own Scriptures. See Isaiah 53. 12. It serves therefore to confirm the faith of Christians. It serves to convince us, at this distant day, that the Jesus, who was thus numbered with the transgressors, was very Christ. And how greatly should this temper the severity of our judgments against such as suffer, like these malefactors, by the sentence of the laws. To be numbered amongst these outcasts of society, was one of the signs by which the Jews ought to have known their Messiah; to be "in the same condemnation," ver. 40, though He had "done nothing amiss." Let us hope that through his mercy and merits hereafter some of them may be with Him; some, though we know not which, and though we may justly fear, not many, who are raised by grace, at the latest hour, and from the worst of sins, to repentance and faith and love.

"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." What a prayer was this, at such a moment! What an example of meekness and patience, of gentleness and kindness, for us to follow at all hours, on all occasions! In our intercourse with each other, however deeply we are hurt in our feelings, let us at least suppose our brother to have meant us no offence. However much he may have injured our property, let us give him credit, as far as possible, for having meant no wrong. What peace would such a view of things produce amongst friends and neighbours! What peace would it insure in our own hearts! The perverse may oppose themselves; the insolent may affront; the false and malicious may revile. Neither their words nor actions can do us harm, or interfere with the current of our happiness, so long as we have grace at each injury to repeat, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do!" And what words of mercy have we here for the encouragement of our Christian hope! what a proof that the Judge, who has to pronounce our sentence, will put the kindest of all conceivable constructions on the worst of practicable acts. Whilst therefore we weep to think how ill our sins deserve, let us at the same time rejoice to know, how far better than our deserts we shall receive. Even for those who crucified the Saviour of the world, there was allowed something for their ignorance of what they were about. And so far as our ignorance is no fault of ours, so far as we sin for want of knowing better, and know no better for want of having been better taught, we may venture with all humble thankfulness to hope, that the voice of the same Mediator is still heard to say, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

Christ between two thieves on the cross ; giveth up the ghost.

35 And the people stood beholding. And the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others; let him save himself, if he be Christ, the chosen of God.

36 And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, and offering him vinegar,

37 And saying, If thou be the king of the Jews, save thyself.

38 And a superscription also was written over him in letters of Greek, and Latin, and Hebrew, THIS IS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

39 And one of the malefactors which were hanged railed on him, saying, If thou be Christ, save thyself and us.

40 But the other answering rebuked him, saying, Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?

41 And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss.

42 And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom.

43 And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To day shalt thou be with me in paradise.

44 And it was about the sixth hour, and there was a darkness over all the || earth until the ninth hour.

45 And the sun was darkened, and the veil of the temple was rent in the midst.

46 And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, ' Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit: and having said thus, he gave up the ghost.

47 Now when the centurion saw what was done, he glorified God, saying, Certainly this was a righteous man.

|| Or, land.

¹ Ps. 31. 5.

§ 270. The way to die a Christian death.

We cannot think that the rulers and the soldiers would have thus mocked and derided Christ, if they had known who He really was. See how great is the danger of any evil habit; how perilous the practice of mockery and scorn. See how often, if in such mirth we indulge at all, it may happen that we affront those persons, whom we least would wish! We shall do well then herein to consider every man a brother of our own, whose feelings we would in no wise hurt. We shall do better, to see in every man a brother of our Lord, nay the image of our Lord Himself; and to reflect, if in any instance we are tempted to deride, that even thus, in this form, which we would make light of, was Christ Himself derided.

And here also we have a signal instance how Christ crucified, whether seen or preached, is effectual for the converting of a sinner. Here we have fulfilled what our Lord had elsewhere said, "the one shall be taken, and the other left." Matt. 24. 40. Both were malefactors. Both at first had reviled our Lord. See Matt. 27. 44. Both were within reach of the means of salvation. Both were close to the cross of Christ. Yet one spent those last moments in reviling Him, which the other employed in penitence and prayer. Of those who shall be saved, and of those who must be lost, the opportunities and privileges may often be the same. But see how much depends on how we use them! See how much depends upon God's grace inclining us to use them for the best! And see further how many things are here recorded as being done by him that was forgiven! He faithfully reproves sin in his neighbour. "Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation?" He acknowledges his own sinfulness. "And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds." And whilst he feels that his own sufferings are the due reward of his sins, he bears witness to Jesus, that He had "done nothing amiss." And above all, he concludes all with prayer, with prayer founded on faith in Christ: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

But here think not only of the one thief who was saved on the cross; whilst you forget that the other was very probably lost. Trust not that you may therefore put off safely to the end, that amendment of life which should take place from this hour. Are you sure that when death shall come, you will be like the one thief rather than the other? Are you sure that you shall then have grace to pray to Christ, and faith to lay hold of his cross? You are not. You can know no more, than that now is the day of salvation. Now God calls. Will you now hear? Now Christ cries unto you, Come unto me. Will you now come? Will you now believe? Will you now come and be saved? If not, what is it that now hinders you? And what ground have you to think, but that the same, or some more fatal hindrance, will beset you in your last hour? Turn then thou sinner that art self condemned, turn from the cross of the malefactor, to the cross of Christ! See there your real ground of hope for pardon, not in the thief saved, but in Christ who saved him; not in the late contrition of your fellow sinner, but in the blood of that Lamb without spot, which taketh away the sins of the world! See there your true pattern of a Christian life, even that which has no need to be repented of! See there your true example of a Christian death, even that which concludes a Christian life! "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." These are words which we should rejoice to be able to say, when the end of life shall come. And how shall we then say words like these, if now we never love God as our Father, or make it our chief endeavour to obey his will? How, if we never live by faith, never walk in holiness of life, how shall we be able so to die, as that the beholders shall glorify God, and say, "Certainly this was a righteous man?"

Christ is buried.

48 And all the people that came together to that sight, beholding the things which were done, smote their breasts, and returned.

49 And all his acquaintance, and the women that followed him from Galilee, stood afar off, beholding these things.

50 ¹ And, behold, there was a man named Joseph, a counsellor; and he was a good man, and a just:

51 (The same had not consented to the counsel and deed of them;) he was of Arimathæa, a city of the Jews: who also himself waited for the kingdom of God.

52 This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus.

53 And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid.

54 And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on.

55 And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid.

56 And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment.

¹ Matt. 27. 57.

§ 271. Against selfishness.

From the death and burial of our Lord St. Paul has drawn an argument for a holy life, describing it as the dying unto sin, and the being buried with Christ in his death. See Rom. 6. 4, 11. And he speaks of himself and of his fellow labourers in the Gospel as “always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body.” 2 Cor. 4. 10. Let us therefore now reflect on the condition of Christ buried. Let us consider ourselves as being buried with Him in his death. Let us endeavour to bear about in the body his dying for us. Let us keep our hands as clear from wrong, as though they were laid in the grave; our eyes from looking after evil, our tongues from talking folly or iniquity. Let us mortify the lusts of the flesh; hungering for no dainty food, or at least not gratifying our appetite; thirsting for no excess of drink, or at least refraining from its enjoyment. Let us enjoy nothing that is unlawful; let us feel that it would be no enjoyment to us. Let us abstain also from many things that are lawful, whensoever we may know it to be expedient, whensoever we should without them be more like to Christ. Then shall we, like Him, fare better in our death, than in this present life. And as He was taken from having no where to lay his head, and buried in the sepulchre of the rich; so shall we be removed from our wants and infirmities, to enjoy the riches of eternal life.

And here let us observe of these faithful women who designed to embalm our Lord, how carefully they “rested on the sabbath day according to the commandment.” This was on the day hallowed among the Jews, the day counted as their seventh in order, either the seventh from the creation of the world, see Exod. 20. 12, or if that reckoning, as is probable, had been lost, the seventh from their deliverance out of the land of Egypt. See Deut. 5. 15. On this day our Lord lay dead in the sepulchre of Joseph. On the next, which was the first day of the Jewish week, He arose from the dead. Hence Christians have ever since counted this first day for their seventh, have rested on this first day as their sabbath, “according to the commandment.” Let us be watchful that on our Christian sabbath we rest from our worldly work. Let us be desirous to make it what we call it, the Lord’s day, by more than ordinary diligence in that devotion of heart and edification of the soul, which are most eminently the work of the Lord.

And further let us observe what an effort of self denial it must have been in Joseph of Arimathæa, to give a place, in his new tomb, to the body of a stranger. In our burials we indulge naturally the feelings of family affection. And for many who would entertain strangers at their table, there are few who would admit them to a place in their sepulchre. Here we learn that Christian kindness must overpower all other considerations. Here we see that, on due occasions, we should be ready to forego a burial place of our own, for our neighbour’s use. For our neighbour’s, nay, for a stranger’s use; for is not every stranger, whom we can serve, our neighbour? And is not every neighbour in the place of Christ Himself; entitled to all those good offices at our hands, which, if Christ were here, we should be happy to pay to Him?

If then we must thus refrain from selfishness, in a matter where our feelings are so deeply concerned, how much more ought we on all ordinary occasions, to look, not so much to our own advantage as to that of others! How willingly and cheerfully should we give up to their convenience, not only our comfort, and pleasure, but even the property which we hold most sacred? For what indeed will these things avail us, except as we do good with them? And what good can we do with them so appropriate, as to give freely what we have freely received. Let us ever be aware, that selfishness is not only most odious in the sight of men, but also most sinful in the eyes of God. Let us practise to leave off being selfish. Let us rejoice in any occasion which occurs, to mortify in ourselves the pleasure we are apt to feel in having any thing of our own. Let us rejoice rather to see it useful in the hands of our brother, than to have it hoarded unprofitably in our possession. And when the day of our departure shall arrive, though we had nothing left but a tomb to be buried in, nay, though we had thus disposed of our very sepulchre, how should we be the less fitted for the life we have then to enter, where nothing which we here have can follow us?

Christ's resurrection is declared by two angels.

1 Now ¹upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them.

2 And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre.

3 And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

4 And it came to pass, as they were much perplexed thereabout, behold, two men stood by them in shining garments:

5 And as they were afraid, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye || the living among the dead?

6 He is not here, but is risen: ²remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee,

¹ Matt. 28. 1.

|| Or, him that liveth.

² Matt. 17. 23.

³ John 20. 6.

7 Saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again.

8 And they remembered his words,

9 And returned from the sepulchre, and told all these things unto the eleven, and to all the rest.

10 It was Mary Magdalene, and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women that were with them, which told these things unto the apostles.

11 And their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not.

12 ³ Then arose Peter, and ran unto the sepulchre; and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass.

§ 272. That we must rise again in holiness of life.

It was a great privilege for these women to be the first who were made aware of our Lord's having risen from the dead. It was an advantage which they attained to, by having been the first to pay Him honour, when they thought Him dead. "Very early in the morning they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared." Let us do with zeal all the duties we are aware of, and we shall often meet with advantages which we little look for. The stone rolled away from the sepulchre may thus signify to us, how we shall find all hindrances removed, and help afforded to our frailty, if only we do in earnest try to do what we know we ought, however hard, however impracticable, it may seem. God has given us no commandment which is not for our good. And He has promised us, if we be disciples of our Lord, that no temptation shall befall us, beyond what we shall be able to bear; that He will with the temptation make also a way to escape. See 1 Cor. 10. 13. Angels there are that minister "for them who shall be heirs of salvation." Heb. 1. 14. Though we see not their outward form we must believe that they are nigh to help. We may conceive their shining raiment, and imagine ourselves to hear their heavenly voices, reminding us of the promises of Christ our Lord.

Would that we may ever remember his words! Would that what He promised, and what He surely will perform, may never seem to us as "idle tales," and we believe them not! Yet how can we be believing, unless we live by faith; unless we act as if Jesus were indeed risen from the dead, and as if we should in like manner rise ourselves? And who that believes this of his own perishable body would here pamper it with excess of food, with luxury of dress, or with sensual indolence? Who that believes this of his mortal frame, that it will live in a new life for ever, who would fail here to mortify it in evil, and to exercise it in purity, diligence, and love? Surely if we never deny the flesh, if we never weary it in well doing, if we never subject it to the spirit, in a course of painful and profitable duties, we cannot really believe that it will rise again as Christ has said. We must be counted rather to take his words for idle tales, we must be numbered amongst them which believe not.

Never may we so dishonour Christ with our lives, while with our lips we profess to serve Him! Never may we fail to live according to our profession, as they that hope for a better resurrection! Never may we neglect to tell each other whatever of good we are taught from God ourselves! Never may we refuse to learn whatever God would teach, or what men as his ministers, are commissioned to enforce! Least of all let us neglect the great truths here repeated, that Christ must needs "be crucified, and the third day rise again." These are the words of consolation, of which the angels reminded the most faithful disciples of Christ. These are the doctrines best fitted either to moderate our sorrows, or to allay our fears. That our Lord must "be crucified," how should this help us to take up cheerfully any cross which we ourselves must bear! How should this convince us, that through his death we obtain eternal life! That He must on "the third day rise again," how should this replenish us with hope, that after the few short days of this present life, we shall rise to endless glory! Thus to derive from his death and resurrection the assurance that we shall not die eternally, this is to remember his words. But to suppose that we can by any other means be saved, than through Him; to what does this lead, but only to perplexity? To think that we can live but by his death, or can rise again, except by his resurrection; to purpose in our own wisdom, to try in our own strength, not his, to have a hope of holiness or heaven, and He not present to our thoughts; what is this but to seek "the living among the dead?"

Christ appeareth to the disciples in the way to Emmaus.

13 ¹ And, behold, two of them went that same day to a village called Emmaus, which was from Jerusalem about threescore furlongs.

14 And they talked together of all these things which had happened.

15 And it came to pass, that, while they communed together and reasoned, Jesus himself drew near, and went with them.

16 But their eyes were holden that they should not know him.

17 And he said unto them, What manner of communications are these that ye have one to another, as ye walk, and are sad?

18 And the one of them, whose name was Cleopas, answering said unto him, Art thou only a stranger in Jerusalem, and hast not known the things which are come to pass there in these days?

19 And he said unto them, What things? And they said unto him, Concerning Jesus of Nazareth, which was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people:

20 And how the chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him.

21 But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, to day is the third day since these things were done.

22 Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which were early at the sepulchre;

23 And when they found not his body, they came, saying, that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that he was alive.

24 And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulchre, and found it even so as the women had said: but him they saw not.

25 Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken:

26 Ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into his glory?

27 And beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself.

¹ Mark 16. 12.

§ 273. The necessity of divine teaching.

There can be no doubt that our Lord must have risen from the grave, with a glorified body, such as we read He will give to all his disciples at the last day. See 1 Cor 15. 42. And yet this it appears was in some way like unto the body He had before; else there would have been no need for the eyes of the disciples to be "holden that they should not know him." This agrees with what we elsewhere have applied to the general resurrection, that God giveth "to every seed his own body." 1 Cor. 15. 38. And this may reasonably encourage us to think, that when there shall no longer be any occasion for our eyes to be holden, we shall have the happiness to know again those friends, whom we have loved on earth. But if it be true as we may in like manner argue from this passage, that we shall also know our Saviour Christ; if it be true that "when he shall appear, we shall be like him," and "shall see him as he is," 1 John 3. 2; ought not this to be the thing foremost in our thoughts when we meditate on our hope of heavenly bliss? Ought not this to be our chief topic of consolation in behalf of our friends who first depart, not that we shall see their face again, but that they, and we with them, shall behold Christ in glory? Where God is, there is heaven. Without Him heaven cannot be. With Him, though no one else were there, though all we now love were lost; with Him, can we suppose it to be possible, that heaven is not all we could desire?

It was natural for the disciples as they journeyed to talk of the things which had happened at Jerusalem. But it seems strange that when they knew the prophecies so well, they should still need the voice of Christ Himself, to direct them to a due interpretation. Yet so it is at this hour with ourselves. We may know all Scripture, not only the prophecies, but also the Gospels and Epistles; all this we may know without profitable understanding, unless our Lord Himself vouchsafe to teach us. Let us beseech Him to expound to us the things concerning Himself. Let us be aware, that without his doing so, all reading of the Scriptures is in vain. It may make us learned, but it will not make us wise; it will not make us wise unto salvation. See 2 Tim. 3. 15. It will not make what we read sink into our hearts. It will not make what we know influence our souls. Without this teaching of our Lord, we may indeed often talk of Him, as the disciples did, but be no nearer than they were to the knowing of Him. His name may be in our mouths, but not the love of Him in our hearts; nor any faith in his holy name be animating our thoughts, and words, and actions. We may know that He was a prophet mighty in word and deed; but not feel that He revealed God's will to us, for the direction of our lives. We may have heard how He was by the rulers condemned to death; and yet have never felt, how He died for us, and for our sins; have never found how by his stripes we are healed, by his blood we are reconciled to the Father. Only Christ Himself can teach us this. And He will do so, only if we ask of Him in prayer. And we cannot even pray properly without his help.

Turn Thou then us, O Lord; and so shall we be turned! Teach Thou us; and so shall we know Thee as we ought! Take from us all slowness of heart to believe; all coldness of affection to pray! Help us to commune with each other about the things which once happened unto Thee! Expound to us in all the Scriptures the things concerning Thyself! And the more we confer on thy sufferings, the more we are sad to think of thy affliction, do Thou, O Lord, the more draw near unto our souls, to give us knowledge, and faith, and joy!

Christ is known by the disciples, in breaking of bread.

28 And they drew nigh unto the village, whither they went, and he made as though he would have gone further.

29 But they constrained him, saying, Abide with us: for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them.

* 30 And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them.

31 And their eyes were opened, and they knew him; and he vanished out of their sight.

32 And they said one to another, Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the scriptures?

33 And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, 34 Saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon.

35 And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.

|| Or, ceased to be seen of them.

§ 274. How we should draw in others to the Lord's supper.

The apostle argues in favour of hospitality, that "some have entertained angels unawares." Heb. 13. 2. Here we see how these disciples had the happiness thus unwittingly to entertain their Lord. "They constrained him, saying, Abide with us; for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them." This is a still stronger motive to be hospitable. For though Christ be no longer tarrying on earth, we may be counted to give him food and lodging, if we do so, in his name, for his sake, to them that need it. When therefore "it is towards evening, and the day is far spent," let us be glad if we have opportunity, to give shelter to the houseless. Let us be glad if it is in our power, to relieve the wants of that brother for whom Christ died. And let us daily use ourselves to see in all mankind, especially in those whom we most might help, this brotherhood to Christ, this image of our Redeemer, this community of interest in his most precious death. Thus might we more frequently put in practice the love which we owe ourselves to owe to Him, if we could more continually bear in mind, that He has commissioned us to exercise it towards all, in whose behalf He died.

"And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them." We may suppose that, ere their meal was over, they would have done this of themselves, in remembrance of their Lord. Or it may be, that in thus doing He meant to remind them, that thus they should fulfil his commandment. He had need to make Himself known to them; and He chose to do it by an action which was well calculated both to instruct, and to console them. It must at once have recalled their thoughts to the last supper which He had eaten with his apostles. And if in the mean time they had all forsaken Him and fled, if on this very occasion they had shewn how little they understood of his divine nature, how seasonably must He now have satisfied them that He was willing to overlook their failings, that He took them back to be his disciples, to be beloved by Him as before, to partake of the same food at his hands, and to enjoy the same blessing from his lips!

No wonder that they reproved themselves, for their slowness of apprehension, in not knowing Him, by his exposition of the Scriptures! No wonder that they were eager to go tell their brethren, "The Lord is risen indeed." And must not we, in like manner, often be surprised, that our hearts burn not within us, as we read the very words of Christ, and hear Him expound, as with his own lips, the Scriptures that were fulfilled in Himself? How is it that we know these things, and think not of them more frequently, more affectionately? How is it that we know these things, and cherish not in our hearts a more earnest hope of heaven, a more lively love for God? When thus we feel for our own condition, let us feel also for the state of our brethren. Let us endeavour to inform them by our words and works, of what we have discovered to our own spiritual joy. Let us say to them, both with our lips, and by the more powerful argument of our lives, "The Lord is risen indeed." Let us shew forth this truth in our being dead unto sin, and in our rising again unto righteousness. Let us tell it out, by our strict attention to truth in our words, and to honesty in our dealings; by our watchfulness against envying, or slandering; against indulgence in any sinful pleasure, or excess in any allowed indulgence; by our public devotion, and by our private alms; by our gifts and by our prayers, by our words and by our works; let us tell it out both to our friends and to strangers, both to Christians at home, and to the heathen abroad, let us tell it out, that "the Lord is risen indeed."

And especially if Christ have been known to us, in the breaking of bread; if we have found increase of knowledge and faith and love, in receiving the supper of the Lord; let us make a point of winning over to that ordinance, each of us, some of our friends or neighbours, whom we think we might thus influence for good. This is the way that those societies are enlarged, which aim chiefly at some worldly advantage. Those who find in such communities pleasure or profit, draw in one by one all whom they wish to serve. Why should we not thus draw to the communion of Christ, why should we not urge to the receiving of his supper, all whom we find to be yet absent, all whom we think that they might profit by attending? Why should we not, by our counsel and entreaties, by our example, our exhortations, and our prayers, compel all whom we can influence to come in unto our Lord, that his wedding may be furnished with guests, that his house may be filled? See Matt. 22. 10. Luke 14. 23.

Christ appeareth to the eleven at Jerusalem.

36 ¹ And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you.

37 But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.

38 And he said unto them, Why are ye troubled? and why do thoughts arise in your hearts?

39 Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.

40 And when he had thus spoken, he shewed them his hands and his feet.

41 And while they yet believed not for joy, and wondered, he said unto them, Have ye here any meat?

42 And they gave him a piece of a broiled fish, and of air honey-comb.

43 And he took it, and did eat before them.

44 And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me.

45 Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures,

46 And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day:

47 And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.

48 And ye are witnesses of these things.

49 ² And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.

¹ Mark 16.

² John 15. 26. Acts 1. 4.

§ 275. How far we may not believe for joy.

The first appearance of our Lord to the eleven, at Jerusalem, was accompanied with these words of consolation, "Peace be unto you." Thus was peace on earth amongst the things assured by the angels to mankind, when the Saviour of the world was born. See ch. 2. 14. How is it that we still have fightings and wars without, and still strife and fear within our hearts? How, if it be not that we are yet far from Christ, far from seeking after his promises, far from doing and loving his commandments? It is not easy to say why the apostles should be alarmed at thinking "that they had seen a spirit." But such is the usual frame of the human mind. Though we know that in the world of spirits the good are supreme over the evil, we seem always to apprehend some injury, from any such intercourse which we can imagine that they hold with ourselves. This must arise from our being conscious of so much sinfulness, that we cannot bear to think of meeting face to face, beings so much more holy, and pure, and good. Else to think that we see the spirit of a friend we love, would fill us with unmingled joy. And the apostles would have been as glad to see the spirit of their Lord, as they were when they discovered that it was his very body which they beheld. In proof that it was so, He both shewed them his hands and feet, marked with the nails of the cross, and He also ate in their presence "a piece of a broiled fish, and of an honeycomb." He then pointed out to them how in all that had happened, both the Scriptures and his own very words which He had spoken, were fulfilled. And the great object of the whole dispensation He explained to be, "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." And yet this work was not to be commenced, till one other chief promise of the Father was fulfilled, the enduing them with "power from on high."

Of those who were blest with this sight of Jesus we here read that they "believed not for joy." This reminds us of what is said of the patriarch, when he was told that Joseph was yet alive: "Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not." Gen. 45. 26. Here was no wish that the tidings should be untrue, but a fear to believe, lest they should not be realized. Is this, let us now ask, is this the cause of the unbelief that still prevails amongst mankind? Is this, let us now examine, is this the cause of our own faith being faint and fruitless? Is it for joy that we believe not? Is it because we know not how to think that God has given us privileges so excellent, and has in store rewards so great? or is it not, that we know not how to wish that his word may prove true at the last, declaring as it does our iniquity so hateful, and our punishment, if we sin, so sure? Often out of fear we believe not; often out of aversion to do what faith requires. But how seldom is it for joy that our faith is wanting! How next to impossible it seems, that for joy we should be deficient in that love, which is the proper fruit of faith! Else we should still love where we are not quite sure, and obey where not quite certain; instead of failing, as many do, to obey and love, where we confess that there is no room for doubt. Henceforth let it be only out of joy that we believe not. Let it be only because we reckon the things that we believe so excellent, so desirable, so far above all that we deserve, so far beyond all that we could imagine. Let it be only for this reason, and only so far as thus we feel, let this be our only hindrance to faith; and we shall daily believe better as we know more, and as our faith increases we shall love the more.

But for this we must have power from on high. For this we must have the promise of the Father sent upon us. Only through God's grace can we either repent or believe. Only through God's grace can we have peace or joy.

Christ is carried up into heaven.

50 And he led them out as far as to Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them.
 51 And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven.

52 And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy:

53 And were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God. Amen.

¹ Mark 16. 19. Acts 1. 9.

§ 276. How we should worship Christ.

In each of the three chief dispensations, before the law, and under the law, and in the Gospel, we have recorded one instance of ascension into heaven. "Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him." Gen. 5. 24. And this is thus explained in the Epistle to the Hebrews: "By faith Enoch was translated, that he should not see death." Heb. 11. 5. And of Elijah we are told, that he "went up by a whirlwind into heaven." 2 Kings 2. 11. And here we read of our Saviour Christ, that it came to pass, while He was blessing his disciples, "he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven." Thrice then it has been seen by the eyes of men, that the form of one like themselves has vanished from the earth. Thrice has there been vouchsafed this lively proof that this world will not always be our home, that our bodies will live in other realms, with Enoch, with Elijah, and with Christ. Oh, how can we still hesitate to live for heaven, when we are thus shewn how near it is at hand! How can we still doat on trifles, when we are thus brought so close to the courts of the Most High!

See how different was the behaviour of the disciples who beheld the ascension of our Lord! See how they were continually in the temple, praising and blessing God! And shall we be content with visiting his house of prayer only one day in the week? Shall we be content with praising and blessing God, once only, or twice only, in the day? No, let us here learn to pray without ceasing, to praise without intermission. Let all that we do be praise. Let all that we desire be prayer. And especially let us take a lesson from these disciples, that we should address our prayer and praise to Christ our Saviour. "They worshipped him." Let us worship Him also.

And do Thou, O Lord Jesu Christ, the only begotten Son of the Father, receive our prayer! Do Thou have mercy upon us. "For Thou only, O Christ, with the Holy Ghost, art most high in the glory of God the Father." (Communion Service.) "Amen." So be it, beloved Saviour! "Amen." So be it, most gracious Lord! So help us to shew forth thy glory! So make us to desire thy blessed will! So lead us out far from this world! So take us to thyself in heaven! "Amen."

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. JOHN.

§ 277. That we must have a right faith in Christ.

OF the parentage and private history of St. John we know little beyond the facts that he was one of the sons of Zebedee, and that he carried on with his father the business of a fisherman. But we thus know enough to be assured that it was impossible for him to write this Gospel without the Spirit of truth directing him. And therefore it matters little who St. John was, since it is God who here speaks to us by this apostle's mouth. It is enough for us to know that he was an apostle, and that he was an apostle whom his Lord most dearly loved. And we may be sure that whatsoever is revealed in his Gospel is most profitable for our instruction in righteousness.

This Gospel was written long after the rest. And in the meanwhile there had arisen in the Christian community doubts as to whether Christ were really God; or merely man; or something between both, which is neither; or as the truth is, both in one. But to have an effectual saving faith, it is necessary to have a right faith. And to have a right faith, it is necessary to believe the truth as it really is. It became therefore most important for the church, to be assured on divine authority, that the Saviour of the world was at once both God and man. And as the other Gospels contain certain proof that He was man of the substance of his mother, born in the world, so here we have full assurance that He was God, of the substance of his Father, begotten before the worlds. For this purpose St. John relates many of our Lord's discourses which are not found in the other Gospels. And he begins his own with a solemn declaration of the great truth which he would chiefly set forth, that the "Word was God." John 1. 1. Here then we must expect beforehand to meet with many things hard to be understood. Here we must try beforehand to awaken our attention, and to quicken our desire for divine knowledge. And these objects we can by no means so effectually promote as by earnest intercession for divine grace.

Lord help us to understand what is declared of thy nature, so as to obey what is revealed of thy will; Lord help us through faith, to see the things which are else invisible! and the things which are else impossible, Lord help us by thy grace to do!

That the Word was God.

- 1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.
 2 The same was in the beginning with God.
 3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.
 4 In him was life; and the life was the light of men.
 5 And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not.

¹ Gen. 1. 1.² Col. 1. 16.§ 278. How there is in Christ the light of men.

"In the beginning was the Word." By "the Word" St. John here means our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And by this name we may conceive it to be signified, that through the Son, and through his good offices, God has made Himself known unto mankind. For language is the means of our communication with each other. And words are what help us to make known our thoughts to those we live with; to inform and to be informed ourselves. Thus Christ has been to man, "the Word." Thus Christ has been the Word of God. He has been God speaking to man. He has made known to man, for good, all that it is good for man to know of God.

And this Word was "in the beginning." At the very time of which we are told in the book of Genesis, by Moses, that God then "created the heavens and the earth," Gen. 1. 1, at that season St. John here tells us that the "Word" already "was." "In the beginning," in this expression these two writers of revelation agree. "In the beginning," before any thing that now is, was made. But how different are their expressions in what follows! "In the beginning God created." Gen 1. 1. This is what is said of the heavens and the earth. God made them out of nothing. He said, Let them be. And they were. But even then, when they were created, "in the beginning was the Word." Not was created, but "was;" already was "with God," who created them. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God." No wonder then that the Word was "in the beginning." "The Word was God." The Word was He who created the heavens and the earth. For "in the beginning" it was God who did so: and "in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God."

In order to make this the more plain, and to make us more sure in a matter of so deep concern for our salvation, St. John repeats in the verses following, the substance of his words: "The same was in the beginning with God." "All things were made by him." It was by his means that all created things were enabled to exist; so entirely by his means, that "without him was not any thing made that was made." And this is another way of explaining to us that He Himself was never made at all, but was one with God from all eternity. For if nothing of all things made, if nothing was made "without him," without his being a party to the making, it follows of a certainty that He Himself was not in any sense made at all, but was before all things "God of God, very God of very God." (Nicene Creed.) To this St. John adds that "in him was life." He had life in Himself, to give unto those things which were by Him made. "And the life was the light of men." That life which was in Him, that self-existence, that power to make others both live, and live for ever, that life "was the light of men." In Him was that life and light which made man become a living soul, which might have saved Adam, and all his offspring, from the darkness of sin and death. And afterwards when they have fallen into that darkness, even in their state of corruption and offence, "the light shineth." There was seen, or there might be seen, in the blessed Son, "the light of men," a light to guide them into the way of peace. "And the darkness comprehended it not." Many men would not profit by the light of Christ; neither before the Law, nor under the Law, nor in the dispensation of the Gospel. What a fearful consideration is this! What a lively conception does darkness here convey of the world, or of the soul, when ignorant of Christ! To see nothing, this is darkness. To be on the very edge of endless misery, to have the pit yawning at our feet, and not to behold it, not to know it, this is darkness. To live after the flesh, and to have no notion how much better it is to live after the spirit, to be idle, and not to know that diligence is better, to be angry, and not to know the comfort of meekness, gentleness, and peace, to be at variance with conscience and with God, and to be ignorant that there is in Christ Jesus reconciliation with the Father, and not only peace, but also joy for the souls of the redeemed; this is darkness. This is the darkness in which we all exist by nature. This is the darkness which would not, if it could, comprehend the light of Christ.

Oh that God may make to shine in the darkness of our souls "the Sun of righteousness!" Mal. 4. 2. Oh that in these most difficult of his doctrines his Spirit may be unto our feeble apprehension "a light that shineth in a dark place." 2 Pet. 1. 19. Oh that He may make us receive into our hearts with joy the gracious words of the prophet, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Is. 90. 1.

The offices of John the Baptist and of Christ.

6 ¹ There was a man sent from God, whose name was John.

7 The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

8 He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9 That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

10 He was in the world, and ² the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

11 He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

12 But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name :

13 Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

14 ³ And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.

¹ Matt. 3. 1.

² Heb. 11. 3.

|| Or, the right, or privilege.

³ Matt. 1. 16.

§ 279. How we must become sons of God.

Before the beginning of the ministry of Christ, there had appeared in Judæa another preacher of repentance; and there was some danger that men might be perplexed in their minds as to which was the true Messiah. St. John therefore here tells us who the Baptist was, in the midst of his account of the divinity of Christ. "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." How different are these words from the account given of our Lord Himself! How well suited are these opposite descriptions to convince us, that whilst the one was no less than a divine Person, the other was his minister and messenger. It was the great object of John's ministry to make that of Christ more strictly credible, more widely believed. "He was not that Light," not the Light of which the Apostle had just before been speaking, "but was sent to bear witness of that Light." It was his business to make all who heard and all who at this present time hear of Him, most sure that Jesus was the Christ, and that Christ was "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

By this comparison of our Saviour with the Baptist St. John signifies that he was a Light to mankind, in a sense different from that in which any other Prophet may be said to give light to our minds; in such a sense as that there is no one human being whatsoever, no man born into the world, who does not derive from Christ the light of life. But further, besides life, and besides all that makes this life valuable, He came also to give the offer of eternity. He came, though He was truly the Son of God, in the form of the Son of man. "He was in the world," that very world which was "made by him;" "and the world knew him not." He came to that very people who had been set aside for his own, who had been prepared by the Law and the Prophets for his coming; "And his own received him not." Strange, that when He came on an errand so gracious, any, and above all "his own," should not receive Him! And is it not alike strange that any should not receive Him now? and is it not true of many who now receive Him not, that they are in like manner by covenant, his own? Have they not been baptized into his faith? Do they not enjoy the use of his word, the teaching of his ministers in the church? And is not the reason of their not receiving Him the same as it was of old, "because of unbelief!" Heb. 3. 19.

"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." He made them not sons by force. But he gave them power to become sons by the choice which He allowed them, by the grace which He obtained for them. Sons we may thus become of God, by believing on the name of Christ. Sons we may thus become, not by any inheritance from each other, not by any will of our own; but by that new birth unto righteousness, which is the gift of God to man, through Christ Jesus. And in order that we might thus become sons of God, it pleased God to become for us the Son of man. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." He abode in fashion as a man, in this very earth on which we live. "And we beheld his glory." So at least the apostle could say literally. And so we, through his account of it, may say, by faith. Let us then strive to see it. Let us pray, and endeavour, to discern that grace and truth, which are manifest in Christ Jesus, to all who are disposed to receive Him. Let us believe so as to love what we already know. Let us love, and we shall both know better, and believe more.

Here we have our Christian privileges traced partly to what we do ourselves, and partly to what God does for us. In order to become sons it is plain that we must receive Christ. This seems to be our doing. And yet we are told in the same sentence that it is Christ who gives us "power to become the sons of God." This would seem to ascribe the whole to his giving. But to whom is this power given by Christ? "To them that believe on his name." Here we see how greatly our believing is concerned. And yet our believing is not altogether ours. For believers are born, and belief also is engendered, not "of the will of man, but of God." And thus the matter is described in other passages of Scripture. So that we are bound to conclude upon the whole, that we must strive as diligently as if all depended upon our own exertion; and that we must pray and give thanks, in all humility, as if all were the gift of God.

The testimony of John.

15 John bare witness of him, and cried, saying, This was he of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me: for he was before me.

16 And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace.

17 For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

18 No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.

19 And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou?

20 And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ.

21 And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No.

22 Then said they unto him, Who art thou? that we may give an answer to them that sent us. What sayest thou of thyself?

23 He said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias.

24 And they which were sent were of the Pharisees.

25 And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not that Christ, nor Elias, neither that Prophet?

26 John answered them, saying, I baptize with water: but there standeth one among you, whom ye know not;

27 He it is, who coming after me is preferred before me, whose shoe's latchet I am not worthy to unloose.

28 These things were done in Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John was baptizing.

¹ Col. 1. 19.

² 1 John 4. 12. 1 Tim. 6. 16.

³ Matt. 3. 3.

|| Or, a prophet.

⁴ Matt. 3. 11. Acts 19. 4.

§ 280. That we must not think too highly of ourselves.

John the Baptist bare witness of our Lord, and cried, saying, "This was he of whom I spake." He said this frequently, aloud, and in public; pointing openly to Jesus of Nazareth, that this was that divine Person, whose messenger he professed himself to be. And the Evangelist adds further, for himself and the apostles, that they had experienced the truth of his being Christ, having received "of his fulness," and "grace for grace." That is to say, they had "tasted that the Lord is gracious." 1 Pet. 2. 3. In addition to the witness of John beforehand, they could give their own testimony afterwards to the fact. They had actually partaken in the benefits of "God" "manifest in the flesh." 1 Tim. 3. 16. They had enjoyed the grace and truth which "came by Jesus Christ." And unto them had the Father been by Him declared, to the everlasting comfort of their souls. This St. John calls "grace for grace;" meaning probably the grace of the New Testament, instead of that of the Old. For as there was a "righteousness which is in the law," Philipp. 3. 6, and a "righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ," Rom. 3. 22; and two kinds also of adoption, see Rom. 9. 4, and Gal. 4. 5; and two kinds of glory, see 2 Cor. 3. 11; so there were likewise two kinds of grace, that which was under the elder covenant, and that which was under the newer covenant.

This testimony of John was given, not only to the people who crowded to hear him in the wilderness, but to the priests and Levites, who were sent purposely from Jerusalem, to learn whether He were or were not the Christ. At a time when many were looking out for the coming of Messiah, John of his own accord, when merely asked, "Who art thou?" "confessed and denied not: but confessed, I am not the Christ." So also he assured them that he was not Elias, whom they expected at that time to appear in person on the earth: nor yet "that prophet," meaning him, whom Moses had described, as to be hereafter raised up like unto himself. See Deut. 18. 15. Far from being the Christ, he was his messenger; one sent on purpose to prepare his way. Far from pretending to be the Christ, he spake ever of another greater than himself; he told those, whom he baptized with water, that there stood among them One, whom they knew not, who coming after him was to be preferred before him, whose shoe's latchet he was not worthy to unloose.

In these answers of John, in his anxiety not to be taken for any greater than he was, what a lesson have all Christian ministers, that they never should usurp their Master's place! What a lesson have their people, not to look for, at their hands, any such help as they are not authorized to give! What a warning against leaning on the ministry of men, as if they personally, and not Christ through their means, were the fountain of knowledge and of truth! What a warning against saying in their hearts, "I am of Paul; and I of Apollos;" 1 Cor. 1. 12; against cherishing too fond attachment for the best of ministers, or failing to respect in the worst, the ordinance of their divine Master!

And further we may learn the obligation which lies on every man, not to think of himself, and not to let others think of him, more highly than is due. "Who art thou?" is a question often put to us by the world, an inquiry often made by our friends and neighbours; and one which we are often tempted to answer by the semblance of being better than we are. "Who art thou?" is a question we should put often to ourselves, for our own conviction of our own unworthiness. "Who art thou?" is a question which will be put to us ere long, by Him who best knows how little we can say justly in reply. Never let us now answer it out of vain self love; that we may not then have to hear it in shame and sorrow. Never let us now too confidently profess, I am what a Christian should be; that we may not then be compelled, with confusion of face, to acknowledge "I am not."

Further testimony of John.

29 The next day John seeth Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

30 This is he of whom I said, After me cometh a man which is preferred before me: for he was before me.

31 And I knew him not: but that he should be made manifest to Israel, therefore am I come baptizing with water.

32 ¹ And John bare record, saying, I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon him.

33 And I knew him not; but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost.

34 And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.

35 Again the next day after John stood, and two of his disciples;

|| Or, beareth.

¹ Matt. 3. 16.

‡ Or, the anointed.

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God!

37 And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and saith unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou?

39 He saith unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day: for it was about the tenth hour.

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, † the Christ.

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, § A stone.

* Or, abidest.

† That was two hours before night.

§ Or, Peter.

§ 281. One important use of Christian names.

The Jews were, we know, accustomed to the sacrifice of lambs by way of atonement for offences against the Law. How then ought they to have understood St. John saying of Jesus, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world!" how, but that Jesus was to be a sacrifice, not for their sins only, or for sins against their Law, but for all the sins of all mankind? And so St. John writes in his first Epistle, 2. 2: "he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Notwithstanding He came unto John for baptism. For it was when John saw "Jesus coming unto him," that he bare this witness to the truth. He came to him, as we learn from the other Gospels to be baptized of him. Would that there were amongst us more of likeness unto Christ, in this humble reverence for divine ordinances! What though he that teaches be less learned or devout than his hearers, more fit perhaps in some things to learn of them; yet does the appointment of God, where they have his appointment to shew, oblige them to wait on his ministry, even as Christ on that of John the Baptist.

"Behold the Lamb of God!" To how many are these words addressed in vain! How many refuse to see in Jesus of Nazareth one that taketh away the sin of the world! "Behold the Lamb of God!" How many, even of those who heard John speak these words, neglected to follow Jesus! It is not a better opportunity, but a more willing heart, that we are in need of. It is not to hear with our ears, or to see with our eyes; but to believe, to be persuaded of what we cannot see, because God has told us. This was the frame of mind of those two disciples, who at the word of John "followed Jesus." Of these, one is with good reason supposed to have been the writer of this Gospel. And the other we read gave proof of the reality of his faith, by bringing also his brother Simon unto Jesus. This shews whether we are thoroughly convinced: do we labour for the conviction of those we love? How can we believe that heaven is at hand and not earnestly entreat them to lay up their treasure there? How can we know that hell is prepared for the wicked, and yet suffer in a brother any wilful sin? Surely if we have felt deeply our own peril, we shall not refrain from warning of their danger our kindred, and friends, and acquaintances. If we have found in Christ Jesus the hope of safety, we shall not fail to point to Him their chief attention, and to proclaim to their everlasting comfort, "Behold the Lamb of God!"

And here let us observe how, when Jesus beheld Simon, He straightway gave him a new name. "Thou art Simon the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, a stone." Thy name shall be one that signifies the resolution of thy character, thy zeal, strength, courage, and perseverance. Thus also, in the Old Testament, Jehovah said to the father of the faithful: "Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham: for a father of many nations have I made thee." Gen. 17. 5. And in like manner He called Jacob also by the new name of Israel. See Gen. 35. 10. And in every case it seems to have been intended, that the name should be a memorial of the benefit imparted, of the character conferred. Let it thus with us in our names given to us in our baptism. Let them remind us, each time we are addressed by them, of the vows by which we then became bound. Let them be to us a token that we should never "be ashamed to confess the faith of Christ crucified, but that we manfully should fight, under his banner, against sin, the world, and the devil, and continue Christ's faithful soldiers and servants, unto our live's end." (See Office for Baptism.)

Christ commendeth Nathanael.

43 The day following Jesus would go forth into Galilee, and findeth Philip, and saith unto him, Follow me.

44 Now Philip was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

45 Philip findeth Nathanael, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom ¹ Moses in the law, and the ² prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46 And Nathanael said unto him, Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see.

47 Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and saith of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!

48 Nathanael saith unto him, Whence knowest thou me? Jesus answered and said unto him, Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee.

49 Nathanael answered and saith unto him, Rabbi, thou art the Son of God; thou art the King of Israel.

50 Jesus answered and said unto him, Because I said unto thee, I saw thee under the fig tree, believest thou? thou shalt see greater things than these.

51 And he saith unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Hereafter ye shall see heaven open, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man.

¹ Gen 49. 10. Deut. 18.¹⁸

² Is. 4. 2.

§ 282. How we should have in us no guile.

Here we have a second case, where the calling of one disciple leads at once to his exerting himself in winning over another. Jesus "findeth Philip." "Philip findeth Nathanael." And again we may observe upon the importance of this principle, for the propagating of the Christian faith. Have we then become deeply convinced of the necessity of caring for the soul? Have we become persuaded that Jesus Christ is the only name given under heaven, whereby we may be saved? See Acts 4. 12. Have we felt, under the belief of our forgiveness through Him, have we felt our love glow within us towards all mankind? And why then have we not cast about to communicate to some other the fruit of our own lively impressions? How know we but that some Nathanael is at hand, waiting only for us to find him that he may be brought to the knowledge of the truth? How can we help longing to make our neighbours partakers of that faith and grace which has given ourselves the sure hope of heaven? How can we help earnestly inviting them, in the words of Philip to Nathanael, "Come and see?"

This, let us remember, is the most valuable argument for conversion of the unbelieving; experience. This is the only trial which can be relied on, to confute the gainsayer; experience. "Come and see," is the answer we should give to all, who ask either with their lips or their lives, "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?" "Come and see." Try by experience. Not only weigh the reasoning about the evidences of the Gospel, but make the experiment of living by its rules. Live it; and you will soon believe it. Live as far as now you know; as far as by God's help, you now may attain. Ask daily for more help to live more according to the truth. And you will thus find little difficulty in knowing and believing it. "Come and see," whether temperance be not better than excess, purity than lasciviousness, truth than falsehood, charity than revenge. "Come and see," and try whether the help that is of the Lord, be not stronger than that of man; whether the new Gospel motives, of thankfulness and love for redemption through Christ, be not more able to draw the heart to obedience, than all desire of the praise of this world, or even the fear of the terrors of the next.

The difficulty, which Nathanael made about believing, was no impediment to his receiving the approbation of Christ, for it arose, probably, from his having read in the Scriptures that Christ should be born at Bethlehem. In his objection there was therefore no guile. There was no secret resolution not to be convinced; but an honest intention to prove all things, and hold fast that which should be proved to be good. See 1 Thess. 5. 21. And how signal is the praise which he received! "An Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" A heart without deceit is a true token of a child of God; is the genuine disposition of that true Israel, of whom God has significantly declared, "Jacob have I loved." Rom. 9. 13. In our state of natural corruption how continually are we inclined to deceive, either our neighbour or ourselves; how anxious often to deceive, if it might be, God! To withhold nothing from Him, of all we do amiss, this is true confession; this is genuine repentance. To conceal nothing from ourselves, this takes off the veil from our own hearts, shews us our own lost estate, and leads us to the hope of salvation through Christ. In nothing to deceive our neighbour; this is to prefer the fear of God to the fear of man, the praise of God to the praise of man: and this is the way to honour God, and to be by Him hereafter honoured. Thus shall we also "see heaven open." We shall feel how, through the intercession of our Lord, our prayers thither ascend, and how, through his merits, there thence come down the manifold gifts of grace. Such is the fruit of sincerity in our prayers! Such is the profit of praying, when the heart desires what the lips express! But what else but guile can those prayers be counted, which are repeated without devotion, without attention of the thoughts, without affection of the soul? And how can they who thus pray, thus think, thus feel, how can these hope to see heaven open; when all the while both their eyes and hearts are fixed upon the things of earth?

Christ turneth water into wine.

1 And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there:

2 And both Jesus was called, and his disciples, to the marriage.

3 And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus saith unto him, They have no wine.

4 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come.

5 His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

6 And there were set there six waterpots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece.

7 Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bare it.

9 When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was: (but the servants which drew the water knew;) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

11 This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory; and his disciples believed on him.

12 After this he went down to Capernaum, he, and his mother, and his brethren, and his disciples: and they continued there not many days.

§ 283. That God keeps the best till last.

The presence of our Lord among the company at this feast, and his turning the water into wine, may serve to shew, that under the Christian dispensation, such festivities, within due limits, are allowable. Else He, who countenanced no sin, would not have wrought on a festive occasion "this beginning of miracles;" would not have chosen this wedding for the time of so manifesting his glory, that "his disciples believed on him." Let us thankfully acknowledge this divine sanction both for marriage, and for the cheerful festivity with which marriage is commonly accompanied. But let us at the same time take heed that our enjoyments never degenerate into sin; that our feasting never end in excess; that our marrying, if we be married, never lead to that kind of love for wife or husband, which is inconsistent with due love for Christ. Earthly enjoyments must be used with thankfulness, or we might seem to slight the Giver of all good. But they must be used also with watchfulness, or they will be turned to our destruction, by the author of all evil. Let us beware then that in our festivity on all festive occasions, there be no commission of sin, no transgression of the will of God. Let us be watchful against such mirth as is akin to levity, against such indulgence as amounts to excess. Let us be sure that we do nothing to draw down upon our heads the woe which is denounced by the prophet, against those who in their feasts have "the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine;" "but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands." Is. 5. 12.

The mother of Jesus appears to have expected that He would take some part in supplying the wine which was wanted at the feast. And when his reply rather signified the contrary, she still enjoined the servants to obey his directions. This probably arose from her having kept in her heart, as St. Luke tells us, all the sayings relating to her Son. See Luke 2. 51. His reply, and the word "woman," with which He addressed her, though consistent with due respect for his mother, are utterly inconsistent with that almost divine honour which is paid to the Virgin Mary by the Church of Rome. And this it is important for us to notice. Because the more we are impressed with the duty of being all of one mind in religion, the more we shall feel anxious to be satisfied, as to the grounds on which our own beloved church stands aloof from the Romish communion.

"Jesus saith unto them, Fill the waterpots with water." How strange, how useless, must this command have seemed to the servants, who were in want not of water, but of wine! Let us learn to obey in whatever God commands, though we cannot understand the reason, and we shall often enjoy the benefit, where we had no expectation of advantage. "And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast." It was the office of the governor both to bless the cup of wine, and to taste it before it was handed to the company. And it was a natural remark for him to make that "Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse: but thou hast kept the good wine until now." And this testimony to the excellency of the wine, serves to prove the reality of the miracle. But further, this remark should remind us of one important point in which God's dealings, in the gifts of his providence and grace, are opposite to the ordinary conduct of mankind. He reserves always the best to be the last. His ways are not our ways. Harvest He gives after toil, wisdom after painful study, the Gospel not till after the Law, heaven not till after a sojourn upon earth. Let us not then be disheartened, if we have many things to suffer during the time of our pilgrimage. God has in store for us far better things than we know of or imagine. He has kept for us till after death the being free from pain, free from care, free from strife, free from sin. He has kept for us, till after death, to weep no more, to dwell in the light of his countenance for ever.

Give us then, Lord, the best at the last! Here let us enjoy thy grace! Hereafter let us share thy glory! Here let us live content to suffer, hereafter make us joyfully to reign!

Christ cleanseth the temple ; foresheweth his resurrection.

13 And the Jews' passover was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem,

14 And found in the temple those that sold oxen and sheep and doves, and the changers of money sitting :

15 And when he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them all out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen ; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables ;

16 And said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence ; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise.

17 And his disciples remembered that it was written, ' The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.

18 Then answered the Jews and said unto him, What sign shewest thou unto us, seeing that thou doest these things ?

19 Jesus answered and said unto them, ' Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up.

20 Then said the Jews, Forty and six years was this temple in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days ?

21 But he spake of the temple of his body.

22 When therefore he was risen from the dead, his disciples remembered that he had said this unto them ; and they believed the scripture, and the word which Jesus had said.

23 Now when he was in Jerusalem at the passover, in the feast day, many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which he did.

24 But Jesus did not commit himself unto them, because he knew all men,

25 And needed not that any should testify of man : for he knew what was in man.

¹ Ps. 69. 9.

² Matt. 26. 61.

§ 284. That we are the temple of Christ.

At the approach of the passover "Jesus went up to Jerusalem," having stayed as we have read lately, "not many days," with his mother and brethren and disciples at Capernaum. So little did He enjoy of that rest and comfort which home alone can yield ! So forcibly does He teach us, by his example, that here we have no real home, but only a lodging for a time, on our road to a better country ! On entering the temple, He found it crowded with those, who sold oxen and sheep, for the use of persons sacrificing, and with those who changed money, for the use of Jews from foreign parts who resorted to the feast. The turning of these people out of the temple, and the reason our Lord assigned for so doing, may serve to warn us against profaning our own places of worship by any such admixture of worldly business. "Make not my Father's house an house of merchandise," these are words which will apply to any secular transactions for which we are tempted by convenience to make use of the church. The building and the hours which are set apart for divine worship, have been found suitable, by reason of the resort of the people, for giving notice of things utterly irrelevant. Let us take care that we never suffer our attention to be distracted by what is thus made public. Instead of bringing our worldly business into our minds in church, let it serve to remind us, that we ought to carry into the world the spirit of that service which we go to church to perform.

And here further it may be observed, that this purifying of the temple was a miracle of a very singular and convincing nature. A man of peace, unarmed, unassisted, and, as was supposed, unauthorized, makes a scourge of small cords, by way of signifying his resolution to chastise, as rebellious children, the people who disobeyed his Father's will. He enters into the temple, now a crowded market. He clears it of men, and sheep, and oxen. He tramples under foot the idol of these worshippers, the money they so dearly loved. What power but the majesty of the divine presence, what force but the arm of the Most High, can account for the discomfiture of this numerous assemblage ? How fearful then will that presence be hereafter found, when He shall purge out of this wicked world all things that offend ; when He shall say to them upon the left hand, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels !" Matt. 25. 41.

The Jews, surprised at this interference of our Lord, asked Him what sign He had to shew, by way of proof of his authority. His answer, as St. John here informs us, related to his resurrection from the dead. "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." The Jews supposed Him to speak of the building in which they were then assembled. But as He meant in reality his own body, so He would have us hence to understand that the temple, which is fitting for God's service, is the body which is subject to his will ; even Christ's, which is given to die upon the cross ; even ours, which must like his be crucified, by selfdenial and holiness of life. His temple we are ourselves ; our souls and bodies are dedicated to his service. To Him therefore, let us take pains to keep them sacred, by a holy practice, by a lively faith. For see how different is the faith of the outward profession, from the faith of the hearty believer ! To "many" who on this occasion "believed in his name" Jesus did not commit Himself, "for he knew what was in man." So easy is it in some sense to believe, and yet to be unfit for Christ to trust. They only believe aright who live according to their belief. And they only live aright whose life is founded on their faith. Let us remember both in our life and in our faith, that Christ knows what is within our hearts. Let us, like the disciples, remember what is written in the Scriptures. Let us with Christ have that zeal for God's honour, which would consume in us all sinful sloth, all sinful fear ; which would make us both in soul and body a temple worthy to be called our "Father's house."

Christ teacheth Nicodemus.

1 There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews :

2 The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto him, Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him.

3 Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born || again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.

4 Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born?

|| Or, from above.

5 Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

6 That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit.

7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born † again.

8 The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

9 Nicodemus answered and said unto him, How can these things be?

† Or, from above.

§ 285. The Christian new birth.

Jesus, as we learn in the last chapter, ver. 24, "did not commit himself" at the first to those who professed belief in his name. Yet He explains to Nicodemus some of the chief new doctrines of the Gospel. He, who "knew what was in man," ch. 2. 25, knew doubtless that there was in this ruler of the Jews a heart disposed to learn and to obey. And such was the purport of the profession with which he came to our blessed Lord. "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God." We, the rulers of the Jews, have no doubt that what Thou sayest is God's word, for this reason, that thy works are God's works, "no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him." Thus did Nicodemus own to a firm conviction on sufficient grounds. And though his coming by night was probably done out of fear of the other rulers, who came not, yet his coming at all, under such circumstances, was a proof that his profession was in earnest.

See then how our Lord encourages the timid to advance, if only they truly turn to Him! See what an important and appropriate doctrine He first presses on the attention of Nicodemus! To be "born again," to be "born of water and of the Spirit;" this he must know was necessary for his entering into the kingdom of God. It was not enough for him to come to Jesus by night. He must openly confess himself convinced, by submitting to be baptized with water; he must have that change, of which baptism is the sign and seal, wrought by the Spirit in the heart. As a ruler in Israel he should have remembered that baptism was used to signify the being a proselyte to a new religion. And he would not then have fallen into the mistake of supposing that a natural birth was here meant. If we remember that this change is the being born of the Spirit, we shall understand how it may easily take place, even in those who are baptized in infancy. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." A new birth such as the ruler thought of, would not make a man less truly carnal. But "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." That which is wrought in us by God's Spirit is a change in the condition of the soul. It is a change from a state of enmity with God, to a state of salvation through Christ. It is a change from a state of utter incapacity for good, to a state of fitness for grace. It is "a death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness." It is that we "being by nature born in sin, the children of wrath, are hereby made the children of grace." (Catechism.)

This is not a change that can be discerned by man, such as the change from indifference to love, which takes place in the contrite sinner, or the progress from strength to strength, which is the very life of the confirmed disciple. No; rather as the wind cannot be seen, though its effects are felt, as we hear the sound thereof, but cannot tell "whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit." The change is in the condition of the soul. The change is wrought by Him who made the soul; and who gives to it by his grace, at its new birth, a new existence. And this takes place we know not how; we see not, we feel not when. Only we are assured that it does take place; and that the outward sign of baptism is the seal of its having been done by God. Let us not further ask with Nicodemus, "How can these things be?" Let us be content to know that thus they are. Let us be mindful that we have been thus born again. Let us be careful to lead the rest of our lives according to this beginning. Our bodies are as those of other men. Our souls have undergone a new birth. How much more full of glory is our hope! How much more sure, if we sin wilfully, is our condemnation! Oh, how can we be enough watchful with such a charge entrusted! How can we be enough thankful with such a gift conferred!

God grant that all, who have been thus born anew, may lead the new life of holiness and love! God grant that all who have been thus "born of the Spirit," may live no longer to the flesh, nor fulfil the lusts thereof! God grant that thus living according to their new birth, and dying according to their new life, they may enter at death into his heavenly kingdom, there to live with Him for ever!

Christ telleth Nicodemus of heavenly things.

10 Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master of Israel, and knowest not these things?

11 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.

12 If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things?

13 And no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven.

14 ¹ And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up:

15 That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

16 ² For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

17 ³ For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

18 He that believeth on him is not condemned: but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God.

19 And this is the condemnation, ⁴ that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil.

20 For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be || reproved.

21 But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.

¹ Numb. 21. 9.

² 1 John 4. 9.

³ ch. 12. 47.

⁴ ch. 1. 4.

|| Or, discovered.

§ 286. How we ought to come to the light.

In any difficulty of religion, when we would ask, with Nicodemus, "How can these things be?" verse 9. let us first consider well these words of Christ: "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." Christians are to take divine truth on the testimony of God's word. We are to believe, not because we understand how these things can be, but because we feel satisfied that Christ has said they are. And this we must do, both in the "earthly things" of which our Lord first told Nicodemus, things relating to our own state in this world, the change we have here to undergo, the new birth we have here to be born; and also in regard to heavenly things, such as next our Lord discoursed on, namely, his own coming down from heaven, how it was owing to the love of God that He died for the sins of men, and how in his death it was designed, "that the world through him might be saved."

These things we may suppose our Lord to have called heavenly, because they relate to those counsels in the mind of God, which are far above, out of our reach. How the Son at once "is in heaven," and "came down from heaven;" how his being lifted up on the cross is as effectual to the saving of the souls of men, as the lifting up of the serpent in the wilderness was to the healing of their bodies; how the justice of the Father has been satisfied by the death of his sinless Son; how his mercy induced Him to give his Son for this wicked world; how it comes to pass that faith in Christ is of such efficacy that "whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" how all this was done for the saving of the world, and yet the world notwithstanding is still condemned; all these things are "heavenly;" all these things are far above our comprehension; of all these we are probably tempted to inquire, "How can these things be?" But in all we must be contented with this answer of our Lord, namely, that He has told us that which He actually knew, and testified that which He had seen.

It is for us to receive his witness. And this receiving of his witness is belief. And the fruits of this believing are, on the one hand, that we are not condemned; on the other, that we do the truth, and that doing it, we come forward of ourselves unto the light, that our deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God. What a striking description have we here of the nature of the Christian life! What a guide for our improvement! What a test for our self examination! Do we come to the light? Have we pleasure in coming to it? Are our lives such as are according to the light of God's word? Are they such as we should be willing at any hour to submit to the bright light of future judgment? Do we desire now to make manifest that we do them out of the love of Christ, out of the hope of heaven? Are we ready for them to be made manifest hereafter, in the conviction that they will then prove to have been wrought in God? If not; if we still fear instead of hoping and loving, must not this be the reason that we are not doing "the truth," not living as God would have us, doing evil, and therefore hating the light. Nothing seems to be more rare than to love the light. Nothing would so greatly help to our increase in well doing. Nothing is so well done as what is done in love, as what is done out of a hearty good will to man, and out of a devout affection towards God: This is the way He would have us to obey Him; not to obey grudgingly or of necessity, but to obey cheerfully and devotedly; not to obey, as if we had rather serve sin if we durst, but as if we would not serve Satan if we safely might.

God give us to have pleasure in well doing! God give us to be aware that our good works are his! God make us to have joy in the thought, that what we do must one day be brought to light! God make us to love the light rather than darkness, to believe in his blessed Son, and through Him to be not condemned, but saved!

Further testimony of John to Christ.

22 After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judæa: and there he tarried with them, ¹and baptized.

23 And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized.

24 For John was not yet cast into prison.

25 Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying.

26 And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, ²to whom thou barest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him.

27 John answered and said, ³A man can || receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

28 Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, ⁴I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him.

29 He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled.

30 He must increase, but I must decrease.

31 He that cometh from above is above all: he that is of the earth is earthly, and speaketh of the earth: he that cometh from heaven is above all.

32 And what he hath seen and heard, that he testifieth; and no man receiveth his testimony.

33 He that hath received his testimony ⁵hath set to his seal that God is true.

34 For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him.

35 ⁶The Father loveth the Son, and hath given all things into his hand.

36 ⁷He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him.

¹ ch. 4. 2.

² ch. 1. 7, 34.

³ Heb. 5. 4.

|| Or, take unto himself.

⁴ ch. 1. 20.

⁵ Rom. 3. 4.

⁶ Matt. 11. 27.

⁷ Heb. 2. 4. 1 John 5. 10.

§ 287. How we should allow the precedency of others.

We read here that Jesus baptized in the land of Judæa. Afterwards in the next chapter, ver. 2, it is mentioned that "Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples." And this is not uncommon in the Scriptures, to describe a thing as done by any one, when it is done by those whom he employs. So that here we have two passages, which at first appear at variance, easily shewn to be consistent with each other. And hence we should be on our guard in any similar case, and not doubt but that the things, which at first seem difficult, are in reality both plain and strictly true. And further we should hence learn, to consider whatever is done in this sort by the authority of Christ, to be all one as though it were done by Christ Himself. If his disciples baptize, if his apostles, or those whom his apostles ordained, or those whom they appointed in their turn, if these authorized ministers of the Gospel either baptize, or preach, or pray, or impart to his faithful flock the communion of his blessed body and blood, it is Christ that ministers; it is his ordinance that takes effect, the blessing which ensues is of his giving; and unto Him must be ascribed the honour and the thanks.

Our Lord having thus taken into use the like outward rite of baptism as John, there arose a question between the disciples of the two teachers, a question about purifying, about washing in water, about baptism, which of these baptisms was the most profitable, which of the two ought in preference to be received. St. John, as well became him, being in the lower place, gave testimony of himself that he was so. He reminded his disciples that he had said, "I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him." He described himself as being only the friend of the bridegroom, but Jesus as him that had the bride. "He must increase, but I must decrease." Not only am I now lower, but I must continue to be lowered in the comparison; my baptism, and my doctrine, and myself, being earthly, whilst He and his are heavenly. Here we have a notable example for our conduct, if any question of precedency arise, and it be our duty to take the lowest place. Let us be careful that we do it of ourselves. Let us be sure that we never force upon those, to whom the highest should be given, the invidious office of assuming it. Let us consider, that though each ought to think lowly of himself, some are, and also must be set higher than the rest. Let us bear always willing testimony to those who are so. Let us be as glad to uphold their precedency, as we should be willing to yield up our own.

When One that was so highly exalted had come down from heaven, and testified what He had "seen and heard," how grievous was the record set forth by John, that "no man receiveth his testimony!" Few only, out of the many who heard his words, were inclined to believe their truth! For that some did believe, is signified in what follows: "He that hath received his testimony hath set to his seal that God is true." The faith of believing Christians does honour to divine truth, whilst it secures their own salvation. It justifies the wisdom of the Gospel dispensation, whilst it avails to the inheritance of everlasting life. Such is the fruit of Christian faith. Such is the nature of Christian love. We must have regard at once to God, and to ourselves; not to our present ease, but to our eternal welfare; not only to our own salvation, but to the glory of God our Saviour.

God grant that we may receive the testimony of Christ! God grant that we may believe in his Son! God grant that we may have everlasting life, and may set to our seal that He is true! God grant that as we have been "sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance," Eph. 1. 13, 14, so we may in the end be sealed, as servants of God, See Rev. 7. 3, and saved from the wrath to come!

Christ teacheth a woman of Samaria.

1 When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John,

2 (Though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples,)

3 He left Judæa, and departed again into Galilee.

4 And he must needs go through Samaria.

5 Then cometh he to a city of Samaria, which is called Sychar, near to the parcel of ground ¹ that Jacob gave to his son Joseph.

6 Now Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well: and it was about the sixth hour.

7 There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water: Jesus saith unto her, Give me to drink.

8 (For his disciples were gone away unto the city to buy meat.)

9 Then saith the woman of Samaria unto him, How is it that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria? for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.

10 Jesus answered and said unto her, If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water.

11 The woman saith unto him, Sir, thou hast nothing to draw with, and the well is deep: from whence then hast thou that living water?

12 Art thou greater than our father Jacob, which gave us the well, and drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle?

13 Jesus answered and said unto her, Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again:

14 But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.

¹ Gen. 33. 19. and 48. 22. Josh. 24. 32.

§ 288. How those who have been at variance should help each other.

“When the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John,” it became probable that they would attempt to destroy Him before the time. He therefore “left Judæa, and departed again unto Galilee.” And it was as He journeyed for this purpose by the city of Sychar that He met with the woman of Samaria. Thus the apprehended enmity of the Jews threw Christ into conversation with the Samaritans. The malice of the Pharisees ministered an occasion for his kindness to be extended to these outcasts of Israel. And the very fatigue arising from his journey, led to his giving rest unto one, who laboured and was heavy laden with the burden of sin. “Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus on the well,” sat as one that is weary sits; sat as one desirous to rest, and yet willing and ready in the midst of his repose to labour, either by word or work, for good. “There cometh a woman of Samaria to draw water.” This was one of those common occurrences, which our Lord delighted to connect with his lessons of divine instruction. By which means He made his teaching more familiar and plain. And He hallowed also these circumstances for our improvement, to suggest to us continually the use He made of them. Never may we henceforth see water drawn, without reflecting on the humility of Him, who thus asked of a woman that was a Samaritan, “Give me to drink;” without thinking of that living water, which Christ alone can give.

The woman marvelled how it could happen that one who was a Jew, should condescend to ask her assistance; “for the Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans.” Let us learn from our Lord's conduct, if there be any with whom we have been at variance, that we should not be above receiving assistance from them, much less be reluctant to assist. The woman's answer expressed her reluctance to comply with his gracious request. Upon which He told her how different her behaviour would have been, if she had known who it was that addressed her. Not only would she have given readily, but also have asked eagerly; and asking she would have received living water. How differently should we oftentimes receive the request preferred to us by our brethren, if we did but duly consider who it is, that in them applies to us! It is Christ, who in the hungry, the naked, and the fatherless, demands our aid. It is Christ to whom we give each cup of cold water, that we bestow for his sake on one of the least of his disciples. Never then must we answer any, thus applying, without expression of Christian kindness. Never must we dismiss any, whom we know to be in want, without helping them according to our ability. Rather we must ask of them, ask of Him who in them applies to us. We must, seek, by their means, to gain help of Him. We must endeavour, out of the mammon of unrighteousness, to make to ourselves friends, who when we fail will receive us into everlasting habitations. See Luke 16. 9.

What kind of water our Lord here meant He explains by saying in what follows: “Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life.” That is to say, he shall never thirst in the life which is to come. For here, those to whom Christ giveth of his grace, hunger and thirst so much the more after righteousness. But for all who so thirst it is appointed that “they shall be filled.” Matthew 5. 6. And here we see what they shall be filled with; “a well of water springing up into everlasting life;” a draught of those heavenly gifts, which, like water, at once cleanse outwardly, and refresh within; which flow without ceasing, fill without cloying, and endure without end. These, if we will but ask, He will give. How then, if we know this gift of God, how is it that we refrain from asking?

Christ revealeth Himself to the woman of Samaria.

15 The woman saith unto him, Sir, give me this water, that I thirst not, neither come hither to draw.

16 Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither.

17 The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband:

18 For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband: in that saidst thou truly.

19 The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet.

20 Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; and ye say, that in ¹ Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship.

21 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, believe me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father.

22 Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship: for salvation is of the Jews.

¹ Deut. 12. 5.

23 But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship him.

24 ² God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.

25 The woman saith unto him, I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things.

26 Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he.

27 And upon this came his disciples, and marvelled that he talked with the woman: yet no man said, What seekest thou? or, Why talkest thou with her?

28 The women then left her waterpot, and went her way into the city, and saith to the men,

29 Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?

30 Then they went out of the city, and came unto him.

² 2 Cor. 3. 17.

§ 289. That we must worship God in spirit and in truth.

The woman of Samaria, hearing our Lord's account of what He had to bestow, asked saying, "Give me this water;" and expected in her ignorance that she would then no more thirst, no more have occasion to go to the well and draw. "Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither." To be convinced of sin is necessary, before we can duly comprehend the way of eternal life. And therefore our Lord directs her attention to the chief of her sins, the having had so many husbands, some probably during the life time of the others, so that the one she then had was not her husband. And by thus opening to her his knowledge of her sinfulness, He convinced her that He was a prophet sent from God, and inclined her to listen to his teaching. If we find in the Gospel a faithful picture of our own corrupt condition, let us be the more inclined to search into it for an account of how we may be healed. If we hear from Christ a true statement of our many and grievous sins, let us be the more persuaded to ask of Him how we may be forgiven for the past, how we may serve God for the future.

The chief thing of which this woman inquired was one then much disputed between the Jews and the Samaritans: which was the right place of worship. To seek for satisfaction in a controverted point, proves often in the inquirer, not a love of disputing, but a conviction that the truth is of importance, and a lively desire to believe aright. In his answer our Lord informed her that a time was then at hand, in which no weight would any longer be attached to worshipping in any mountain or city; but that true worshippers all over the world should worship the Father "in spirit and in truth." Let this then be our rule of devotion; and our reason this, that "God is a spirit." He is One who seeth not only that which is without, but also that which is within. There then in our hearts let us pay Him honour, there pray as to Him there hearing us, there give thanks as He would have us, there believe as He has revealed Himself unto us. "In spirit," not in mere vain profession. "In spirit," not in lifeless form. "And in truth," not only with zeal, but with a faith that is correct, in the very method that is laid down for us in the Scriptures; and after the order that has been adopted by the church, which is "the pillar and ground of the truth," 1 Tim. 3. 15.

"The woman saith unto him, I know that Messiah cometh, which is called Christ: when he is come, he will tell us all things. Jesus saith unto her, I that speak unto thee am he." What a positive assertion have we here of this great truth of the Gospel, that Jesus is the Christ. How came it to pass that He, who would not commit Himself to any of the Jews, see ch. 2. 24, thus openly revealed Himself to a woman that was a Samaritan and a sinner? This must have been by reason of her humility and her faith. She believed beforehand that Christ would be able to tell her all things. She received without a murmur his testimony against her sins. She proclaimed without delay to the neighbours her discovery of the Christ, and how He had told her all her deeds. She was more careful to declare his glory than to conceal her own shame. The more we humble ourselves, whether before God or man, Christ will the more lift us up. The more we are willing to learn, He is the more pleased to teach. The more we are desirous to teach others, He will the more make us to be ourselves wise unto salvation. Oh then let us never so much fear shame before men, as condemnation before God. Never let us be too proud to learn, never too impatient to teach. Never let us fail, in confessing our sins, to feel deep conviction of our sinfulness. Never let us neglect, when we kneel in prayer, to worship in spirit and in truth!

Christ encourageth his disciples.

31 In the mean while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat.

32 But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of.

33 Therefore said the disciples one to another, Hath any man brought him ought to eat?

34 Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work.

35 Say not ye, 'There are yet four months, and then cometh harvest?' behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; ¹ for they are white already to harvest.

36 And he that reapeth receiveth wages, and gathereth fruit unto life eternal: that both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together.

37 And herein is that saying true, One soweth, and another reapeth.

38 I sent you to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labour: other men laboured, and ye are entered into their labours.

39 And many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him for the saying of the woman, which testified, He told me all that ever I did.

40 So when the Samaritans were come unto him, they besought him that he would tarry with them: and he abode there two days.

41 And many more believed because of his own word;

42 And said unto the woman, Now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.

¹ Matt. 9. 37.

§ 290. That we should be patient in well doing.

Whilst the woman of Samaria had left her waterpot, and forgotten her thirst, in her zeal to ask her neighbouring citizens, "Is not this the Christ?" v. 29; "in the mean while his disciples prayed him, saying, Master, eat." His reply may seem to signify for Himself that He was engaged in watching for that soul which He had so lately gained over to his Father; that He was encouraging the zeal that took her back to the city; there attending on her words, to bless them to the conviction of the hearers. "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." And in us, these words of his should serve to repress any anxious thought for this world's meat, and to excite a lively desire to forward our heavenly Father's will. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." This should be our reflection, when we are urged by the lovers of the world to share in the eager pursuit of wealth, or their intemperate indulgence in food. This should be our great rule of life; this the great object of all our labour; not to finish our own work, but God's; not to do our own will, but his. Then shall we never grudge or murmur, though the work we have in hand should not be by Him permitted to succeed. We are but his servants. We desire only to do what He would have us. Our plans we have laid in order to please Him. We pursue them on the principles which He has revealed. And shall we not be satisfied to leave in his hands the result? If we prosper, shall we not conclude that our success is his doing? If we fail, shall we not be content to think, that thus to fail was more for his glory, and therefore also more for our good?

And this is especially true of such work as our Lord here chiefly intended, the work of making men wise unto salvation; the work which He Himself had to do; the work which He appointed to his apostles and ministers; the work in which all Christians ought to rejoice above all other works to labour. For is it not true, that amongst ourselves the spiritual fields are "white already to harvest?" Have we not, every one of us, some within our reach, whom we might profitably admonish with the words of Christian counsel, or yet more surely reach with the influence of Christian example? Let us remember that in this harvest "he that reapeth receiveth wages." "He which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5. 20. And herein also is that saying true, "one soweth and another reapeth." True it is, in cases where our labour may seem to fail. The seed may have been notwithstanding sown, in which "both he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together." And true it is in this sense also, that it is Christ who really sows that seed in the converted heart, of which if we labour in thus well doing He graciously allows us to reap the fruit.

The Samaritans at first believed in Christ for the saying of the woman. After coming to Him, and hearing Him, they remarked: "now we believe, not because of thy saying: for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." These words we may profitably apply to our own Christian convictions. Much we ought to defer to testimony. Much we ought to feel that we are indebted to the witness of those, who have assured us from generation to generation that Jesus is the Christ. But much also we ought to derive from our own experience of his grace received into our souls, of his word made profitable to the amendment of our lives. This Christian experience is not indeed a thing to speak of boastfully, but it is a matter which we ought to feel deeply, and which on due occasions we ought to profess thankfully. To feel within our hearts new and strong convictions, new and holy purposes, new and heavenly help, these are gifts which we ought to ascribe with gladness to Him, through whose love alone they are received. May He give us this peace and joy in believing, this persuasion of love within ourselves, that He is indeed our Saviour from the bonds of sin and death!

Christ healeth a child sick at Capernaum.

43 Now after two days he departed thence, and went into Galilee.

44 For ¹ Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.

45 Then when he was come into Galilee, the Galilæans received him, having seen all the things that he did at Jerusalem at the feast: for they also went unto the feast.

46 So Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee, where he made the water wine. And there was a certain nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum.

47 When he heard that Jesus was come out of Judæa into Galilee, he went unto him, and besought him that he would come down, and heal his son: for he was at the point of death.

48 Then said Jesus unto him, Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe.

49 The nobleman saith unto him, Sir, come down ere my child die.

50 Jesus saith unto him, Go thy way: thy son liveth. And the man believed the word that Jesus had spoken unto him, and he went his way.

51 And as he was now going down, his servants met him, and told him, saying, Thy son liveth.

52 Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend. And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him.

53 So the father knew that it was at the same hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself believed and his whole house.

54 This is again the second miracle that Jesus did, when he was come out of Judæa into Galilee.

¹ Matt. 13. 57.

² Ch. 2. 1.

|| Or, courtier, or, ruler.

§ 291. How we should persevere in praying.

“Jesus himself testified, that a prophet hath no honour in his own country.” And this was the reason of his going to other parts of Galilee, in preference to Nazareth, “where he had been brought up.” Luke 4. 16. This tendency to despise whatsoever we are familiar with, besets us also in the ordinances of religion; so that the better we know them, the less we shall profit by them, unless we watch to use them for our spiritual improvement. Let us be therefore on our guard against this danger. Let us be watchful, whatever we have to do repeatedly to God’s honour, as praying to Him, or listening to his word, let us be watchful that we do it each time with more of faith and of devotion, more of zeal, and of diligence, and of love. Then the more we are familiar with his dealings, we shall the more reverence Himself. The better we know our Bible or our prayers, we shall the more profit by their use.

Having been favourably received by the Galilæans, “Jesus came again into Cana of Galilee,” where He had turned water into wine. Here he was met by “a certain nobleman, whose son was sick at Capernaum.” To his application for help he received at first this cold reply: “Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe.” So also God often seems to turn a deaf ear to our prayers; or at least we imagine that He does, because He grants them not as soon as we desire. Let us learn from this history to repeat them continually with so much the more of faith and fervour. “Sir, come down ere my child die.” Come, Lord, and help, that our souls perish not. Though hitherto we have prayed, as we suppose, in vain, though as yet we are not as holy and heavenly minded, as we know we ought to be, as we desire we should be; yet, Thou we believe canst heal our infirmities; come down, then, O Lord, from heaven to help, ere the soul more precious than an only child, perish everlastingly. If thus we persevere in praying, we shall be sure of receiving, in due time, the pardon and the peace we long for. Often in this present life the prayer of faith is answered by the joyful assurance imparted from above, Thy soul liveth. And whatever measure of hope we may here be blest with, our sentence is sealed for the future: “Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.” Matth. 7. 7.

“So the father knew that it was at the same hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself believed, and his whole house.” He knew it to be a miracle by the exact agreement of the time. He believed in consequence of the miracle. He believed that Jesus was the Christ. And with him his whole house also believed. This is what ought to happen in each Christian family, in each Christian state. The faith of those who bear rule, should be made to influence the rest. Each in his due place and order should himself serve God devoutly; and also use all means in his power to make the rest do likewise. For what gift is there imparted from God to man, which man ought not to use to the honour of the Giver? And what talent is more evidently the gift of God, than the authority of parent over child, master over servant, or ruler over states and churches? And how shall they who are in authority answer for it hereafter, if they maintain not to the uttermost the cause of Christian truth, if they constrain not to the uttermost all those whom they can influence, to the practice of Christian holiness?

God grant that they who bear rule in this church and nation may use their authority for the maintenance of Christ’s true religion! God give grace to all who are of this household, that they may believe in Christ as the Saviour of the soul! God make us to agree in one faith, to walk by one rule of holiness and love, and hereafter to dwell together in one “building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens!” 2 Cor. 5. 1.

Christ healeth one at the pool of Bethesda.

1 After ¹ this there was a feast of the Jews; and Jesus went up to Jerusalem.

2 Now there is at Jerusalem by the sheep || market a pool, which is called in the Hebrew tongue Bethesda, having five porches.

3 In these lay a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of the water.

4 For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool, and troubled the water: whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole of whatsoever disease he had.

5 And a certain man was there, which had an infirmity thirty and eight years.

6 When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole?

7 The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool: but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me.

8 Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk.

9 And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed, and walked: and on the same day was the sabbath.

¹ Lev. 23. 2. Deut. 16. 1.

|| Or, gate.

§ 292. The healing of our spiritual infirmity.

Many things there were of a marvellous nature in the dispensation of the Jews, which can only be explained by the manifest interference of Jehovah in the government of his chosen people. Thus angels, who still minister to the advantage of them who shall be heirs of salvation, see Heb. 1. 14, were then employed to act on the outward senses, to inflict, as when David sinned, a pestilence on the people, 2 Sam. 24. 16; or to supply as at Bethesda, health to the diseased. At this pool there were many sick, and only one was healed. In our spiritual infirmity there are many who are made whole. Yet compared with those who never reach unto the healing waters, few are they who seem to profit by them. Few are they out of all mankind who so much as know the name of Jesus Christ. Few are they out of all that know, who so much as profess to receive his faith. Few out of those who so profess, few are they who in their hearts effectually believe. Few are they who walk by faith. Few are they who obey with love. Few are they which hunger and thirst after righteousness, which set their affection on things above, which count all things on earth but loss for Christ, which follow Christ even unto death. And whilst thus there are so few here saved from sin, must we not anxiously ask concerning eternal wrath, may we not rightly ask with apprehension for ourselves, "Lord, are there few that be saved?" Luke 13. 23.

And yet there is demanded of us not more than was required of the man here healed; "Wilt thou be made whole?" It is not ability to do right, that is expected of us, but a willingness to be saved from doing wrong: a readiness to have wrought in us by Almighty God that which we cannot do of ourselves. A submission of our will to his will; a conviction that his way of saving us through Christ is not only all sufficient, but all wise, all good; a lively desire to be so saved, an eagerness to comply with the terms of this salvation; these are the things implied in this question put to us: "Wilt thou be made whole?" Oh, why are we so slow to answer for the soul, what we so freely assent to for the body? Why are the impotent so glad to be made strong, the blind to see, the halt to walk, the withered to be renewed in vigour; whilst the angry are so reluctant to become gentle, the malicious kind, the dishonest true, or the lascivious pure? Why are we in the one case so uniformly willing, in the other so commonly averse: especially when in the latter case, and that far the most important, to be willing is all that is required?

The fact is, that here the will is itself diseased. We are herein like this infirm man at Bethesda, who was unable to walk, and yet could only be healed by first walking, nay, by running and outrunning others, to the pool. We must be holy in order to love holiness, and in order to be holy we must first have faith. And yet we cannot believe without being inclined towards belief, without loving the things believed, and wishing them to be true. Are we then in our infirmity tempted to despond? Are we tempted to give up the hope of holiness, and thus to relax in our efforts to be holy? Let us learn to be patient and persevering in our prayers. Let us learn from one who waited thirty and eight years, at the pool of Bethesda, with so small prospect of profit by the stirring of the waters. Let us learn that God has other ways than those we think of, to give us the health we need. Let us learn from Him, who said to this sick man in his distress, "Rise, take up thy bed, and walk." To move is first necessary; but He can help us first to move. We must will to be made whole; but He can help us so to will. His voice has already bidden us to rise and walk; his grace can enable us to obey.

"Thirty and eight years." What a length of time was this to wait in a condition so forlorn! More than half the usual span of human life! In the heavenly healing of the soul we need not wait a single hour for its beginning, but we must wait to the end of life ere it is complete. It is begun we may hope already. But, Lord, how much is still wanting! How feebly do we yet walk in the ways of thy commandments! How do we still faintly resist temptation! How do we still cling to the sins we should forsake! How do we still greedily follow after pleasure, and carelessly search for truth! How are we still strong for evil, and how still impotent for good! Make us, for Thou alone art able, make us to rise and walk. Make us to advance from where we are, and to approach to what we should be. Make us to go on from strength to strength; even to be like to what Thou art, perfect. See Psalm 84. 7.

Christ answereth the Jews.

10 The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the sabbath day: 'it is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed.

11 He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk.

12 Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk?

13 And he that was healed wist not who it was: for Jesus had conveyed himself away, || a multitude being in that place.

14 Afterward Jesus findeth him in the temple, and said unto him, Behold, thou art made whole: sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee.

15 The man departed, and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole.

16 And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the sabbath day.

17 But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work.

18 Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God.

19 Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.

20 For the Father loveth the Son, and sheweth him all things that himself doeth: and he will shew him greater works than these, that ye may marvel.

21 For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.

22 For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son:

23 That all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son honoureth not the Father which hath sent him.

¹ Jer. 17. 22.

|| Or, from the multitude that was.

§ 203. The divinity of Christ.

The Jews forbade the man who had been healed to carry his bed, as he had been directed, on the sabbath day. "He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, 'Take up thy bed, and walk.'" It seemed reasonable to conclude that one who could work so great a miracle might justly enforce a command so easy. The Jews, not content with this reply, desired to know who had wrought the miracle. And though he "that was cured" knew not at first who it was, yet afterwards, having met our Lord in the temple, he "departed, and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole." And this we may suppose he did, not on purpose to betray one who had so greatly benefitted him, but in order to excuse himself, and without thinking of the trouble he might bring upon Jesus. Let us be watchful that in such a case as this we look not only on our own things, see Phil. 2. 4, that we consider not only our own safety or advantage; lest we injure unawares our neighbour, lest we unadvisedly betray our Lord.

And further let us listen to this his solemn charge: "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." This is an exhortation, which we shall do well to call to mind, whenever we experience, through God's mercy, deliverance from any evil we have felt or feared. If we have been ill, and are now well, if we have been alarmed by the approach of danger, and now seem to have escaped in safety; let us take for the rule of our behaviour this wholesome counsel, "sin no more;" let us take for our warning these solemn words, "lest a worse thing come unto thee." How many sins have we already committed! And how many judgments have we hitherto escaped! How often have we been living in such unity with God, as must have ensured, if we had then been called away to judgment, our endless destruction! God be praised, that He has not cut us off in the midst of our transgressions! God be praised, that He has brought us to a better frame of mind whether by affliction or by joy, whether by sickness or recovery, whether by his dealings towards ourselves or towards those we love! Let us take care that we sin no more, lest there come upon us that thing, far worse than all this world's woes, eternal death.

To the Jews, who sought to slay our Lord, for his work of healing on the sabbath day, He replied: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." And by this they understood Him to say that God was his Father, and to make himself equal with God. His saying we may thus interpret: Does not the Almighty Father sustain on the seventh day that world, which in the first six He made? Do not the fruits of the earth grow during the sabbath? Does not the sun on this day rise and set? Do not all living creatures on this day both draw their breath and take their nourishment? And are any of these things done without God working? And is there any thing that the Father doeth which the Son may not do likewise?

And now further to make this doctrine plain, our Lord adds, that in thus making Himself equal to the Father, He claimed no more than his due honour. For unto Him the Father in his love sheweth "all things that himself doeth;" all things, even the raising of the dead, all things, even the judging of the world. And thus it is the Father's will that He should be honoured, "that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father." Let this then be the sufficient warrant for our practice, whatever difficulty we experience in the doctrine of our Lord's divinity. We may be perplexed as to how we are to understand. We can have no doubt as to what we are to do. It is to honour the Son even as we honour the Father. It is to love, and serve, and worship Christ, as we worship, and serve, and love Almighty God.

Christ testifieth of Himself.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.

25 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live.

26 For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself;

27 And hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man.

28 Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice,

29 And shall come forth; ¹they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.

30 I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.

¹ Matt. 25. 46.

§ 294. The twofold resurrection.

This passage, we should remember, is a part of our Lord's answer to the Jews, when they sought to slay Him, for saying that God was his Father. See how far He is from extenuating the force of what He had said! See how He proves at full length its truth! See in how many things He shews that He was, as they had supposed Him to signify, "equal with God!" ver. 18. These particulars we may profitably consider, not merely as justifying what our Lord has spoken, but as truths which it is of great importance for us to believe, in order to our being justified by faith in Him.

How much, for instance, is said for us, in this most consolatory promise: "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation: but is passed from death unto life." Do we thus hear? Have we thus believed? Are we now thus passed from death unto life, from the death which we all died in Adam, to the life unto which all are made alive in Christ? Do we hope also, have we a lively hope, to pass, by the same Lord, and by faith in Him, from the death which we must die in the flesh, to the glories of life eternal? Do we watch, as we should do, for that hour, of which He here assures us that it "is coming;" an hour, "in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth!" All that have died, all shall live. All that have died, all shall rise again. For this life we inherit from the second Adam, as surely as we derive through the first our present existence. And in proof of it He here told the Jews, that at the time then present the dead should hear his "voice, and live;" meaning those whom He raised from the dead, and those who on his dying arose from the grave. And this He tells them should be no marvel, compared with what would happen at the hour yet to come, when all should rise to live for ever. This life He has imparted to all; this hope He has set forth to all. And yet strange to say, all do not gladly receive it, all will not enjoy its fulfilment. There will indeed be a "resurrection of life;" but there will be also a "resurrection of damnation." At the same hour, when all that are in the graves shall come forth, there will be some appointed to one condition, and some to the other; some sentenced to endless misery, as well as some to everlasting joy. And which they be, will be settled by no arbitrary choice, but by an exact and righteous judgment. And the very Son, through whom we hope for our everlasting inheritance, He will be at that day our Judge. For the Father "hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man." And as the apostle writes to the Hebrews, 2. 18, "in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted;" so may we hence argue for our encouragement, that He will be more merciful to judge them that in temptation fall. Therefore it is that He will be the Judge of all mankind, because He is at once both God and man.

"I can of mine own self," He adds, "do nothing." This He says as Son of man. This He adds, lest the Jews, who saw Him to be a man, and supposed Him to be a man only, should suppose that as a man He assumed authority to judge the rest of mankind. No, it is as He hears that He judges; as He hears of God, with whom He is ever one, as He hears of our behaviour, which is noted, as in a book, and is heard of, yea seen, ever by our Lord. Therefore is his judgment just. For it is the judgment of Almighty God. It is because He is the Son of man that He is appointed to the office; but it is as He is the Son of God that He will execute it. It is the will of the Father which He seeks in his judgment; for his will and the Father's will are one; He and the Father are one also. See John 10. 30.

May He make our will to be one with his, and one with the Father's! May He make us to be one with the Father, and one with his blessed self! May He make us in point of faith and charity to be also one with each other! May He make us to pass from death to life, at once because we believe in Him, and because we love our brethren! See 1 John 3. 14.

Christ declareth the testimony of others.

31 'If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true.

32 'There is another that beareth witness of me; and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true.

33 Ye sent unto John, and 'he bare witness unto the truth.

34 But I receive not testimony from man: but these things I say, that ye might be saved.

35 He was a burning and a shining light: and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light.

36 But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me.

37 And the Father himself, which hath sent me, 'hath borne witness of me. Ye have neither heard his voice at any time, 'nor seen his shape.

38 And ye have not his word abiding in you: for whom he hath sent, him ye believe not.

39 Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me.

40 And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life.

41 I receive not honour from men.

42 But I know you, that ye have not the love of God in you.

43 I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive me not: if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive.

44 'How can ye believe, which receive honour one of another, and seek not the honour that cometh from God only?

45 Do not think that I will accense you to the Father: there is one that accuseth you, even Moses, in whom ye trust.

46 For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: 'for he wrote of me.

47 But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words?

¹ Ch. 8. 14. ² Matt. 3. 17. ³ Ch. 1. 7. ⁴ Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5. ⁵ Deut. 4. 12. ⁶ Ch. 12. 43. ⁷ Gen. 3. 15. Deut. 18. 15.

§ 295. How we should search the Scriptures.

As the Jews were likely to object to the witness which Christ had borne of Himself, that therefore it was not true, He here declares to them three other signal testimonies, the witness of John, the witness of the Father, and the witness of the Scriptures. Of John, He reminds them, that they themselves were for a season willing to rejoice in his light. And this He said not as boasting, for He received not, cared not to receive "testimony from men," but on purpose that they might be saved; an purpose, that being thus convinced by testimony, they might now at length, ere too late, believe. Let us turn to this end, in our own behalf, what here we read of the truth of Christ. Let us so hear, that we may believe. Let us so believe, that we may "be saved." Let us seek to be saved through faith in Christ. Let us be willing to rejoice in the light of Christ, not for a season, but for ever.

But secondly, "I have greater witness," saith our Lord, "than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me." The miracles then of Christ, and especially that chief of all works He had to do, his death upon the cross, these were the witness of the Father, these were in truth the Father's work. And this we may in a measure understand, by considering how our own best doings, which we feel to be in some degree our own, are yet truly works of God, wrought in us by his Spirit. We, as sons of God, do only that which He does in us. *Much more, our blessed Lord, being Son in far other sort than we are, did nothing, does nothing, but what the Father, with whom He is one, does. So that though we have not at any time heard the Father's voice, nor seen his shape, we may be sure that in the Gospel of the Son we have revealed to us the will of the Father also!

Let us therefore as our Lord bade the Jews, "search the scriptures;" both the Scriptures of the Old Testament, which were here intended, and those of the New, which have been since graciously imparted. Let us search them, as giving witness that Jesus is the Christ. Let us search them, that we may learn the will of God. Let us search them, under the full persuasion that in them we have eternal life. And in this search let us never be influenced by that regard for the good opinion of men, which supplants us we are here warned, the desire we ought to feel for "the honour that cometh from God only." Often are the best of mankind mistaken in their judgment. And if we hearken to the rest, there are some who would check our piety by scorn, and others who by their praise of worldly vanities would turn our hearts from things above. Whilst many even inculcate as desirable the pride, revenge, and covetousness, which we must daily labour to root out of our hearts. How can we receive honour from such as these, how can we aim to earn their good opinion, without falling away from holiness and love? And how if we fall off in practice, how can we continue to believe?

Let us remember, if we are wanting either in faith or in obedience, though Christ accuse us not, though it be his office not to accuse, but to intercede for mercy, yet is there one, there are many, who accuse. There is Moses who wrote of Christ, there are the prophets who spake of Him beforehand, there are the apostles who set down his words and works; there are all who in all generations, have obeyed better or believed more; all these there are to rise up in the judgment against us, all these to accuse, to condemn us. Let us no longer hesitate to receive their testimony. Let us rejoice to receive, and seek to understand it. Let us search the Scriptures for the truth. And in searching, let us desire no other praise, let us care to receive no other honour, than that "which cometh from God only!"

Christ feedeth five thousand.

1 After these things Jesus went over the sea of Galilee, which is the sea of Tiberias.

2 And a great multitude followed him, because they saw his miracles which he did on them that were diseased.

3 And Jesus went up into a mountain, and there he sat with his disciples.

4 ¹ And the passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh.

5 ² When Jesus then lifted up his eyes, and saw a great company come unto him, he saith unto Philip, Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?

6 And this he said to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do.

7 Philip answered him, Two hundred pennyworth of bread is not sufficient for them, that every one of them may take a little.

8 One of his disciples, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, saith unto him,

9 There is a lad here, which hath five barley loaves, and two small fishes: but what are they among so many?

10 And Jesus said, Make the men sit down. Now there was much grass in the place. So the men sat down, in number about five thousand.

11 And Jesus took the loaves; and when he had given thanks, he distributed to the disciples, and the disciples to them that were set down; and likewise of the fishes as much as they would.

12 When they were filled, he said unto his disciples, Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost.

13 Therefore they gathered them together, and filled twelve baskets with the fragments of the five barley loaves, which remained over and above unto them that had eaten.

14 Then those men, when they had seen the miracle that Jesus did, said, 'This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world.'

¹ Lev. 23. 5. Deut. 16. 1.

² Matt. 14. 14.

§ 296. The great effects of small means.

This miracle took place, St. John tells us, "after these things," after what he had been before relating. And this means some time afterwards, probably a whole year; it having been one passover when Christ visited the pool of Bethesda, and another when He fed these five thousand men. "And the passover, a feast of the Jews, was nigh." This accounts for so great a multitude being at the time assembled. For at this feast the whole people of the Jews were bound to worship at Jerusalem; and large companies used to travel towards the city, from every quarter. Now this passover was called the "feast of unleavened bread." Luke 22. 1. And the miracle of multiplying the loaves seems therefore the more appropriate to the time; and having been wrought at this time, it may well serve to remind us, that He who wrought it was the true "bread, which came down from heaven;" ch. 6. 41, that He was Himself our Passover, which was sacrificed for us. See 1 Cor. 5. 7.

"Whence shall we buy bread, that these may eat?" This we are told our Lord said to Philip, on purpose "to prove him: for he himself knew what he would do." And these latter words are a key to other passages in the Gospels, where Jesus whom we believe to have all power and to know all things, inquires as though He did not know, or requests as though He could not command. These things were done to prove those whom He addressed, to try them, by way of improving them, to try them, in order to their greater glory. And thus Moses tells the Jews of what they had suffered in the wilderness, that God had done it to humble them, and to prove them, to know what was in their heart, whether they would keep his commandments or no. See Deut. 8. 2.

There is another use to be derived from this question of our Lord's. For Philip's answer shews how large a quantity of bread was needed, so as for every one to take even a little. And the remark of Andrew, as to what store of provision could be found, shews how much less this was than would be wanted. Hence we are led to see the force of his reflection, "but what are they among so many?" And this question we may do well to ask, when we consider by what small and simple means God compasses his great works, both of providence and of grace. "The ants," says Solomon, "are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer." Prov. 30. 25. The provision for the wants both of men and animals, the structure, not of our own frame only, but of every work of God which we examine, the daily increase of all living things, and the daily consumption of what is used for their support; all these matters are fit at once to raise our admiration, and to demand our thankfulness.

And thus also in the spreading abroad of the Gospel, let us count first the twelve apostles, then the seventy disciples, nay, let us take in also the thousands which were added to the church on the day of Pentecost, and now let us compare with them the many and great nations, the millions and millions of human beings, who have been brought into the fold of Christ; and must we not here ask, with devout astonishment, "What are they amongst so many?" And when we think how in this very fold are many who grievously offend, how around it the world still lies in wickedness, how few there are either of ministers or of people, who are as salt to the earth, to keep alive amongst mankind the true faith and love of Christ; when we reflect how it is for their sakes that the days of wrath are shortened, see Matt. 24. 22, and how it is through the means of their preaching and living, that all "the kingdoms of this world" must at length "become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ," Rev. 11. 15, must we not again ask, "What are they amongst so many?" Must we not humbly and thankfully acknowledge that they are only what God makes them, that they do only what by them He does?

Christ walketh on the sea ; reproveth the people.

15 When Jesus therefore perceived that they would come and take him by force, to make him a king, he departed again into a mountain himself alone.

16 'And when even was now come, his disciples went down unto the sea,

17 And entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum. And it was now dark, and Jesus was not come to them.

18 And the sea arose by reason of a great wind that blew.

19 So when they had rowed about five and twenty or thirty furlongs, they see Jesus walking on the sea, and drawing nigh unto the ship : and they were afraid.

20 But he saith unto them, It is I ; be not afraid.

21 Then they willingly received him into the ship : and immediately the ship was at the land whither they went.

22 The day following, when the people which stood on the other side of the sea saw that there was none other boat there, save that one whereinto his disciples were entered, and that Jesus went not with his disciples into the boat, but that his disciples were gone away alone ;

¹ Matt. 14. 23.

|| Or, Work not.

23 (Howbeit there came other boats from Tiberias nigh unto the place where they did eat bread, after that the Lord had given thanks :))

24 When the people therefore saw that Jesus was not there, neither his disciples, they also took shipping, and came to Capernaum, seeking for Jesus.

25 And when they had found him on the other side of the sea, they said unto him, Rabbi, when earnest thou hither ?

26 Jesus answered them and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled.

27 || Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you : ² for him hath God the Father sealed.

28 Then said they unto him, What shall we do, that we might work the works of God ?

29 Jesus answered and said unto them, ³ This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.

² Matt. 3. 17.

³ 1 John 3. 23.

§ 297. That we must labour for eternal life.

The Jews knew that their Messiah was to be a King. And therefore, when they were persuaded that Jesus was the Christ, they designed by force to set Him up for an earthly ruler. This however was far from the kind of kingdom in which it was his intent to reign. And in order to avoid it, "he departed again into a mountain himself alone." It seems strange that at such a time his disciples should without Him have gone down unto the sea, and entered into a ship, to pass over to Capernaum. But from St. Matthew, 14. 22, we learn that He constrained them. Whatever we undertake, let us consult God's will, and wait as it were for orders from our Lord. And let us never be tempted to enter upon any business, wherein we cannot trust that we have Christ with us. Though at first it promise well, we may be sure that ere long there will some storm arise ; some wind of passion will fiercely blow, some darkness, for want of light divine, will come over us, to make us feel at once our own folly, and our entire dependence upon our Lord for help. It seems probable that the disciples were forgetful of this. Else why, when they saw Jesus, why should they have been afraid, if it were not that true courage comes of Christian faith, and can never be maintained where the conscience testifies that we have fallen short of Christian duty ? How should all the fears, which we are still apt to entertain, convince us of the faithlessness of which we still are guilty ! And how willingly when thus we have for a while neglected the guidance of our Lord, when we have set about our work in any spirit such as we doubt whether He would approve, how gladly should we receive Him back again into our hearts ; if it should please Him again to visit us, again to move us to repentance, and faith, and love !

That there was no other boat on that side of the lake, except the one into which the disciples entered, that the people saw this, and saw that Jesus went not with his disciples into it, and that they inquired with surprise, "Rabbi, when earnest thou hither?" all these things serve to bring home to our hearts the reality of the miracle which He wrought on the occasion. The people however followed Him, as He told them, not because they saw his miracles, but because they "did eat of the loaves, and were filled." They followed Him for the convenience of being fed without labour. And thus do many still profess to follow Christ, for the worldly advantages of religion, or in the hope of being nourished in spiritual things without any pains or exertion of their own. And therefore does He address to all this important precept ; "Labour not for the meat that perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you." Whatever then be the extent of God's power working in us, we must notwithstanding labour. Whatever be the abundance of his grace, whatever the boundless compass of his love ; we must not withstanding labour. And whatever be our worldly work, let this be still our object, to labour for eternal life ; so to work, as to be serving God, through Christ Jesus. The very same thing, done with one view, may tend towards heaven, which done on another principle ends in hell. The same day's work wrought, the same alms given, the same pain endured, if endured, if given, if wrought, for the sake of Christ our Saviour, will turn our endless profit ; but if it be done for our credit's sake with the world, or out of any mere worldly motive whatever, can yield only "the meat which perisheth." This then let us remember is the work of God, to "believe on him whom he hath sent." This is the way we are to labour after heaven, that we labour to believe in Christ ; that we strive by prayer with God for faith, that through faith we love, and through love obey.

Christ declareth Himself to be the bread of life.

30 They said therefore unto him, What sign shewest thou then, that we may see, and believe thee? what dost thou work?

31 ¹ Our fathers did eat manna¹ in the desert; as it is written, ² He gave them bread from heaven to eat,

32 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.

33 For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world.

34 Then said they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread.

35 And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

36 ³ But I said unto you, That ye also have seen me, and believe not.

37 All that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out.

38 For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.

39 And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day.

40 And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day.

¹ Exod. 16. 15. Num. 11. 7.

² Ps. 78. 25.

§ 298. How belief is the gift of God.

Here we have the same people, who had partaken of the five loaves, still asking for a further sign to be shewn by Christ, and objecting to Him as a miracle more convincing than his, that their fathers had eaten "manna in the desert." Our Lord replies, that the true "bread of God" is not the manna which Moses seemed to give them, any more than it is the meal with which He Himself had fed them, but it "is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." And this is Jesus Christ. This is He whose servants, whose people, whose redeemed, we are. He is our bread, because bread is the chief of food to all mankind. He is our bread, because by bread our life is supported, and our strength nourished; because by Him alone we are able to do the work of God, by Him alone have life, to live for ever. Thus have we in the very least of those good deeds, which through his grace we do, a sign not less sure of his power and love than if He were to feed us by thousands with a single loaf, a proof more certain that we are fed by God, than if He were to rain down manna upon us for to eat, and to give us food from heaven. See Psalm 78. 25.

"Then said they unto him, Lord, evermore give us this bread." They thought that He meant some marvellous kind of food; and they asked for it as for a sign from heaven, for a miracle to be addressed to their outward senses. To make the matter therefore more plain, He replies, "I am the bread of life." Here He directly signifies that He is the very staff of our spiritual subsistence; that it is through Him that our converted souls, in their new and heavenly course, do live, and move, and have their being. And that this is his true meaning is shewn further in what follows; "he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." For coming to Him is here explained to be believing on Him. And as faith cannot prevent us from craving for our natural food, this promise must apply to our spiritual support; that when the soul is weak, through Christ it shall be strong; when faint, through Him it shall revive; when weary, through Him shall be refreshed; when empty, through Him shall be replenished.

"But I said unto you, That ye also have seen me, and believe not." This is what He had said before, that they followed Him for the loaves which they had eaten of. See ver. 26. For as in eating of them they had proof of his power, so in following Him for the sake of what they could get to eat, they gave proof that they believed not as they ought. And why did they not believe? Because the Father had not given them the grace to come to Christ. For all, says our Lord, "all that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." So that to believe we must come to Christ; and to come to Christ it must be given us of God. For it was to do the will of God, not the will of man, that Christ came down from heaven; it was to give effect, not to our worthless wishes, but to the merciful design of the Almighty Father. And his design it is that Christ should lose none of all which thus come to Him. And who these are is thus further explained; "every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him." For of these it is the Father's will that they should have everlasting life; of these does Christ here promise, that He will raise them up at the last day. Thus we see that the salvation of our souls depends chiefly on two things, the will of God moving us, and our willingness to be moved. And of these two, we are here plainly taught that the will of God is both the first in order, and in effect supreme. It is for us to come. But it is for God to move us unto coming. It is God who at the commencement of our Christian life, and afterwards, in each thought of faith, and in each act of obedience, it is God who gives, even to the most willing heart, both the first impulse and the final victory.

"Lord, evermore give us this bread!" Give us, what else we shall hunger for in vain, the will to come to Thee! Give us the grace to believe on Thee, that our souls may not thirst for ever!

Christ answereth the Jews who murmured at Him

41 The Jews then murmured at him, because he said, I am the bread which came down from heaven.

42 And they said, 'Is not this Jesus, the son of Joseph, whose father and mother we know? how is it then that he saith, I came down from heaven?'

43 Jesus therefore answered and said unto them, Murmur not among yourselves.

44 No man can come to me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him: and I will raise him up at the last day.

45 'It is written in the prophets, And they shall be all taught of God. Every man therefore that hath heard, and hath learned of the Father, cometh unto me.

46 Not that any man hath seen the Father, 'save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father.

47 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me hath everlasting life.'

48 I am that bread of life.

49 Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead.

50 This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die.

51 I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.

52 The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, How can this man give us his flesh to eat?

53 Then Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.

54 Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day.

55 For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed.

56 He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him.

57 As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me.

58 This is that bread which came down from heaven: not as your fathers did eat manna, and are dead: he that eateth of this bread shall live for ever.

¹ Matt. 13. 55.

² Is. 54. 13. Jer. 31. 34.

³ Matt. 11. 27.

§ 299. The excellency of our spiritual life.

See how God is always bringing good out of evil! See how the murmuring of the Jews is made profitable to the instruction of the Christian church! They murmured at Jesus for saying, that He was "the bread which came down from heaven." They murmured because they could not, or rather would not, understand, how this could be. They considered Him to be "the son of Joseph;" and they concluded that He came into the world in an ordinary way. And they were thus bent against receiving his testimony, that He had in a way before unheard of come down from heaven. In his answer, our Lord repeats what He had said before, teaching us one that had authority: not explaining things above our comprehension, but requiring us to believe, for this reason, because He has told us.

Thus He repeats what He had said of its being necessary, that those who come unto Him should all be drawn of the Father. And this He confirms further by the authority of God's word in the Old Testament, quoting from Isaiah 54. 13, "All thy children shall be taught of the Lord." All which we must believe not as seeing, but on the evidence of things not seen; not as understanding how, or why, but as able to understand that so it is, and believing because Christ our Saviour has said it is so. Thus should we never murmur at the divine sayings, when we consider them as uttered only for our good; when we reflect that it is our ignorance which makes them hard, and that they are designed by God's goodness to make us wise; that He will help us, if we pray, both to hear and know them; and that whether we hear, or whether we forbear, they are truth.

And what profitable truths are these, which are here repeated and insisted on by our Lord? That He is "the bread of life!" That to believe on Him ensures that we shall live for ever! That as bread satisfies our hunger, as food prolongs our existence on the earth, so does He support the life which is in our souls, so is believing on Him the feeding of our souls, the satisfying of their hunger, the supplying of their wants, the refreshing of their strength! How forcibly does He here teach us, that besides the life we live in the body, we have in Him a new and spiritual existence; that besides the life we derive from the first Adam, we inherit quite another kind of life from the second Adam; that besides the actions which we do with our hands, besides the sight of our eyes and the hearing of our ears, we have other senses, and other means of living; thoughts which may either sin, or glorify God; purposes and affections, which may either pine with hunger, or grow with heavenly nourishment, and which, if they are here fed by Him, will through Him endure for ever! What is earthly food, what is earthly treasure, compared with the enjoyment of such sustenance as this? What was manna in the wilderness, though the gift of God, compared to the flesh which Christ gave for the life of the world? Are not they dead who ate the manna? Did not their bodies perish, like to those of other men? But is this the case with souls that feed by faith on Jesus Christ? Behold, they live by Him! Behold, they live for ever! Their very bodies partake of this quickening influence. Their very bodies He will raise up at the last day. Their souls never die. Death suspends not for an instant their activity; only removes them from earth to heaven. Their earthly duties cease. Their heavenly joys begin. They cease to be patient in tribulation; for there is no sorrow. They cease to believe; for there they see; they "see face to face." 1 Cor. 13. 12. Only they never cease to love. "Charity never faileth." 1 Cor. 13. 8. Love is the last of their occupations here, it is the whole of their work in heaven.

Christ answereth his disciples who were offended.

59 These things said he in the synagogue, as he taught in Capernaum.

60 Many therefore of his disciples, when they had heard this, said, This is an hard saying; who can hear it?

61 When Jesus knew in himself that his disciples murmured at it, he said unto them, Doth this offend you?

62 ¹ What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?

63 It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life.

64 But there are some of you that believe not. For Jesus knew from the beginning who they were that believed not, and who should betray him.

65 And he said, Therefore said I unto you, that no man can come unto me, except it were given unto him of my Father.

66 From that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.

67 Then said Jesus unto the twelve, Will ye also go away?

68 Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.

69 ² And we believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God.

70 Jesus answered them, Have not I chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?

71 He spake of Judas Iscariot the son of Simon: for he it was that should betray him, being one of the twelve.

¹ Ch. 3. 13.

² Matt. 16. 16.

§ 300. To whom shall we go, if not to Christ, for true religion.

The doctrine which our Lord had been teaching in the synagogue of Nazareth seemed to the disciples, as well as to the people, a hard saying. And so it has seemed to many, from that time to the present. That the innocent should die for the guilty, that by the death of one many should be made righteous, that by our partaking of his flesh, through faith, our souls are nourished, as our bodies are by food, and both souls and bodies made to live for ever: these are things far above our comprehension; these are sayings which may very probably seem hard to ourselves. But whilst we admit thus much, let us take care that we never murmur at them, that we are not offended at them. And let us observe the way by which our Lord goes on to satisfy his disciples; not by any further explaining of what He had said, but by referring to the power of God, by telling them that they should see with their own eyes a thing quite as hard to account for, as this which He had been telling them. "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" The ascension of Jesus into heaven was a thing as much beyond all our reasoning beforehand, as his death on the cross. And when they should see this strange thing take place, then surely, He implied, they would believe on his word whatsoever He had thought fit to tell them. Surely then too they would understand that He meant not that they should literally eat his flesh; for they would then see it taken away, far out of their reach. So that it must be the spiritual feeding on Him that He meant. And this it was most important for them, it is most important for us, to understand. And this spiritual feeding is by faith. And without this faith, they are in no wise profited who hear his word, no, nor they who partake of the very bread which betokens his crucified flesh.

Our Lord, whilst He thus enforced these most important Christian doctrines, knew all the time that there were some among his professed disciples who were averse to believe. And it was for their sakes that He repeated the necessity of their being drawn by the Father. For the more we are convinced that our faith is of God's giving, we shall be both more watchful if we have it, to maintain it, and more earnest to pray for it, if as yet we have it not. And He would have had these unbelieving disciples betake themselves to more hearty prayer, and to more humble reliance on the Giver of all good gifts. They however, on the contrary, "from that time" "went back, and walked no more with him." They stumbled at the doctrines here insisted on. They would go thus far and no further. And upon their turning away, our Lord inquired of the twelve, whether they were in like manner offended, whether they would in like manner desert Him.

"Lord, to whom shall we go?" replied Peter, "thou hast the words of eternal life." Let this be our reflection, when we are perplexed by any difficulty either of faith or practice. Let this be our answer to the tempter, when he would draw us either into doubt or sin. To whom should we go, if not to Christ; to what standard of truth, to what rule of life, if not to his blessed Gospel? What system, if not this, will give us help to holiness, what promises, if not these, will give us peace at the last? But let us not trust in the mere conviction of the truth of the Gospel, in the mere possession of Gospel privileges. Let us see in the case of Judas, here pressed on our attention, how vain are such advantages if we fail to improve them. A man might be chosen to be an apostle, and yet be "a devil." A man may be chosen to enjoy all Christian light, and yet in the end perish everlastingly. Let not us then ever trust in what we are. But the more we have enjoyed of light and knowledge, the more let us still endeavour to obtain of grace, the more let us still labour to advance in faith, and holiness, and love.

Lord, to whom shall we go, if not to Thee? Thou hast, and who else but Thou, the words of eternal life? Thou canst teach, and Thou only! Thou canst save, and Thou only! "We believe and are sure that thou art that Christ, the Son of the living God."

Christ reproveth the unbelief of his brethren.

1 After these things Jesus walked in Galilee: for he would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him.

2 ¹ Now the Jews' feast of tabernacles was at hand.

3 His brethren therefore said unto Him, Depart hence, and go into Judæa, that thy disciples also may see the works that thou doest.

4 For there is no man that doeth any thing in secret, and he himself seeketh to be known openly. If thou do these things, shew thyself to the world.

5 For neither did his brethren believe in him.

6 Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come: but your time is alway ready.

7 The world cannot hate you; but me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil.

¹ Lev. 23. 34.

8 Go ye up unto this feast: I go not up yet unto this feast; ² for my time is not yet full come.

9 When he had said these words unto them, he abode still in Galilee.

10 But when his brethren were gone up, then went he also up unto the feast, not openly, but as it were in secret.

11 Then the Jews sought him at the feast, and said, Where is he?

12 And there was much murmuring among the people concerning him: for some said, He is a good man: others said, Nay; but he deceiveth the people.

13 Howbeit no man spake openly of him for fear of the Jews.

² ch. 8. 20.

§ 301. That the friendship of the world is enmity with God.

The Jews were directed to observe the feast of tabernacles, by making themselves booths of boughs, and dwelling in them for seven days. See Levit. 23. 34—44. And this was to keep up the recollection of how God had brought their fathers out of the land of Egypt; on which occasion they were forced for many years to dwell in tents. As then the passover of the Jews is observed by us in remembrance of Christ our Passover being slain for us, and as we celebrate at the season of the Pentecost the pouring out of the Holy Spirit on the Christian church, so it would be well, if by the mention of their feast of tabernacles, we were reminded of our being but pilgrims upon the earth. Here we dwell, as it were in tents, in houses that last not long, looking "for a city which hath foundations," Heb. 11. 10, for a house "eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. 5. 1. Thus at least we ought to dwell, thus we ought to feel. And if thus we feel not, no feast that we can keep will profit us, no life that we can live on earth can be counted for loving God.

It seems almost as if the brethren of Jesus sought purposely to bring Him into peril, before his time, when they endeavoured by taunting words to prevail on Him to go up to Jerusalem. This may serve to warn us, against ever tempting or provoking one another, by words of ridicule or scorn. And here we should observe how strange it seems, that after Jesus had done so many wondrous works, these brethren, who were probably the children of Mary by her husband Joseph, should not yet believe Him to be the Christ! This is like to what may be often seen in families amongst ourselves. One brother is eminent in piety; the rest are little better than unbelievers. One may serve God faithfully; whilst the rest set at nought his counsel for the salvation of their souls. Let no one therefore trust in relationship to others who are eminent in the faith. To be born after our Lord, of the same mother, was not enough to ensure immediate conviction. Nor let any one despond on finding fruitless all the pains he takes in the conversion of his brethren. For some time after Christ began to preach the Gospel, "neither did his brethren believe in him."

"Then Jesus said unto them, My time is not yet come," meaning his time of being delivered up to death; and therefore, He implied, He should not go up to the feast as early as they suggested. Yet afterwards He went up, only not early, and not openly, not so as to draw upon Himself the attention and persecution of the Jewish rulers. As for his brethren themselves, their time, He told them, was always ready: for the world could not hate them. That is to say, they might at any time go in safety. For no one wished to do them any harm. But what an awful condition was this to be in, that the world could not hate them! What an awful condition for us, if we are such as that our time is always ready for the world's good will, we always welcome to the approbation of the world! How can we be doing our Christian duty, without testifying in all we do, that the works of the world are evil? And how if we thus testify in good earnest, how can we escape the hatred of many? And on which side would we prefer to stand? with Christ whom the world hated? or with his brethren whom the world could not hate? And what is the enmity of the world? The frowns, the slander, the opposition, the affronts of men who so soon depart, what are these, that they should be compared with the wrath of God, with the pains which endure for ever? Oh, never may it be forgotten in our hearts, that "the friendship of the world is enmity with God!" James 4. 4. Never may we love the world's praise! Never may we covet the world's wealth! Never may we shrink, if our duty requires us, to encounter the world's hatred! Only so far let us love the world, as to love all them that are in the world; so far as to do them all the good in our power; though they curse, yet in return to bless, though they despitefully use and persecute us, yet to pray for them that it may please God to turn their hearts. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Luke 23. 34. Let this be our prayer for all them that hate us. Let this be our intercession for the world, that still lieth, as we fear, in wickedness. Father, forgive them, as we trust Thou hast forgiven us! Father, forgive them, for the sake of Christ our Lord!

Christ teacheth in the temple.

14 Now about the midst of the feast Jesus went up into the temple, and taught.

15 And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned?

16 Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.

17 If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.

18 He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory: but he that seeketh his glory that sent him, the same is true, and no unrighteousness is in him.

19 Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me?

20 The people answered and said, Thou hast a devil: who goeth about to kill thee?

21 Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel.

22 Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the sabbath day circumcise a man.

23 If a man on the sabbath day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the sabbath day?

24 Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment.

||-Or, learning. ¹ Ex. 24. 3. ² ch. 5. 18. ³ Lev. 12. 3. ⁴ Gen. 17. 10. † Or, without breaking the law of Moses. ⁵ Deut. 1. 16.

§ 302. How we must judge righteous judgment.

Our Lord would not go to Jerusalem as early as his brethren desired: and yet "about the midst of the feast" He "went up into the temple and taught." This was the time at which both the temple and the city were most full. He was therefore less likely to be taken privily by snare, and more likely by his preaching to make a deep and general impression. Let us resolve, whether it be our duty to teach, or only by example and conversation to influence our neighbours, let us resolve so to do for good, in a large company, no less than in one that is small. Let no concourse of a multitude, no thronging of society, make us ashamed of the principles we profess. And in the midst of numbers let us never forget, that we are no less certainly in God's sight, than when we stand alone in his presence. In such cases the topics of discourse may be necessarily different, but the view with which we speak must be still the same, to promote the glory of God, and to "minister grace unto the hearers." Eph. 4. 29.

The Jews marvelled at the teaching of Jesus, because they knew the manner of his early life, and were aware that it had not been spent in such study as is needful to fit a man for teaching others. "Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." What He taught came not from his studying as a man, but from the direct inspiration of God. And this they might have known, if they had been so minded. For, "if any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." This then was the qualification for discerning Christ to be a divine Teacher, a disposition to do the will of God. This it is which will help us also to know true doctrine from that which is false. We must be willing to obey the truth beforehand. We must wish that what we read, however painful to the flesh, may prove to be the truth, if it redound to the welfare of the soul, and to our Saviour's glory. And this, our Lord added, was a proof that his words were true, his here not speaking of Himself, but seeking rather the glory of the Father. And this we should find profitable to our success, in what we do towards the improvement of our neighbours; to shew that we do it not for our own pleasure, not by way of exalting ourselves, but entirely with a view to their advantage, and to the honour of Almighty God.

And next our Lord would convince the Jews that they were not thus minded to do the will of God, and that this was the reason of their not believing his words. He remarks therefore how, in their readiness to kill Him, they violated the sixth commandment, whilst they pretended a zeal for the fourth. And he reminds them how they themselves were forced to dispense with the law of the sabbath, in order to comply with the law of circumcision. For they used to circumcise each child on the eighth day from the birth, whether it were the sabbath day or not. And in so doing they neglected the appearance of doing right, for the sake of the substance. And thus Christ bade them do likewise in their judging of Him. And thus our Lord would have us do in such judgments as we have occasion to form of each other. We must not judge according to the outward appearance, but according to the real truth. We must not judge partially, according to the persons; but according to the things, as they are, and not as they appear. For else many times we shall be tempted to allow in one, what in another we condemn. And often things seem wrong on the first appearance, which, if we knew more thoroughly, we should think of better. Meantime let us hope always for the best. Let us judge charitably, and we shall then judge righteous judgment; righteous, because true, if our neighbour should be in reality meaning better than he seemed; righteous, because, whether he be right or wrong, it is our duty as sinners who have been forgiven, always to judge others as we have been judged ourselves. Lord, be not, Thou extreme to mark what we do amiss! Lord, let not us be hasty to find fault, or eager to condemn each other! Help us to think no evil; even as Thou hast kindly thought of us, hast blotted out all our transgressions, and our sins and our iniquities dost remember no more!

Christ teacheth before the officers who are sent to take Him.

25 Then said some of them of Jerusalem, Is not this he, whom they seek to kill?

26 But, lo, he speaketh boldly, and they say nothing unto him. Do the rulers know indeed that this is the very Christ?

27 Howbeit we know this man whence he is: but when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is.

28 Then cried Jesus in the temple as he taught, saying, Ye both know me, and ye know whence I am: and I am not come of myself, but he that sent me is true, whom ye know not.

29 But I know him: for I am from him, and he hath sent me.

30 Then they sought to take him: but no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come.

31 And many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?

32 The Pharisees heard that the people murmured such things concerning him; and the Pharisees and the chief priests sent officers to take him.

33 Then said Jesus unto them, Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me.

34 Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come.

35 Then said the Jews among themselves, Whither will he go that we shall not find him? will he go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles, and teach the Gentiles?

36 What manner of saying is this that he said, Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me: and where I am, thither ye cannot come?

¹ ch. 13. 33.

|| Or, Greeks.

§ 303. That life is short, and death a change for the better.

That our Lord should speak boldly in the midst of the temple, this made the people marvel why the rulers did not interfere, and doubt whether they did not know Him to be "the very Christ." So great is the fruit of courage in our Christian conduct! So largely does it convince the beholders, both that we are in earnest, and that we are right! But on the other hand the people were under an impression, that, "when Christ cometh, no man knoweth whence he is." So that on this ground of their knowing, as they supposed, the parentage of Jesus, they could not allow Him to be the Christ. Our Lord signifies, in his answer, that, so far as they knew his origin, it should have brought them to the contrary conclusion. The lowliness of his birth and education should have convinced them, that He came not of Himself, but must have been sent by that true God, whom in Him they refused to acknowledge. This answer provoked some of them to seek to take Him. "But no man laid hands on him, because his hour was not yet come." However gently we state the truth, it will not fail in some cases to give offence. But whatever hatred we may meet with for the truth's sake, let it console us hence to learn, that no harm can happen to us but with God's permission; no man can lay hands on us, till that hour be come, when it is good for us to suffer, or still better to depart.

"And many of the people believed on him, and said, When Christ cometh, will he do more miracles than these which this man hath done?" So that they believed by reason of the marvels which they saw. And these miracles must have been the most decisive of all proofs to those who have the happiness to behold them. And for us it is most satisfactory to add this testimony, that they were not only done, but so done as to convince, so done as to prove to those who saw them, that He who wrought them was the Christ. These thoughts, thus whispered about amongst the people, determined the chief priests and Pharisees on attempting to take Him by force. And for this purpose they sent officers, in whose presence our Lord proceeded, as before, to teach his divine doctrines. And they, instead of taking Him, according to their orders, listened, it seems, in silent conviction, whilst He taught the people concerning Himself, that He should shortly ascend unto the Father. "Yet a little while am I with you, and then I go unto him that sent me." In vain do the rulers send these officers to take my person. I shall continue, for such is the will of God, I shall continue for a time to teach in your streets. And when my time is over, I shall go, not to the custody of my enemies, but to the presence of Him that sent me. "Ye shall seek me, and shall not find me." Neither shall enemies be able to find me for the satisfying of their revenge, nor friends for the fulfilment of their joy. "Where I am, thither ye cannot come."

Let this be always the view we take of our continuance in this present life, and of the change which we are to undergo at death. Only a little while let us reckon here to remain; and when we die, let us hope to go to Him who sent us hither. A little while it will surely seem, though we see the end of threescore years and ten. How much less if we should be cut off long before! How much worse, if at the end we could not go to where Christ is! And, oh, how much better than we deserve, that both our time must here be short, and that we may, at the end of it, go to the Father. A little while only we have to suffer here; a little while to endure temptation; a little while to resist the tempter, to wrestle with the flesh, to renounce the world. A little while only we have for sorrow, but eternity for joy; a little while for want, but eternity for treasure in heaven; a little while for shame, but eternity for the crown of glory, eternity for the fellowship of saints and angels, eternity for the presence of Almighty God!

Christ teacheth in the last day of the feast.

37 ¹ In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink.

38 ² He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water.

39 ³ But this spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified.)

40 Many of the people therefore, when they heard this saying, said, Of a truth this is the Prophet.

41 Others said, This is the Christ. But some said, Shall Christ come out of Galilee?

42 ⁴ Hath not the scripture said, That Christ cometh of the seed of David, and out of the town of Bethlehem, where David was?

43 So there was a division among the people because of him.

44 And some of them would have taken him; but no man laid hands on him.

45 Then came the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees; and they said unto them, Why have ye not brought him?

46 The officers answered, Never man spake like this man.

47 Then answered them the Pharisees, Are ye also deceived?

48 Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him?

49 But this people who knoweth not the law are cursed.

50 Nicodemus saith unto them, (⁵ he that came to Jesus by night, being one of them,)

51 ⁶ Doth our law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth?

52 They answered and said unto him, Art thou also of Galilee? Search, and look: for out of Galilee ariseth no prophet.

53 And every man went unto his own house.

¹ Lev. 23. 36.

² Deut. 18. 15.

³ Joel 2. 28. Is. 44. 3.

⁴ Matt. 2. 5.

⁵ ch. 3. 2.

⁶ Deut. 17. 8, &c. & 19. 15.

§ 304. How we should cleave to truth though it be unpopular.

"If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." The offer here made by Christ is of universal application. Let us consider it as addressed to ourselves. Do we thirst? Have we any desire unsatisfied? Do we suffer from any passion striving within us for the mastery? Do we experience the misery of hope deferred of wants which we cannot supply? Do we feel any of this craving in respect to heavenly satisfaction? Do we hunger and thirst after righteousness, and still find that we are not filled? We cannot then yet have come, as we ought to do, unto Christ. We cannot, as we ought, have believed. For unto all who duly believe in Him, it was promised, by the whole tenour of ancient prophecy, and the promise is interpreted and confirmed by Christ, that unto them should be given the abundance of grace, the fulness of peace and joy.

If we have not that grace, if we have not the Holy Spirit making us holy, the fault must be in ourselves, it must be in our faith. What then is effectual Christian faith? How may we so believe as to obtain the gift here graciously proposed? This is a point on which there is now much "division among the people," as there was at first on the question whether Jesus were the Christ. And as then many were perplexed by those words of Scripture, which were meant to guide them into truth, so now do the advocates of most opposite opinions each plead in their defence the same sacred volume. And whilst one party would argue from St. Paul that a man is justified by faith without holiness, another would conclude from St. James that it is possible to be holy without faith. But if we first thoroughly persuade ourselves that all Scripture is true, all "given by inspiration of God," 2 Tim. 3. 16, we shall be aware that all its parts must agree thoroughly with each other; though it may be we cannot always discern the agreement. And we shall consider passages which seem to be at variance, as helps towards our learning the exact truth, by the means of diligent comparison. Christ was born in Bethlehem, as the prophet had foretold; see Micah 5. 2, and yet He truly came out of Galilee, because there He was brought up. Again a man is justified by faith without the works of the law. See Gal. 2. 16. And yet without holiness no man shall see the Lord. See Heb. 12. 14. For without holiness ensuing no man can have justifying faith. See James 2. 26.

Whilst the people were thus divided, the chief priests and Pharisees supposed that amongst themselves there was but one opinion. "Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him?" And yet Nicodemus, one of their number, had gone to Jesus by night, and was now evidently bent on defeating the design of taking him by force. "Doth our law judge any man, before it hear him, and know what he doeth?" In both instances he shewed a regard for truth, and gave evidence of a disposition to believe. But in neither case did he openly avow his conviction that Jesus was the Christ. And as he is neither censured for an unworthy fear, nor praised for a seasonable discretion, we may note rather in his conduct what we know to be good, that he believed when all the other rulers refused assent. Is there any truth which is now generally discredited? any which the rulers of this world discountenance, and which the multitude too are tempted to treat with scorn? Let us not be disheartened in our faith, by its happening that what we hold is unpopular. The more it is discredited, we ought to be the more careful to be sure that it is true; but if sure, we ought also to be the more careful to believe. Like Nicodemus we should be content to stand alone in the truth, rather than be in error with a multitude. Like the officers who were sent to take Jesus, we must even disobey those who are in lawful authority, rather than do violence to our Lord, or to his words. "Never man spake like this man." None must we serve in preference to Him. None must we in preference to Him obey.

Christ delivereth the woman taken in adultery.

1 Jesus went unto the mount of Olives.

2 And early in the morning he came again into the temple, and all the people came unto him; and he sat down, and taught them.

3 And the scribes and Pharisees brought unto him a woman taken in adultery; and when they had set her in the midst,

4 They say unto him, Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act.

5 ¹ Now Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?

6 This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not.

¹ Lev. 20. 10.

7 So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, ² He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.

8 And again he stooped down, and wrote on the ground.

9 And they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.

10 When Jesus had lifted up himself, and saw none but the woman, he said unto her, Woman, where are those thine accusers? hath no man condemned thee?

11 She said, No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her, Neither do I condemn thee: go, and sin no more.

² Deut. 17. 7.

§ 305. That we must henceforth sin no more.

In order to understand the purport of this history, we should consider first, that the scribes and Pharisees applied not to our Lord for any good purpose, out of any good intention; but with a view to draw Him into a snare. They put their question to Him, “tempting him, that they might have to accuse him.” And next we should observe how their question was expressed: “Moses in the law commanded us, that such should be stoned: but what sayest thou?” They supposed that He must either have given sentence against the woman, or have found fault with the Law of Moses. In the first case He must have taken on Himself to act as judge, and must have enforced a punishment, which, in the gross immorality of the Jews, had been long disused. In the second case, they would have counted Him guilty of no less than blasphemy against God. Our Lord’s answer, therefore, was directed not to their question, but to their snare; not to solve the doubt they stated, but to confound the plot they were devising.

And this end He compassed, by turning their own craft against themselves. For knowing, as He did, their hearts, He knew that there was among them no one without sin, no one whose conscience could not be made to testify to guilt no less grievous, if not the very same with this which was brought before Him. At first, therefore, He “stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground,” which may probably mean, as our translators have here signified, that He made “as though he heard them not.” And this might be done both to give time for some of them to retire, if there were any who could be moved with compunction. And for the rest, it might serve to make them suppose Him to be perplexed; that thus the more they were for the present satisfied with themselves, the more their consciences might in the end be smitten by his answer. “So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself, and said unto them, He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her.” This is the searching sentence of our Lord to all who press on Him the speedy judgment of the wicked. These are words which must ever convince those of sin, who murmur at the prosperity of sin in others. This shews also, that though God keep long silence, He can reprove and bring to light the most secret wickedness, and make it stand along with the most open iniquity, in the same scale of offence against Himself. Thus was the temptation of the Pharisees brought to nothing. Thus they themselves “being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last.”

“And Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst.” Here then we have a distinct part of this history to review. No longer has our Lord to deal with Pharisees tempting Him, but with a woman both convicted of gross sin, and convinced also, as we may justly hope, that she was a grievous sinner in the sight of God. For this is one great use, and one very frequent consequence of public shame; it helps powerfully, under God’s grace, to work contrition in the heart. How then does Christ address Himself to this manifest offender? As a judge? Far from it. For as He had before said of Himself, “God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved.” Ch. 3. 17. At his second coming He will execute judgment. At his first He had to teach, or rather to be, the way of salvation. Thus then we may interpret his gracious words, considering them as addressed not to this woman only, but to us also in our sins, whether secret or notorious. “Neither do I condemn thee.” I pass not on thee the sentence of instant death; but I bid thee, whilst life is yet spared, I most earnestly exhort thee to repent, with amendment of life. “Go, and sin no more.” Go, from being convicted in guilt, go from being convinced of sin, go to the tears of penitence, to the change of a converted heart. Go, from shame under the censure of mankind, to selfabasement in the presence of the allseeing God. Go, in the assurance that with Him there is mercy. Go, in the persuasion that thy sins may be forgiven. Go, in the sense of thankfulness for his love. Go, in the full purpose to obey his will. “Go, and sin no more.”

Christ justifieth his testimony.

12 Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

13 The Pharisees therefore said unto him, Thou bearest record of thyself; thy record is not true.

14 Jesus answered and said unto them, "Though I bear record of myself, yet my record is true: for I know whence I came, and whither I go; but ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go.

15 Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man.

16 And yet if I judge, my judgment is true: for

I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me.

17 "It is also written in your law, that the testimony of two men is true.

18 I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me.

19 Then said they unto him, Where is thy Father? Jesus answered, Ye neither know me, nor my Father: if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also.

20 These words spake Jesus in the treasury, as he taught in the temple: and no man laid hands on him; for his hour was not yet come.

¹ Ch. 1. 5. & 9. 5.

² Ch. 5. 31.

³ Deut. 17. 6. Matt. 18. 16.

§ 306 The connexion of doctrine and practice.

This passage is remarkable as an instance of what is elsewhere set down of our Lord, that "he taught as one having authority." Matt. 7. 29. For first He declares this of Himself, which if He had no such authority, would be the height of presumption, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." And when the Pharisees objected that his record was not true, because He bare record of Himself, He replied that it was true notwithstanding, for this reason, that He knew whence He came, and whither He should go. And this means, that He knew of Himself that He came from heaven, and that He should return to heaven. For it meant, as He also tells them, something which they were not aware of. "Ye cannot tell whence I come, and whither I go." They supposed Him to have come into the world as the son of Joseph and Mary. And if this had been the truth, they could easily have told it. But they judged herein after the flesh. They reckoned Him to have come into the world after the manner of the flesh. And according to the lowliness of his supposed birth, and outward appearance, they took Him to be a mere man, no other than themselves.

"Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man." That is to say, I do not exercise whilst on earth the office of a judge. I condemn not, as you would have had me do, even those who are detected in most gross offences; that thus you may the better see how wrong it is in you to judge; in you, who can see no more than the outside show of things. Whereas if I should see fit to judge, my judgment would be true. And why? Because I judge not as man only, but as God; as a Son who is One with the Father: "for I am not alone, but I and the Father that sent me." And hence our Lord goes on to give further answer to the objection of the Jews, that He bare record of Himself, telling them, that as according to their law the testimony of two men must be received for true, see Deut. 17. 6, so ought they to receive that testimony in favour of the Gospel, in which the Father and the Son were united. This then implies evidently, that the Father and the Son are in some sense two. This should keep us ever on our guard against that error in our apprehension of their divine nature, which is called in one of our creeds, "confounding the persons." (Athanasian Creed.) And lest we should on the other hand be tempted to divide the substance, (see same Creed,) let us weigh well what our Lord says in his next sentence, in answer to the Jews asking Him, "Where is thy Father?" Jesus answered, Ye neither know me nor my Father: if ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also."

Do these matters exhaust our attention? Is the reasoning too long for us to follow? Is the doctrine too deep for us to understand? Why then are these words written in God's book? Why did Jesus speak these things "in the treasury, as he taught in the temple?" Were they fitting for the ears of Jews, and shall they raise no interest in Christians? Should it be of no concern to us to know all of God we can, and to desire, if it be possible, to know more? How, but by knowing Him, can we know what we ought to be ourselves? And is it enough to know that He is great and good? May we safely neglect to study those particulars of his greatness and his goodness, which are revealed to us in his written word? No, surely, it is by these that we are to be confirmed in the very foundation of our Christian hopes. We are to look to God as to a Father reconciled, reconciled with us through God the Son, and making us to be holy through God the Holy Ghost. And thus we are brought at once to matter of daily practice. We are to be holy, because He that helps us is Holy. We are to believe, because the benefits of the death of Christ are assured to us only through our faith. We are to love even as sons a Father, a Father who in our estranged state still loved us, and who has now taken us back again into friendship with Himself. And if what we may comprehend is thus connected with our practice, is not that also, which is still above our reach, well fitted to humble our pride in our abilities; to detach our attention from the study of the world; and to convince us continually as we proceed, that in our understanding, as well as in our practice; we can do nothing of ourselves to help ourselves?

Christ speaketh of the Father.

21 Then said Jesus again unto them, I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye cannot come.

22 Then said the Jews, Will he kill himself? because he saith, Whither I go, ye cannot come.

23 And he saith unto them, Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world; I am not of this world.

24 I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins.

25 Then they said unto him, Who art thou? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning.

26 I have many things to say and to judge of you: but he that sent me is true; and I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him.

27 They understood not that he spake to them of the Father.

28 Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things.

29 And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.

30 As he spake these words, many believed on him.

§ 307. The necessity and efficacy of faith.

These sayings of our Lord to the Jews are well fitted to produce on us the effect which they had on those who heard them: "as he spake these words, many believed on him." For see how sad a warning is here set down against those who believe not: "I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins: whither I go ye cannot come." This our Lord said to them, of their seeking Him, after He should have ascended into heaven. This we may conceive said to us, if we put off to seek Him till too late; if we desire not to go where He is gone, till we are on the point of being taken to another place. For this He said to all those who shall die in their sins. And who these are He thus also describes, "Ye are from beneath; I am from above: ye are of this world: I am not of this world." How dreadful a condition; to seek, and not to find; if we should call, and He not hear; if we should live without a thought of heaven, and die in our sins, die without a possibility of being saved from death eternal!

To which world then may we hope that we ourselves belong? to that which is beneath, or to that which is above? On which world do our thoughts chiefly run? on this which we now inhabit, or on that to which our Lord is gone? On which is our chief affection set? To which chiefly are the actions of our lives directed? These questions if we would sift honestly, these if we could truly solve, then should we know how far we are likely, how far it is possible for us, to go to that world where Christ now is. And if we find great difficulty in thus fixing our hearts on the world we fain would go to, let us here learn what that is which is really wanting. "I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." All depends on whether we do heartily believe that Jesus is the Christ, that He died to save our souls alive. Nothing short of faith in Him, nothing short of that love which comes of believing that in Him we have salvation, nothing short of such faith and love as this, can wean our hearts from this present world, and make us in earnest to seek first the world which is to come.

"Then said they unto him, Who art thou? And Jesus saith unto them, Even the same that I said unto you from the beginning." This convicted them of asking where they were already informed. This proved that they wanted will rather than information, for more effectual belief. And this it seems must be the case with us, if we believe not what is here so plainly set down of who Christ is; how what He spake was what He had heard from the Father; how the Father who had sent Him was ever with Him; and how He did always things pleasing to the Father. These are truths, which nothing but our unwillingness to believe could prevent us from receiving as divine. And these we are unwilling to believe, because we are unwilling to live as this faith would require us. For how, if we once heartily receive these things for certain truths, how could we help devoting our whole lives to do what Christ has taught? How could we help setting our whole affection on the heaven which He has promised?

"Then said Jesus unto them, When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he." The Jews must first crucify Christ, and then afterwards they would many of them acknowledge Him. Some would be afterwards converted to his faith; and many, when too late, would be convinced by the subsequent visitation of their city. Thus Christians also not unfrequently first lift up the Son of man, first crucify their Lord by wilful sins, ere they feel their need of his redeeming love. God grant that we may not then first repent, when it is too late to believe unto salvation! God grant that we may not then first believe, when it is the hour for death and judgment! God save us from dying in our sins! God make us, each day that we hear his word, to repent more truly, to love more heartily, to obey more willingly, to believe more firmly; to be less fond of this world, which is below; to be more desirous of those good things which are above, where Christ for ever dwells!

Christ denieth the Jews to be children of Abraham.

31 Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed;

32 And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

33 They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?

34 Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, ¹Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

35 And the servant abideth not in the house for ever: but the Son abideth ever.

36 If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

37 I know that ye are Abraham's seed; but ye seek to kill me, because my word hath no place in you.

38 I speak that which I have seen with my Father: and ye do that which ye have seen with your father.

39 They answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father. Jesus saith unto them, If ye were Abraham's children, ye would do the works of Abraham.

40 But now ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God: this did not Abraham.

41 Ye do the deeds of your father. Then said they to him, We be not born of fornication; we have one Father, even God.

¹ Rom. 6. 20. 2 Pet. 2. 19.

§ 308. That Christ can make free from sin.

"If ye continue in my word;" this is the sign by which our Lord here lays down who are his "disciples indeed." Not, if we receive it at first with joy, and afterwards treat it with indifference; not, if with our lips we own it to be his, but in our lives utterly disokey it; but if we continue in it, if we persevere in well doing to the end of life, if we faint not at the many tribulations which beset a course of selfdenial and Christian charity; then are we Christ's disciples indeed. And see how great are then our privileges! We shall know the truth. We shall not be "carried about with every wind of doctrine;" Eph. 4. 14; we shall "know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." Ch. 7. 17. And the truth will make us free. And this freedom is to be free from sin. It is to be free from that which comes of sin, free from servile fear. It is to be free to do right, not wrong. It is to be set free from the captivity of Satan, "into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8. 21.

* "They answered him." That is to say, the Pharisees here interrupted Him. For these could not be the Jews "which believed on him;" else they soon gave sad proof that they continued not in his word. For they who answered, both sought to kill Him, as we here read, and they were told afterwards by our Lord, that they were of their father the devil. See ver. 44. "They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man." They were affronted at the notion of being made free, as implying that they were then in a state of bondage. And so they really were in bondage, as our Lord explains, to sin. "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." This is the most hard of all servitude. These are the most galling of all chains. This is the slavery from which we should most desire to free both ourselves and others. And the liberty which we should most earnestly seek after is this, the being never in bondage to any sin. For what oppression can be so great as to be constrained to do wrong, as to be subject to a force, which binds not only the outward frame, but the inward principle; which imprisons not only the body, but the soul? The earthly oppressor may make poor, but he cannot rob the poor of contentment. The earthly oppressor may take captive, but he cannot deprive the captive of patience in confinement, of peace and hope and joy. But sin, if it prevail against the conscience, drags also into captivity the inner man, compels him not to do the good he would, and the evil that he would not that to do. See Rom. 7. 19. Let us remember that from such servitude as this the Son only can make us free. It is not the being Abraham's seed. It matters not of whom we are born after the flesh, of what rank, or station, or country, or community. But the deeds which we do, those shew who is our father. "If ye were Abraham's children," said Jesus to the Jews, "ye would do the works of Abraham." If we are become, through adoption and grace, children of God, we shall do the works of God. These works are sure proof of our being truly sons. For it is only by being sons that we can do these works.

If then we have by our baptism been brought into that blessed family, whereof Christ is Himself "the firstborn among many brethren;" Rom. 8. 29; if we have received in many ways advantage from this our new and spiritual birth; if to this first beginning we may trace backwards step by step each thought of good, to which we have been moved by divine grace; let us be thankful unto Him who has thus graciously adopted us. Let us, as dutiful children of so kind a Father, offer freely of that service which He requires for our good. It is one thing we see to be Abraham's seed; another to be Abraham's children. It is one thing to be born of God in baptism; it is another to grow up, as our new birth both enables and requires us, "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Eph. 4. 13. To be born anew must needs come first, must needs come before we can live anew. But neither can take place without God's grace helping us. And what can the one profit us without the other? Oh, may we live as we have been born, children of God! Oh, may we be in death, what we have been made in life, heirs of God, joint heirs with Christ, inheritors of the kingdom of heaven!

Christ is accused of having an evil spirit.

42 Jesus said unto them, If God were your Father, ye would love me: for I proceeded forth and came from God; neither came I of myself, but he sent me.

43 Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word.

44 'Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it.

45 And because I tell you the truth, ye believe me not.

46 Which of you convinceth me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?

47 'He that is of God heareth God's words: ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God.

48 Then answered the Jews, and said unto him, Say we not well that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a devil?

49 Jesus answered, I have not a devil; but I honour my Father, and ye do dishonour me.

50 And I seek not mine own glory: there is one that seeketh and judgeth.

51 Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death.

¹ 1 John 3. 8.

² 1 John 4. 6.

§ 309. What it is not to see death.

The Jews had been boasting that they had one Father, even God, when Jesus made this reply: "If God were your Father, ye would love me." This is also our character; if we were truly sons of God, we should love Jesus Christ. And we all know that to love Him implies the keeping of his commandments. See ch. 14. 21. But let us never forget that it implies more than the keeping them: even the keeping them with pleasure, the having delight in keeping them. This is to love our Lord. And such love as this it is that makes us to be the sons of God. For this is one chief difference between the obedience of servants and of sons: the one service is often done through fear or interest, negligently, ignorantly, unwillingly; the other is done with pleasure, and therefore is done well, is done freely, zealously, thankfully.

And this doctrine of the necessity of our loving God is so plain, that nothing but a determination not to hear the words of Christ can hinder a man from thoroughly understanding it. "Why do ye not understand my speech? even because ye cannot hear my word." To this severe reproof our Lord further adds: "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." This shews us how largely Satan is concerned in all iniquity and impiety of mankind. This should lead us, whenever evil thoughts arise, to consider them as suggested by an enemy, by one who is both a liar and a murderer. False are all the pleas he whispers, in order to encourage us in sin. Fatal to our soul's health, fatal to our hope of everlasting life, are the doubts which he endeavours to nourish in our hearts, the prejudices against receiving the word of Christ which he continually endeavours to establish, or confirm. Never let us believe the evil spirit, however agreeable to our corrupted will may be the thoughts which he would encourage in our minds. Never let us, like the Jews here censured by our Lord, be unwilling to believe his heavenly words, because they contain unwelcome truth.

And observe how it is that we may have grace to hear God's words. It comes of God moving us to hear. "He that is of God heareth God's words;" he to whom it is given of God. By his gift it is that we are willing to hear, able to understand, or stedfast to obey. And this we should continually bear in mind; this we should be ever ready to confess; learning, from the example of our Lord Himself, in all things to honour the Father. For nothing is further from the spirit of the Gospel, than that in any thing we should seek our own glory, especially in our religious proficiency. "There is one that seeketh and judgeth." There is one, namely the Father, who requires that men should honour Him, and who will judge them that honour Him not. Let us remember that it is his revealed will, "that all men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father." Ch. 5. 23. Let us honour Him, by obeying his Son's words. Let us honour Him, by taking the more pains ourselves to strive, in proportion as we are persuaded that our success must be his gift.

And now see how great is the gift, to hear God's words; to hear them in such sort as to keep them. Are not Christ's words God's words? And has not Christ here said of his own words, "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death?" What a fearful sight is this to be spared! Even the last enemy that shall be destroyed! That enemy, if we do but keep Christ's saying, we shall never see. We shall have no view of his horrors. We shall have no fearful apprehension of his coming. We shall see in him not an enemy but a friend. He will indeed make the eyes to close, the breath to cease, the pulse no more to beat. But in them that die in the Lord, and these are they that keep Christ's saying, death cannot make the soul to fear, death cannot make the heart to cease from love. Death can take us from this world of woe; but he cannot stay us from entering into the joys of eternity. Death can take us from lands and houses, from friends and much loved relations; but he cannot hinder us from attaining unto treasure in heaven, or from being joined to the company of just men made perfect. And in the moment of departure he cannot hinder us from seeing, not his terrors, but the mercy of the Lord; he cannot hinder us at that moment from being finally assured that we shall not perish everlastingly.

Christ declareth himself to be before Abraham.

52 Then said the Jews unto him, Now we know that thou hast a devil. Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death.

53 Art thou greater than our father Abraham, which is dead? and the prophets are dead: whom makest thou thyself?

54 Jesus answered, If I honour myself, my honour is nothing: it is my Father that honoureth me; of whom ye say, that he is your God:

55 Yet ye have not known him; but I know him:

and if I should say, I know him not, I shall be a liar like unto you: but I know him, and keep his saying.

56 Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad.

57 Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?

58 Jesus said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am.

59 Then took they up stones to cast at him: but Jesus hid himself, and went out of the temple, going through the midst of them, and so passed by.

310. The human sufferings and divine nature of Christ.

The Jews supposed our Lord to be possessed of an evil spirit, because He assured them that whosoever would keep his saying, should never "see death," v. 51; or, as they here interpret it, should never "taste of death." This they saw clearly was making Himself to be greater than their father Abraham; for if this were true of those who should keep his saying, it must be true of Him who said it. And as Abraham and the prophets were dead, and many generations also who had heard their words, whom could our Lord mean to make Himself, they asked, if He made Himself greater than these greatest of men? "Jesus answered, If I honour myself, my honour is nothing: it is my Father that honoureth me; of whom ye say, that he is your God." That Father who in the beginning created all things, that Father who inflicted all the judgments, and vouchsafed all the mercies recorded in the Old Testament, He it is of whom our Lord here declares Himself to be the Son; He it is by whom Christ is honoured; He it is of whom Jesus here asserts, "I know him, and keep his saying." What assurance have we here that the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the very word and will of God! He both knew all that the Father would wish revealed, and kept exactly to the tenour of it! What a forcible motive also is here suggested towards keeping God's sayings! The Father will in like manner honour every son, who keeps his saying, who obeys his will.

But Christ would not have the Jews to be ignorant as to whom He meant to make Himself. He adds, therefore, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad." This may mean, besides Abraham's seeing the day of Christ by faith, that he saw Christ in that divine person, who appeared to him, as the angel of the covenant that was made with him. For it led the Jews to reason, and our Lord seems to have meant them so to do, that Abraham must have actually seen Him face to face. It led them to answer with astonishment, "Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?" Not fifty years old; thus the Jews described Him from his appearance. Thus He seemed to them to be approaching towards fifty years of age, when in truth we know that He was at this time not thirty three. So literally was fulfilled in his outward bearing what Isaiah had beforehand written: "As many were astonished at thee; his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men." Isai. 52. 14.

Jesus said unto them, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I am." Here He declares openly the great truth, to which his words had already pointed. He whom they saw in fashion as a man; He who as a man was of lowly birth, "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," Isai. 53. 3; He against whom they took up stones to cast, and who hid Himself, in order to escape their malice; He was, and is, and is to be, before the prophets, before Abraham, before the world began, and when the world shall be no more. Marvellously did He conceal his glory, and hide as it were the majesty of the godhead under the veil of mortal flesh. Marvellously was the conviction of his divine nature resisted by the Jews, who heard his words, and saw his works. But let not us, to whom this truth is graciously revealed, let not us receive it with ingrateful hearts. Let not us, Lord, cast at Thee the stones of unbelief or disobedience, of sinful sin, or cold neglect of duty! Hide not, Lord, thyself from us! But dwell by thy Spirit in our hearts as in thy temple! Make us to rejoice that we see thy day; to see it, and be glad! Oh, who would not be glad, that sees with the eye of faith the day of Christ's first appearing, the day when angels sang from heaven, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill towards men?" Luke 2. 14. Who would not be glad, that looks with hope for his second coming, that hopes to meet the Lord in glory, in the day when He shall say "unto them on his right hand: Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world?" Matt. 25. 34. Who would not be glad that thus might never taste of death? Who would not be glad, that thus might live with Christ for ever?

Christ giveth sight to a man that was born blind.

1 And as Jesus passed by, he saw a man which was blind from his birth.

2 And his disciples asked him, saying, Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?

3 Jesus answered, Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him.

4 I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh, when no man can work.

5 As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world.

6 When he had thus spoken, he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay,

7 And said unto him, Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, (which is by interpretation, Sent.) He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing.

8 The neighbours therefore, and they which before had seen him that he was blind, said, Is not this he that sat and begged?

9 Some said, This is he: others said, He is like him: but he said, I am he.

10 Therefore said they unto him, How were thine eyes opened?

11 He answered and said, A man that is called Jesus made clay, and anointed mine eyes, and said unto me, Go to the pool of Siloam, and wash: and I went and washed, and I received sight.

12 Then said they unto him, Where is he? He said, I know not.

¹ Ch. 1. 9.

|| Or, spread the clay upon the eyes of the blind man.

§ 311. How great a marvel is conversion unto Christ.

The blindness of the man, whose case is here related, was not intended, as the Jews supposed, for a punishment of sin, either in himself or in his parents, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents." Not for his or their sins in particular did this blindness come to pass. "But that the works of God should be made manifest in him." This man came into the world in this condition, in consequence of the fall of all mankind, in token of the sinfulness of human nature, and in readiness to be an instance of that miraculous healing which God will now work by my hands. And here in he is a sign of that enlightening of the soul, which is the true giving of sight to the blind. For that this miracle may be thus spiritually interpreted, is evident, from its being thus applied by our Lord Himself, at the end of this chapter, saying, "If ye were blind, ye should have no sin; but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth." Ver. 41.

First however of the blindness of the eyes, and of its not having been inflicted as a judgment for any particular sin in the sufferer. This sentence of our Lord's should check in us those hasty conclusions which we are apt to form, against those who are visited with very severe affliction. Rather let us consider all the ills we see, as the result of our common sinfulness. Let us note how they are permitted only for our common good. Let us view them as the trial of our faith and patience, if it please God that we suffer thus ourselves. If it be his will that we behold rather his visitations in our neighbours, let it stir up in us greater zeal for his honour, and greater concern for their welfare. Let us, like our Lord, give all diligence to work the works of Him that sent us hither. Let us labour to relieve want, to assuage pain, to console sorrow, to help infirmity. Let us overcome the evil that is in the world, with the good that is in the church. Let us make it come to pass, that the suffering which is in the world through sin, shall be less prominent than the comfort which is in the church through grace. And as "the night cometh when no man can work," let us lose no hour whilst it is yet to day, for making to shine "the light of the world," by the evidence of Christ working in our hearts true affection for all our fellow creatures. Such love would make us anxious above all things to administer to their spiritual necessities. "Go, wash in the pool of Siloam, (which is by interpretation, Sent.)" This is nearly the same as the meaning of the name Shiloh, by which our Lord is described by the patriarch. Gen. 49. 10. And these words may therefore well turn our thoughts to the fountain of our Saviour's blood. To this pool of Siloam we may well apply the words of the prophet, "Wash, and be clean." 2 Kings 5. 13. To this we may come, and invite others, when we are made aware of being blind; and wash, and go away seeing.

And now observe what a stir was made among the neighbours by this recovery of sight to the blind. At first they doubted among themselves whether it could be possibly the same man, so great was the change made in him by the miracle. "Some said, This is he; others said, He is like him; but he said, I am he." And is there not at least as much to marvel at, in that change of life from sin to holiness, which is sure to come with conversion of heart? And ought we not much more, in such a case, to give God the glory, through whose grace this great work is wrought? And might we not, in all the sin we see around us, thus rejoice to think that God's work may be made manifest? that good may be made to triumph over evil? For what is the seeing after being blind, compared with believing after sinful unbelief? What is to have become sensible of the outward world, to discern sun and moon and earth, houses and trees and water; what is this compared with knowledge of things heavenly, in a soul from which they have before been hidden? what compared with the hope of salvation, instead of a fearful looking for of endless misery?

God make us to rejoice in witnessing this change in others! God make us eager to have it wrought, thankful to have had it wrought, within ourselves!

The man that was made to see is brought before the Pharisees.

13 They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind.

14 And it was the sabbath day when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes.

15 Then again the Pharisees also asked him how he had received his sight. He said unto them, He put clay upon mine eyes, and I washed, and do see.

16 Therefore said some of the Pharisees, This man is not of God, because he keepeth not the sabbath day. Others said, How can a man that is a sinner do such miracles? And there was a division among them.

17 They say unto the blind man again, What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes? He said, He is a prophet.

18 But the Jews did not believe concerning him, that he had been blind, and received his sight, until they called the parents of him that had received his sight.

19 And they asked them, saying, Is this your son, who ye say was born blind? how then doth he now see?

20 His parents answered them and said, We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind:

21 But by what means he now seeth, we know not; or who hath opened his eyes, we know not: he is of age; ask him: he shall speak for himself.

22 These words spake his parents, because they feared the Jews: for the Jews had agreed already, that if any man did confess that he was Christ, he should be put out of the synagogue.

23 Therefore said his parents, He is of age; ask him.

§ 312. That we must be ready to speak for each other.

We have here further particulars of what happened to the man born blind, whom our Lord had made to see. "They brought to the Pharisees him that aforetime was blind." This might have been done by friends, in order to convince them of the miracle. Or it may have been done by enemies of Christ, in order to bring Him into trouble. For the Pharisees were very jealous of any work being done on the sabbath day, whether good or evil. "And it was the sabbath day, when Jesus made the clay, and opened his eyes." In many cases it seems as if our Lord had preferred that day, for his works of mercy. And in this He probably designed to teach us, that to do good is a fit employment of the Christian sabbath. Let us endeavour that it may become amongst us a day for recovering of sight to the blind. Let it be a day in which we labour to get knowledge of things heavenly; in which we help, according to our ability, to impart of what little we know ourselves, unto those who know still less.

The Pharisees, before whom the blind man was brought, were unwilling to believe the miracle. Some objected that Jesus must be a sinner, because He observed not, as they required, the sabbath day. Others allowed that no sinner could do so great a miracle. And yet these probably doubted whether the miracle had been done. For they must be reckoned among those who did not believe that the man had been born blind.
 was a division among

Would that this were never the case with those also who profess to hold the truth and love it! Would that this were never the case with the friends, as well as with the enemies, of the Gospel! Would that this were never the case amongst those who are members of the same outward visible communion! Much need we all have to remember that a house divided against itself cannot stand; See Mark 3. 25; that a church so divided cannot prosper. Nor is it otherwise with each single family. In order to prosper in our spiritual proficiency, nothing is more helpful than for all to be of one mind, all united in one work and labour of love, to do all the good we can to each other, and by each other's help, to all mankind.

"What sayest thou of him, that he hath opened thine eyes?" This is what the Jews asked the man who had been blind. What opinion has this wrought in thee? "He said, He is a prophet;" meaning, some one sent from God, divinely inspired, authorized by these signs and wonders, to teach the will of God to man. This was far from the answer they desired. So they next sent for the parents, in the hope of making out that the man had not really been born blind. Their unwillingness to believe has thus furnished us with the best of all testimony to the fact. And this has been the case with objectors to the Gospel in all ages. They have themselves furnished testimony to the genuineness of the Scriptures. For if it were not for such objections, no such great care would continually be taken to preserve all the necessary proofs. Thus the parents here expressly testify; "We know that this is our son, and that he was born blind." On this point they could not be mistaken. On this they were not afraid to answer truly.

But further they were unwilling to answer; observing prudently, that their son was of age to speak for himself. Prudently they thus replied, as the world reckons prudence; which is to secure one's self, at all risk of harm to others. But it would ill become a Christian parent thus to shift the danger on a son. It would ill become any Christian thus to shift any evil on his neighbour. Let us speak for each other freely, whensoever by so speaking we can help each other, or save each other from risk or harm. Let us speak for each other, and suffer for each other; even as Christ has spoken in our behalf, even as He has borne for us not only risk and suffering, but a most painful death.

The Pharisees further examine the man that had been blind.

24 Then again called they the man that was blind, and said unto him, Give God the praise: we know that this man is a sinner.

25 He answered and said, Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not: one thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.

26 Then said they to him again, What did he to thee? how opened he thine eyes?

27 He answered them, I have told you already, and ye did not hear: wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye also be his disciples?

28 Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple; but we are Moses' disciples.

29 We know that God spake unto Moses: as for this fellow, we know not from whence he is.

30 The man answered and said unto them, Why herein is a marvellous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened mine eyes.

31 Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth.

32 Since the world began was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind.

33 If this man were not of God, he could do nothing.

34 They answered and said unto him, Thou wast altogether born in sins, and dost thou teach us? And they || cast him out.

|| Or, excommunicated him.

§ 313. The right means of conviction.

How anxious are the Pharisees to perplex this poor man that had been blind, and to explain away the miracle of his obtaining his sight! How diligent are the wicked in evil doing! how slothful in well doing are they that labour after good! But how great is the advantage which truth gives, even to one that had hitherto been blind, against the most sharp-sighted of his questioners! All things which he sees around him are new to his awakened sense. The council chamber where the Jewish rulers are assembled, their state, their dress, their countenances, all these things now almost for the first time seen, how powerfully must they work upon his mind, how greatly tend to fill him with awe and confusion! Yet, in reply to their repeated assertion that Jesus was a sinner, he repeated the great fact which could not be denied: "whereas I was blind, now I see."

Facts then are the best proof of principles. What a man does is the most sure sign of what he is. Or, as St. John expresses it in his first epistle, "He that doeth righteousness is righteous." 1 John 3. 7. Nor must any pretence of giving God the praise prevent us from acknowledging with thankfulness the benefits which we receive from our fellow-creatures. Though we are as sure that they are sinners as that Christ was righteous, if yet they have helped us either to see, to know, or to enjoy, it would be the height of hypocrisy to withhold from them the praise we owe, on the ground of giving to God all the glory. The true way to praise God is to be at once thankful unto Him, and to those whom He has moved to be kind and useful. Without Him they could do no one good thing. And whilst for every thing that is good we give thanks to Him, we must give each other also credit for being influenced by the love of Him, in all the benefits and kindnesses we see conferred.

When the Jews repeated their question, now Christ had made the blind man see, he answered them, "I have told you already, and ye did not hear; wherefore would ye hear it again? will ye also be his disciples?" This he asked perhaps in earnest, thinking from their many questions that they wished to become acquainted with the truth. They however were affronted at the supposition. "Then they reviled him, and said, Thou art his disciple; but we are Moses' disciples." Thus some also amongst professing Christians would be affronted at being taken for disciples indeed; would be sorry that it should be thought that they inquire into truth, with a view to the saving of their souls. So easily are men ashamed before each other! so fearless of that disgrace which awaits them before God! so forgetful of what He long ago has said by the prophet; "Them that honour me I will honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed!" 1 Sam. 2. 30.

And see now how out of the mouth of this blind man God could direct against the Pharisees a profitable reproof! See how utterly unable they were to reply by reason to the argument he so forcibly urged, that if Jesus were not of God, He could not have opened the eyes of one born blind! All they could say was to revile the man that had been blind, and to reproach him with his infirmity, now so happily removed. All they could do was to persecute him wrongfully, unjustly to cast him out from their communion. In what a hateful light does this history represent the practice of persecution, when applied instead of the convictions of reason, whether to the furtherance of error, or of truth! Let us resolve that we will never use interest or force, when we ought to use persuasion or the power of example. By words of gentleness, and arguments of truth, let us appeal to the consciences of those who differ from us; and by these means not seek to cast them out, but, if possible, compel them to come in. For we may often take a lesson in point of zeal, from those who are active in doing evil. The diligence which is shewn in the gainsaying of the Gospel may teach us how we should be diligent in upholding it. And the eagerness with which men cast out of their society those who are a reproof to their evil deeds, should move in us like eagerness to join unto our company all from whom we may derive edification, or who might derive edification from us.

Christ reproveth the Pharisees.

35 Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?

36 He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?

37 And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee.

38 And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him.

39 And Jesus said, for judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind.

40 And some of the Pharisees which were with him heard these words, and said unto him, Are we blind also?

41 Jesus said unto them, If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth.

§ 314. To say we see aggravates our sin.

When the Jews could not prevail upon the man that had been blind in any way to underrate the mercy he had received, or to deny the Lord who had wrought his cure, "they cast him out;" rejected him from their synagogue, from their religious communion, as a church. But "Jesus heard that they had cast him out." And for the sufferer, what greater consolation could there be than thus to be kindly sought for and noticed by his Lord? Let us remember, for our support, if in any matter we are persecuted for conscience sake, Jesus hears of it. He hears of it; and if He hear that we bear our wrongs with meekness, and requite our injuries with prayer, He will find us, and give us comfort in our sorrows, even help, and peace, and safety. But on the other hand, let us also be aware, that if we proudly imagine ourselves to be wronged, when in truth we meet with no worse than we deserve; if we fret, and repine, and murmur, and magnify to ourselves the evils we endure; Jesus hears of it. He knows our pride and perversity of heart; and for the trouble which these bring upon our heads, we must expect no consolation at his hands.

And here observe the kind of comfort which our Lord offered, to one who had really suffered in his behalf. "When he had found him." Behold then He of Himself sought him out! Behold how in this instance were fulfilled the words of the prophet; "I am found of them that sought me not." Isai. 65. 1. "When he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" And when the man expressed his willingness to believe, if he but knew whom, our Lord explained Himself by saying, "It is he that talketh with thee. And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him." The most sweet then of all consolation is to have true faith in the Son of God imparted to us. The best of all resources in our afflictions, is to exercise our souls in devotion to our Lord. To believe, and to worship Him; these are things which we can do, these are gifts which we can enjoy, whether cast out or allowed our place in society, whether despised or respected, whether persecuted or cherished by mankind. And if we freely exercise these gifts, if we largely partake of these graces, how deeply shall we feel that all "the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us!" Rom. 8. 18. How greatly shall we rejoice to think, that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory!" 2 Cor. 4. 17.

And now let us lay to heart the solemn sentence, with which our Lord reproves the whole conduct of the Jewish council, in their treatment of this man, whose eyes He had opened. "For judgment I am come into this world, that they which see not might see; and that they which see might be made blind." As the man in question had been privileged to receive his eyesight, so would many be recovered by Christ's coming, from spiritual darkness to spiritual light. Whilst on the contrary, many who like the Pharisees had all their senses perfect, and conceived themselves also to have knowledge more excellent than their brethren, these would become blind, these would, for their pride and obstinacy, be given up to spiritual blindness, to an incapacity for seeing and knowing what Christ has revealed in the Gospel. The Pharisees easily understood that these words were directed against themselves. If amongst us there be any whom they might serve to reprove, may we have grace to understand and to apply them! May we consider, whilst we yet have time, how much greater is the sin of those who say they see, how much greater, and how much more abiding! "Now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth." For how can it help remaining if we repent not? And how can we repent, if we are not conscious of transgression, not aware that so far as we are without God's grace, we are blind in all things spiritual? Ignorance, when unavoidable, is some excuse for sin. But if we boast of being well informed, we stand condemned out of our own mouths.

Never let us proudly say, We see; but humbly own, that in respect of God, we are no better than born blind; and humbly pray, that for the sake of Jesus Christ, it will please Him to give us sight.

Christ is the door of the sheep, and the shepherd of the sheep.

1 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.

2 But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep.

3 To him the porter openeth; and the sheep hear his voice: and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out.

4 And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice.

5 And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him: for they know not the voice of strangers.

6 This parable spake Jesus unto them: but they understood not what things they were which he spake unto them.

7 Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep.

8 All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them.

9 I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

10 The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.

§ 315. The fruits of coming unto God through Christ.

Every word spoken by Jesus Christ must be certain truth. When therefore He adds to what He says, such words as, "Verily, verily," we may conclude that the truth spoken is one which requires more than common attention, or one which was likely to meet with more than common unbelief. Twice does our Lord use this expression in the parable of the sheepfold. Let us therefore give to this subject most earnest heed. Let us take more pains than ever, both to know and to believe what is here revealed for our instruction.

The parable seems to refer to the case of sheep put for a time into a strange sheepfold, as for instance, when brought to market, or when prepared for sacrifice in the temple. The porter means the person who was put in charge of them by the owner, and who was ready to deliver them at the door, whenever the owner should require it. A thief or robber would enter in some other way, and not by the door. And as for the stranger, though he should enter by the door, the sheep would not follow him; "for they know not the voice of strangers." This is usually the case with dumb animals, that they can distinguish those who have the care of them. And this distinction would be still more remarkable in a country, where it was the practice, as in Judaea and throughout the East, for the shepherd not to drive his sheep, but to go first whilst they followed him.

This parable our Lord applies to Himself in two ways: first, He likens Himself to the door of the sheepfold; and next to the shepherd of the sheep, as opposed to thieves and robbers. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep." Christ is the way by which alone we can find admission into the kingdom of heaven. We might labour all our life long by other means in vain; as much in vain as sheep striving to go in or out at any other part, whilst this way is made on purpose for their use. "I am the door of the sheep." Christ is the way of life to Christians. In Christ they must put their trust, in Christ, and in his death. By his word they must guide their thoughts and words and works. Not by any method of their own devising must they hope to obtain salvation, but only by the door opened to them in Jesus Christ. "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." As sheep by entering in at the door, are protected in the fold, protected both from thieves and from the wild beasts, which in Judaea used to infest the flocks; so Christians who walk by faith in Christ, are guarded against the assaults of their spiritual foe, that foe who desires to steal away their souls, who "as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." 1 Pet. 5. 8. And as sheep through the door are led to pasture, so Christians by means of Christ, and by the grace which He has revealed, are strengthened and refreshed, "filled with the fruits of righteousness," Phil. 1. 11, "filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. 3. 19. If then we have heretofore in many things erred and strayed like lost sheep, from the fold of Almighty God, let us return by the way which He has pointed out, into the arms of his parental love.

But, secondly, our Lord here shews that He is the Shepherd of the sheep, as opposed to thieves and robbers. "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them." And again, "the thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." False teachers have abounded in the world, both before and after our Saviour's coming. Such were they who taught the heathen to profess themselves to be wise, whereby they became fools. See Rom. 1. 22. Such were Theudas and Judas, spoken of in the Acts of the Apostles, 5. 36, 37, as having drawn after them much people. Such are the pretenders to inspiration, who in our own times often delude the unstable and unwary. But the end of all such teaching as this is death. Whilst the fruit of the teaching of Jesus Christ is that we both have life, and have it more abundantly. Here we have grace, and hereafter heaven. Here we have all needful for our protection and support, and hereafter more than we can now conceive, more than we can now desire.

Christ is the good Shepherd.

11 'I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

12 But he that is an hireling, and not the shepherd, whose own the sheep are not, seeth the wolf coming, and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth: and the wolf catcheth them, and scattereth the sheep.

13 The hireling fleeth, because he is an hireling, and careth not for the sheep.

14 I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine.

15 As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father: and I lay down my life for the sheep.

16 And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; ²and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd.

17 Therefore doth my Father love me, ³because I lay down my life, that I might take it again.

18 No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. ⁴This commandment have I received of my Father.

¹ Isa. 40, 11. Ezek. 34, 23.

² Ezek. 37, 22.

³ Isa. 53, 7, 8.

⁴ Acts 2, 24.

§ 316. Unity in Religion.

From the account which has before been given of the sheepfold, our Lord here draws another description of Himself; "I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." This was the case frequently in a country, where the sheep were liable to the encounter of wild beasts, and where the shepherd must either fly or expose himself to death. In such a case a hireling would be sure to run away. One who served for hire and for hire only, one who had no due regard for the interest of his employer, no concern in his own heart for the safety of the sheep, would fly away upon seeing the wolf approach. This is one "whose own the sheep are not." This is such an one as often must occur amongst those pastors who are in the place of Christ; and who, though charged with the ministry of the Holy Spirit, are still subject to the infirmities of sinful men. For it is the feeling as if the sheep belonged to him, it is the feeling the same interest in the sheep, in his master's behalf, as if they were his own, this alone can induce a man to defend them from danger of the enemy, at all risk of harm to himself.

This then is the case of Christ and his sheep. "I know," saith He, "my sheep, and am known of mine." They are his, for He has purchased them to Himself, by his own blood. They are his; for in order, that they might be his, He has laid down his life for them! This is the love which our Shepherd has had for us! What then should be the love we feel for Him! Thus has He cared for us! How ought we most deeply to care for Him! How ought we to listen to his voice, to follow Him, to walk in the ways which He has set before us, to know Him, to know Him for our Shepherd, and to know ourselves for the sheep of his pasture! And how, above all, ought we, as his sheep, to labour for that object which He here proposes, that as there is one Shepherd, so there should be one fold!

It was of the Gentiles as distinguished from the Jews, that Christ here said, "other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." It is, to the heathen, aye, and to the Jews also, as distinct from the Christians, that we may still apply the same words of promise, for our encouragement in attempting their conversion. And would that Christians had no need first to apply this saying, to the distinctions which still prevail amongst themselves! Would that all, and especially preachers of the Gospel, felt how greatly it would help, if they could agree amongst each other, towards the world believing that Christ had sent them! See ch. 17. 18. Would that they who esteem themselves to be sheep of Christ, would endeavour without ceasing to be all of one fold! And if this seem to be impossible, let us remember that it is no more so, than that all should be honest, all sober, or all pure. In many things we must strive after that which is impossible, that we may reach as near to it as we possibly can. It is possible for more to be sober than we are now. It is possible for more than are now to be of one mind. It is possible for us all to be better agreed than we are now as to Christian truth, nearer to one communion, and more of us in one. Thus the thing for which we really strive is possible, even to be nearer than we are now to that unity of spirit, which is perhaps in this world unattainable.

And here we may see set forth, as an encouragement towards our union of heart and mind, that unity which subsists between the Father and the Son. For immediately, after saying that there should be one fold as there is one shepherd, our Lord adds: "Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life for the sheep." And this He says He did of Himself. And yet He tells us, that He received it as a commandment of the Father. Like to this is the great secret of unity among Christians; to do what is right of our own will, and yet at the same time to do it in deference to authority. It is to have our will thus conformed to the will of those who are thus set over us in the Lord, yea, to the will of Him whose ministers they are. It is to have liberty; and yet freely to choose subjection as better than licentiousness. It is to judge for ourselves; and yet to come to the conclusion, that it is best to judge in all things according to those commandments which we have received of God.

Christ at the feast of the dedication.

19 There was a division therefore again among the Jews for these sayings.

20 And many of them said, He hath a devil, and is mad; why hear ye him?

21 Others said, These are not the words of him that hath a devil. Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?

22 And it was at Jerusalem the 'feast of the dedication, and it was winter.

23 And Jesus walked in the temple in Solomon's porch.

24 Then came the Jews round about him, and said unto him, How long dost thou || make us to doubt? If thou be the Christ, tell us plainly.

25 Jesus answered them, I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me.

26 But ye believe not, because ye are not of my sheep, as I said unto you.

27 My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me:

28 And I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.

29 My Father, which gave them me, is greater than all; and no man is able to pluck them out of my Father's hand.

30 I and my Father are one.

¹ 1 Mac. 4. 59.

|| Or, hold us in suspense?

§ 317. The unity of the Father and the Son.

The division among the Jews at the sayings of our Lord may suggest to us this useful reflection as to differences in religious opinion; namely, that such differences, however numerous, however wide, however widely spread abroad amongst mankind, should not make us apprehend that there is either uncertainty or obscurity in the truths disputed. Here is a case of dispute in which all are now agreed as to the force of one argument, and the folly of the other. "Can a devil open the eyes of the blind?" is an argument which seems to be unanswerable. Its force was no less cogent in the days when there were so many who saw the miracles of Jesus, and yet concluded "He hath a devil, and is mad." Thus it is in many matters, whether of doctrine or of practice, which are disputed in the present generation. The right is as distinct from the wrong, the truth is as far apart from falsehood; though we cannot agree as to which is which. It has been a thing perhaps undisputed in the primitive church; or it will be seen clearly perhaps hereafter amongst ourselves. It might therefore be seen now by us; if only we would search for it without prejudice or passion, with diligence, and zeal, and love.

And this active search for truth, this charitable allowance for error, this union of eagerness to be right, with compassion for them that are out of the way, these appear to be the very duties which God does in this matter require at our hands, the very good which it is his pleasure to promote, out of the prevalence of all those evil dissensions, which have been permitted in the Christian community. For thus it was in the time of our Lord's appearance upon the earth. The Jews would gladly have had Jesus tell them, whether He were indeed the Christ. But He chose rather to teach them, by a way which should put to task their diligence in inquiry, their charitable forbearance with the convictions of each other, and their patient submission to each other's persecution. "I told you, and ye believed not: the works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me." That is to say, He had before provided an answer to this question, by appealing to his miracles, and to all the circumstances of his life, for proof that He was the Christ. See ch. 5. 36. And this was a proof which required both pains and good will on their part, for them to be convinced by it. And because they were not ~~thus~~ his sheep, therefore they believed not. For his sheep, as He had before described them, were such as heard his voice, and were known by Him, and were apt to follow Him.

See how urgent is the necessity of our obeying our Lord; even as necessary this is, as that we should be known of Him! And see how great is the advantage of thus preferring light to darkness, thus choosing with all the will we have, to follow Christ! "I give unto them eternal life." This is what Christ gives to such sheep as these. "And they shall never perish." Though they die, they shall not die eternally. No one, neither man nor evil spirit, shall prevail to pluck them out of the hand of Christ. No one shall pluck them out of the Father's hand. The Father and Christ are one. This lies at the very foundation of our Christian hopes. The Father which has given us to Christ is greater than all; so that He can compass all that He desires. And the Father and Christ are One; so that what Christ desires, the Father doeth. It is not the will of the Father that any of his sheep should perish. And it has been the object of Christ in dying for the sheep, that they should all live for ever. The Father and Christ are one. They are one God. They are One in power, and in majesty, and glory. They are one in wisdom, One in greatness, One in goodness. They are One in settled purpose to save mankind through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus. They are One with each other, and One with the Holy Ghost, which proceedeth from the Father and the Son. Oh, never may we feel to adore these three in One! Never may we cease to hold fast by the profession of this truth once delivered to the saints! Never may we refuse in this or in any other divine truth, to hear the voice of the great Shepherd of our souls, to know as we are known of Him, and to follow as He has led the way!

Christ answereth the Jews who would have stoned Him.

31 Then the Jews took up stones again to stone him.

32 Jesus answered them, Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?

33 The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God.

34 Jesus answered them, ¹Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods?

35 If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the scripture cannot be broken;

36 Say ye of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God?

37 If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not.

38 But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him.

39 Therefore they sought again to take him: but he escaped out of their hand,

40 And went away again beyond Jordan into the place where John at first baptized; and there he abode.

41 And many resorted unto him, and said, John did no miracle: but all things that John spake of this man were true.

42 And many believed on him there.

¹ Ps. 82. 6.

§ 318. That we must believe in Christ as God.

When our Lord had given a true answer to the inquiry of the Jews, they "took up stones again to stone him." But as they opposed the truth by violence, so He met their violence with gentleness, and with reasonable remonstrance. "Many good works have I shewed you from my Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?" It was from the Father then that the works of Christ proceeded. And yet it was Christ Himself who shewed them, who wrought them among the Jews. And this must be true in like manner of these good works of ours, which it is our duty to make manifest to all beholders. They must be our own doing. And they must be wrought in us by the working of God's Holy Spirit. Our hands must do that which is good, our lips must speak, our hearts must think, as Christ has ordered. And yet not we, but Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith; not we, but the Father which is with us; not we, but the Holy Spirit which helpeth our infirmities; He it is, even God, which giveth all good gifts, which doeth all good deeds. Unto Him be all the praise and glory!

The Jews, by way of defending themselves, replied, "For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God." This shews how the Jews interpreted our Lord's saying, "I and my Father are one." Ver. 30. And now observe how He justified his expression; first reasoning with them according to their own notions, and afterwards setting forth the full evidence of the truth. According to their own notions, if at least they well remembered the words of their own Scriptures, they might have borne with Him, if He had applied the name of God to some one else, besides the eternal Father. For thus it was written in the Psalms, 82. 6. "I said, Ye are gods:" in which case the name appears to have been applied to those who should "die like men, and fall like one of the princes." Ps. 82. 7. Much more, our Lord argues, might He whom the Father had sanctified, and sent into the world, take to Himself this name without offence to the Jews.

But further, He laid claim to the appellation on far higher ground, than they could to whom it was given in the Psalms. He gave proof by his works of his being in the Father, and the Father in Him. Thus He again asserted his divine nature. "If I do not the works of my Father, believe me not. But if I do, though ye believe not me, believe the works: that ye may know, and believe, that the Father is in me, and I in him." How suitably may we hereupon reflect for ourselves, that if we would be taken for real Christians, if we would have our character for faithfulness made profitable for the conviction of our neighbours, we must do the works of God, we must do the works which Christ has revealed from the Father, on purpose for us to walk therein. And for the same object, out of a desire to be more useful in our generation to the cause we have in hand, we are here instructed by the example of our Lord, that we must avoid rather than court the persecution of the ungodly. The truth we must not fear to tell, the whole truth we must at all risks boldly profess; the whole truth as it is in Jesus. See Eph. 4. 21. But if in doing so we give offence, let us escape, if it be possible, from the wrath of the offended. Let us save from their malice, whether it be our life, or character, or property, that they attack: let us save whatever may serve to give us salutary influence in helping to make others believe. For this is an object worth all our risk and all our care; this as a duty is one of the first we have in this world to discharge, the making men to glorify our Father, which is in heaven.

God give us grace that we may ourselves believe, and that we may help to forward the salvation of our brethren! God help us to uphold our faith in Christ, that He is One with the Father, and One with the Holy Ghost! God make us to shew forth the true faith by a holy practice! and to do always through the Spirit the works of the Father, in proof that we are believers in the Son!

Christ heareth of Lazarus being sick.

1 Now a certain man was sick, named Lazarus, of Bethany, the town of Mary and her sister Martha.

2 ('It was that Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whose brother Lazarus was sick.)

3 Therefore his sister sent unto him, saying, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick.

4 When Jesus heard that, he said, This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby.

5 Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus.

6 When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days still in the same place where he was.

7 Then after that saith he to his disciples, Let us go into Judæa again.

8 His disciples say unto him, Master, the Jews of late sought to stone thee; and goest thou thither again?

9 Jesus answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world.

10 But if a man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him.

¹ Matt. 26. 7.

§ 319. That those whom God loves are often made to wait.

There can be little doubt that Lazarus, whose sickness is here mentioned, was one of our Lord's most faithful disciples. Else Martha and Mary would not have presumed to send this message in his behalf: "Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick." Here therefore we may take occasion to remark, that the best of men are liable, no less than the worst, to the visitation of severe disease. And this should serve to restrain in our thoughts, any reflection on those who suffer from grievous sickness, as if this were a signal judgment from the Almighty upon the sins of the persons suffering. And also it should help to convince us, that God has in store for those whom He chiefly loves, and these are they who most love Him, a world where all such evils shall be more than made up for; where for them which shall be saved, through Jesus Christ, there shall be no sickness, no suffering, no weariness, no woe. Glad then we should be to be sick with Lazarus, if Christ will but give us health; thankful to suffer with our Lord Himself, if with Him we may safely trust that we shall be "also glorified together." Rom. 8. 17.

Lazarus is very particularly described, both by the town where he resided, and by his sisters; of whom one became particularly notable by the anointing of the feet of Jesus. See ch. 12. 3. This exact description was the more important in so signal a miracle, as this following, in order that every one might be better certified by inquiry, among the friends and neighbours of him that was recovered. And further, not only is Lazarus described to our Lord as "he whom thou lovest," but St. John adds in confirmation of this account, "Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus." So that there could be no doubt about the whole family being the one to which our Lord often resorted, as it was also one which He had enlightened by his teaching, honoured by his presence, and which He was now about to comfort in affliction, by the most gracious and abundant help.

Immediately after the mention of Jesus loving Lazarus, it is added, "When he had heard therefore that he was sick, he abode two days still in the same place where he was." He loves, and yet He stays away. He stays away two whole days, from the friend whom He loves, when that friend was sick. See then here how it is consistent with God's loving us, for Him not at once to grant our petitions; even those which we put up with faith most earnest, with desire most sincere. He may be loving us most entirely, as Christ loved Lazarus, and yet not at once think fit to heal the sickness we deplore, to give us the health we pray for. He may love us, as Christ loved Martha and Mary, and yet take from us the friend we most esteem, the brother whom we most affectionately regard. He may love us, and yet bar against our wishes the way we most long to enter, the life we most desired to lead. He may love us, and yet deprive us of the things we most enjoy, or refuse us the opportunity to do the good, which we think most needful to be done. Let us wait therefore always his good time; not doubting that He hears with kind regard all prayers, which are duly offered in our Saviour's name. And let us endeavour whilst we wait, so to wait with patience, so to pray with zeal, so to work with love, that our waiting may minister to the ends God has in view, his greater glory, and our own greater good.

Though Christ waited for a time beyond Jordan, where He received the news of Lazarus' sickness, He set forth in due season to go into Judæa again. And though his disciples reminded Him how the Jews sought to stone Him, He answered, "Are there not twelve hours in the day?" That is, are we not bound, when the proper time for any duty is arrived, to do it at all risk of inconvenience to ourselves? Let us walk then in the day; and according to the light which Christ has given us, let us work whilst it is called to day. And as he who walks forth in the sunshine is less likely to stumble, whilst he enjoys the light of this world, than he who ventures out in the dark; so shall we, if we undertake no enterprise, except under the direction of our blessed Lord, both better be kept from falling, and if we fall, be more sure to be lifted up.

Christ goeth to Bethany, where Lazarus is dead.

11 These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.

12 Then said his disciples, Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.

13 Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep.

14 Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead.

15 And I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe; nevertheless let us go unto him.

16 Then said Thomas, which is called Didymus, unto his fellow disciples, Let us also go, that we may die with him.

17 Then when Jesus came, he found that he had lain in the grave four days already.

18 Now Bethany was nigh unto Jerusalem, || about fifteen furlongs off:

19 And many of the Jews came to Martha and

|| That is, about two miles.

Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother.

20 Then Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met him: but Mary sat still in the house.

21 Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

22 But I know, that even now, whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee.

23 Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again.

24 Martha saith unto him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day.

25 Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:

26 And whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this?

27 She saith unto him, Yea, Lord: I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world.

¹ Luke 14. 14. ch. 5. 29.

² ch. 6. 35.

§ 320. Christ the resurrection and the life.

Our Lord speaks of the death of Lazarus as though it were sleep. And so He had said before of the ruler's daughter, whom He recovered from death, "The maid is not dead, but sleepeth." Matt. 9. 24. In both cases, He may have meant to imply, that the death under which they then suffered should last but for a short time, and that He would again awaken them to life. But in both cases we may consider that He further signified of death in general, that it is not the end of our existence; but only a change in our manner of living, a sleep as far as this world is concerned, an awakening of the soul into the world of eternity. "Our friend Lazarus, sleepeth." Death then cannot sever us from the love of Christ. In death we are still called his friends. In death we may still love and be beloved. In death therefore, though we sleep we live. Lord, when thus we sleep, may it be our happiness to rest in Thee! Lord, when like Lazarus we die, be Thou our Friend, and we shall live for ever!

When Jesus told the disciples plainly that Lazarus was dead, He added, "I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe." It seemed strange, that when Jesus heard that Lazarus whom He loved was sick, He should stay two whole days in the place where He then was. Ver. 6. Here we see that this was good for the disciples; it was helpful to the increase of their faith. If God gives not, or does not, at once what we expect of Him, not only is this consistent with his love for us, it may also be in furtherance of his designs for the good of our brethren. It may help in some manner, though we know not how, towards the increase of holiness and love amongst our neighbours; if our prayers for a time are not granted, if the health which we desire be for a time deferred. God hears, though He seems as though He heard not. Christ comes in due season to all who seek Him faithfully, He comes as to the grave of Lazarus, bringing life, and health, and salvation.

We learn from the words of Thomas, that this errand of our Lord was full of danger to Himself. This was by reason of the place being so near to Jerusalem, "about fifteen furlongs," nearly two miles off. Many Jews were also present at Bethany, who had come to Martha, and Mary, to comfort them concerning their brother. And these, though their intention to the sisters was kind, were likely to be full of enmity against Christ. So easy is it, so common amongst ourselves, for a man to be humane to his fellow creatures, and yet not to feel love towards his Saviour. It is well in our afflictions to have the sympathy of friends. But chiefly we should rejoice if the comfort which they offer be Christian consolation. And chiefly we should be comforted, if we may hope that He Himself is with us, He who is "the resurrection and the life."

What a name is this which our Lord here assumes; what a description which He here gives of Himself: "I am the resurrection, and the life!" This He says He is Himself. And so He had said before, "As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Ch. 5. 21. And who these are we here may learn: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." To believe then in Christ, this is to live. Believers, these are they whom He wills to quicken. And they who thus live, these shall never die. Let us each then ask ourselves this solemn question of our Lord: "Believest thou this?" Let us remember that as on our faith depends our practice, so there depends on it also, if it bring forth good fruit, no less than this, that we should never die.

Lord, we believe; help Thou our unbelief. See Mark 9. 24. Lord, we "believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world!" Make Thou our faith lively, that we may believe effectually! Make Thou our faith fruitful, that we may obey abundantly! That we may live by faith on earth, and through faith may, when we die, awake up in glory.

Christ weepeth.

28 And when she had so said, she went her way, and called Mary her sister secretly, saying, The Master is come, and calleth for thee.

29 As soon as she heard that, she arose quickly, and came unto him.

30 Now Jesus was not yet come into the town, but was in that place where Martha met him.

31 The Jews then which were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they saw Mary, that she rose up hastily and went out, followed her, saying, She goeth unto the grave to weep there.

32 Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died.

33 When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, † and was troubled,

34 And said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord come and see.

35 Jesus wept.

36 Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!

37 And some of them said, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?

† Gr. he troubled himself.

¹ ch. 9. 6.

§ 321. Christian tears.

On a previous occasion there appeared to be in Martha, as compared with Mary, some deficiency of interest in things spiritual. See Luke 10. 41, 42. Here we see how both, with equal zeal, or Martha, if there were any difference, with the most, pressed forward to meet Christ on his approach. So well had she profited by his previous admonition. So effectually had she learned from the divine Teacher, that one thing, and one only, is needful. Would that we also, in the meantime, since we read that important lesson, may have been inwardly digesting, and practically applying it! Would that we may have chosen, or even now may choose, the good part, which shall not be taken away from us! Would that whatever evil visits us, we may be ever forward, with either sister, to come to our blessed Lord for help!

“Then when Mary was come where Jesus was, and saw him, she fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not died.” By these words we see how great was Mary’s faith in the power of Christ to heal the sick. Yet it scarcely seems to have occurred to her that He might be able to raise the dead. - Not only able, but also willing, in many things, is our Lord, to do more than we desire, as well as more than we deserve, nay, more also than we imagine to be possible. Let us ascribe to Him all power we can conceive. And we shall experience at his hand all help we need. Let us believe that through his blessing on our prayers, we might not only be protected oftentimes from disease and death, but always from disobedience and sin. And then, though we should be sick, the visitation would turn to our endless profit. Then, though we were to die, our death would be no other than the entering into an inheritance eternal in the heavens.

And yet though He has thus all power in heaven and in earth, see Matt. 28. 18, when He saw Mary weeping, ‘and the Jews also weeping which came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled.’ Such was the feeling which He had for our infirmities! Such was the sympathy which He manifested for our sorrows! “Jesus wept.” He was man, at the same time that He was God. He was liable to our weaknesses, affected by our feelings, and kindly affectioned to the most lowly of our fellow creatures. “Jesus wept.” When they pointed out to Him the grave of Lazarus whom He loved, when they stood around Him weeping, both his enemies and his friends, He shed tears like unto their own. “Jesus wept.” It is then no part of our duty not to grieve for the sorrows of those we love, for the death of those with whom we have been used to live. “Jesus wept.” We too may weep; we may weep for death; we must weep for sin; we must weep to think how it is offensive towards God, how it is pregnant with misery to man. “Jesus wept.” But his tears were not without their consolation. We too must take care that we sorrow not even as others which have no hope; see 1 Thess. 4. 13; but rather as they who believe that through Him and through his mercy, our tears shall be dried up, and our mourning shall be turned into joy.

“Then said the Jews, Behold how he loved him!” This was the just and charitable reflection of men who could acknowledge kindness in one whom they disliked. “And some of them said, Could not this man, which opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man should not have died?” This we fear was the remark of evil unbelief, the shaft of censure and of scorn directed against the man they hated. The same event which seems in some to have softened prejudice, in others gave rise to the expression of contempt. The same tears of Jesus which some acknowledged for a token of affection, were made by others the occasion of a slighting remark, on his weakness and inability to heal. Ever let us interpret either tears or smiles the least for evil that we can. Ever let us believe the most we can for good, of all that we witness in our brethren. Ever let us in all things follow after that charity, which even of our enemies, “rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth.” 1 Cor. 13. 6.

Christ raiseth Lazarus.

38 Jesus therefore again groaning in himself, cometh to the grave. It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it.

39 Jesus said, Take ye away the stone. Martha, the sister of him that was dead, saith unto him, Lord, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been dead four days.

40 Jesus saith unto her, Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?

41 Then they took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid. And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me.

42 And I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which stand by I said it, that they may believe that thou hast sent me.

43 And when he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth.

44 And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with graveclothes: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

45 Then many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him.

46 But some of them went their ways to the Pharisees, and told them what things Jesus had done.

§ 322. Spiritual resurrection.

The raising of Lazarus from the dead is considered, with good reason, to be one of the most signal miracles of our Lord. Here we have not only disease subdued, but death. Here we have not death only, but also corruption, vanquished. Lazarus had been dead four days. This was long enough in such a climate as Judæa for great progress to be made in that loathsome change, which every one of us must expect our flesh to undergo. If the very words which describe the symptoms of this change sound necessarily offensive to our ears, how much more must the reality be dreadful! And how should this consideration repress in us all pride in bodily strength or beauty, all excessive care for bodily comfort, all vain indulgence in bodily pleasure. The outward frame, for the sake of which we entertain these feelings, or desire these indulgences, must moulder in corruption. In the grave they lie, the bodies of those whom we have loved on earth, in the dark and lonesome grave; saying "to corruption, Thou art my father: to the worm, Thou art my mother, and my sister." Job 17. 14. In the grave we must thus lie ourselves; unless indeed, as we daily pray, Christ's kingdom first shall come; unless, as we ought most earnestly to hope, we first shall meet the Lord in glory.

This interment of the perishable body is a fearful thing for the mind to dwell upon. But the more it is so, we should be the more thankful to find, that our Lord has ability and will to renew the corrupted form, to give to dishonour glory, to raise the mortal to immortality. Of this power, and of his readiness to exert it, we may conceive Him to have given us some foretaste, in the raising of Lazarus from the grave. And not only power did our Lord here manifest, in his readiness to comply with a desire to this effect, but He gave proof also of strong desire on his part, to raise up those who are taken captive by death. For why else did He groan within Himself, if it were not for the concern He felt in his friend's decease? And has He not called all his disciples friends? Nay, has He not done more for them than either friend or brother, even laid down his life for their sakes? For ourselves then let us believe that He anxiously desires to raise us from corruption to incorruption. In us, and in our salvation at the last day, He would have the assembled world to behold the glory of God. In our behalf He would give thanks unto the Father. And to us He would rejoice to say, as we lie bound in the darkness of the grave, to us He would rejoice to say, as He did to Lazarus; "Come forth."

"And he that was dead came forth." Harken, ye dead that are in the graves; hearken, and hope! Harken, ye dead in trespasses and sins, who yet live, but are near to die eternally, hearken, and believe; hearken, and repent; hearken, and instantly amend! Cast away the graveclothes ye are bound with hand and foot, the bondage of sinful practices, which constrain your souls yet further to transgress! Cast away the veil of worldly wisdom, that spiritual ignorance, which allows not of your seeing the presence of your Lord and Saviour. Loose you. Be free. Be ready to depart. Come from the haunts where you have used to sin. Come from the friends who have enticed you to iniquity. Come to Him who has set open the doors of your captivity. Come forth, and follow Christ. It was in a dark and loathsome cavern that you were spending the years of sin. "It was a cave, and a stone lay upon it." A weight which no strength of yours could move, would have constrained you to continue in transgression. At the command of Christ the stone has been removed. The cave is open. The path is clear. And the voice of your Saviour invites, entreats, commands, "Lazarus, come forth." God be praised, that voice is heard! God be thanked, that not only are the dead raised up, but the wicked also are converted and live. God be glorified, that for every one who is turned from the death of sin to the life of righteousness, there are others also who see, and seeing believe, and believing are saved through Jesus Christ!

Christ's death is prophesied by Caiaphas.

47 Then gathered the chief priests and the Pharisees a council, and said, What do we? for this man doeth many miracles.

48 If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation.

49 And one of them, named Caiaphas, being the high priest that same year, said unto them, Ye know nothing at all,

50 ¹ Nor consider that it is expedient for us, that one man should die for the people, and that the whole nation perish not.

51 And this spake he not of himself: but being high priest that year, he prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation;

52 And not for that nation only, but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad.

53 Then from that day forth they took counsel together for to put him to death.

54 Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews; but went thence unto a country near to the wilderness, into a city called Ephraim, and there continued with his disciples.

55 And the Jews' passover was nigh at hand: and many went out of the country up to Jerusalem before the passover, to purify themselves.

56 Then sought they for Jesus, and spake among themselves, as they stood in the temple, What think ye, that he will not come to the feast?

57 Now both the chief priests and the Pharisees had given a commandment, that, if any man knew where he were, he should shew it, that they might take him.

¹ ch. 18. 14.

§ 323. That Christ died for all men.

The chief priests and Pharisees in their council that they held together, acknowledged that our Lord wrought many miracles. "What do we?" said they, "for this man doeth many miracles." Their question, "What do we?" means, what have we done hitherto, what ought we to do now under these circumstances? Their conclusion evidently should have been, We ought immediately to believe. But instead of truth and faith, they considered only their worldly interest. They feared lest, if many others were to believe, the Romans would be jealous of the sovereignty of Christ, and would come and take away their place and nation. Such is the common calculation of a worldly mind; not, what ought I in all reason to do? not, what am I convinced reasonably must be right for me to do? but, what shall I gain or what lose, by doing this thing which I am convinced is right? And the frequent result of such reasoning is this; men bring down upon themselves, as did the Jews in this instance, that very evil which by these wicked means they would avert. Oh, that all such reasoners would well consider, "what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul!" Matt. 16. 26. Oh, that they would lay to heart how worthless in the comparison are all the glories of this present life, when set against what we hope for in eternity!

In this evil consultation of the Jewish rulers, they were urged by Caiaphas the high priest to put our Lord without delay to death. For it was expedient, he argued, that one man should die for the people. By which he probably meant that they ought to feel no scruple in putting Christ to death, however innocent he might be, provided it would be conducive to the public peace. For this is a notion not uncommon amongst mankind, that practices may be justified by public policy, which would be sinful in private conduct. As if Christ had left one Gospel for individuals, and another for communities! As if they that bear rule, and all men in proportion as they have influence in the state, were not bound to exercise their power, on the same principles of justice, mercy, and truth, which ought to regulate their behaviour to each other!

But whatever Caiaphas himself might mean, he spake these words not of himself. That is to say, they had a meaning other than he intended; they were a prophecy, put into his mouth by the Holy Spirit of God. It was God's will therefore which was here set forth. It was God's will that one man, and He not man only, but also God, even Christ, it was God's will that Christ should die for that nation. "And not for that nation only but that also he should gather together in one the children of God that were scattered abroad." Thus we learn that Christ died for the nation of the Jews, not for some few of them, but for all. And so of other nations, and of the whole world, for all He died; all would He have to be saved, through his blood; all would He gather into one, scattered abroad as all are; all would He make to become children of God.

The counsel of Caiaphas was agreed to. It was determined by the Jews to put Jesus to death. "Jesus therefore walked no more openly among the Jews." Though willing to lay down his life, He desired not to provoke the malice of his enemies; and He continued in a remote part of the country until the Jews' passover was nigh at hand. As this feast approached whilst many of the people anxiously inquired whether He were likely to appear at Jerusalem, the rulers had given orders, "that if any man knew where He were, he should shew it, that they might take him." Thus it is also in the festivals celebrated amongst Christians; whilst some of us are anxious in each ordinance of the Church to discern the presence of the Lord, others abuse these holy seasons by such practices of sinful intemperance, as amount to crucifying the Son of God afresh. Never may we so violate the will of our blessed Lord! Never may we so fail to profit by the times which are set apart for commemoration of his love! Never may we forget the love of Him who died for all our sins! Never may we neglect one chief object of his dying, that we should sin no more!

Christ cometh to Bethany, supbeth with Lazarus.

1 Then Jesus six days before the passover came to Bethany, where Lazarus was which had been dead, whom he raised from the dead.

2 There they made him a supper; and Martha served: but Lazarus was one of them that sat at the table with him.

3 Then took Mary a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment.

4 Then saith one of his disciples, Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him,

5 Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?

6 This he said, not that he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and ¹had the bag, and bare what was put therein.

7 Then said Jesus, let her alone: against the day of my burying hath she kept this.

8 For the poor always ye have with you; but me ye have not always.

9 Much people of the Jews therefore knew that he was there: and they came not for Jesus' sake only, but that they might see Lazarus also, whom he had raised from the dead.

10 But the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death;

11 Because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus.

¹ ch. 13. 29.

§ 324. The best of almsgiving.

Here we learn that Lazarus was not merely raised from the dead, but was also restored to the full use of life and health. He was one of those who sat at the table with Jesus at this supper. They whom Christ had raised, as from death, they whom He has delivered by his grace from the bondage of sin, and made able to walk in newness of life, these should be sure to sit with Him at his supper, these should attend thankfully at that sacrament, which He has prepared for a remembrance of Himself, and for the comfort and support of his disciples. At this supper in Bethany we are told "Martha served;" whilst Mary took "a pound of ointment of spikenard, very costly, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odour of the ointment." Both sisters were in attendance on our Lord, both willing to spend and to be spent in his service. If we can no longer wait upon his person, let us be ready to serve those whom He has left us in his stead, to receive the attentions due unto Himself. Let us study how we may best help and benefit each other. Let us be glad of an opportunity to do each other some unexpected kindness, to spend in doing good such an amount of means, as we scarce could have been supposed to possess.

Nothing could more powerfully set forth the little importance which we ought to attach to wealth, than the fact here mentioned, that Judas "had the bag, and bare what was put therein." He was the treasurer to this holy company. He had the custody of the fund which belonged in common to Christ and his apostles. This office belonged to "Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, which should betray him." And this our Lord allowed though He must have known Judas to be a thief; for He knew all things as they really were. And yet He could neither have wished to put temptation in the way of any man, nor have been indifferent to the waste of those means which no doubt were bestowed largely on the poor. Only He cared chiefly for the souls of men. And He seems herein to teach us how much more worthy of our attention is treasure in heaven, than wealth on earth. His stewards we are, whatever be the gifts committed to our charge. Let us be ambitious of being entrusted, not with a large estate, but with abundance of grace. Let us seek to derive our own satisfaction, and to make ourselves useful to our brethren, by means of piety and eminence in holiness, rather than by any such office as that, for which Judas was thought fit.

The objection which Judas made, and the answer of our Lord, furnish us with useful directions as to the objects of Christian almsgiving. Judas professed to plead for the poor. To which Jesus made answer, "The poor always ye have with you; but me ye have not always." All then which, if Christ were here, we should owe to his blessed person, all this we may now find means of spending to the honour of his name. The building and adorning of houses suited for his worship, the support of his ministers, the spreading abroad of his Gospel, and the educating of children in the Christian faith, all these are fit employments of some large portion of those means, which God has placed at our disposal. And when all these have had their fair share of our attention, we have besides these, the poor always with us. The want which is in the world through sin, will always supply us with ample exercise of our Christian bounty, in both relieving it at the present, and for the future helping to prevent it.

Whilst our Lord was thus instructing his disciples at the abode of Lazarus, the house was much resorted to by the Jews. And "the chief priests consulted that they might put Lazarus also to death; because that by reason of him many of the Jews went away, and believed on Jesus." What a privilege was this, to be the object of persecution, for drawing many to the faith of Christ! What a privilege thus to draw them, thus to help in their conversion! How far above all other charity is this, to love the souls of our brethren! How far better than all other alms are these, to minister to their spiritual necessities, to help them to believe in Christ! Would that our resurrection from sin to holiness might in like manner turn many to the knowledge of the Lord! Would that we might be seen as Lazarus was, constant at the same table with Him that raised us! What argument would have such force for the conversion of the world as the manifestation of more piety in the Church? And how can there be an increase in the true piety of the Church, unless we each of us try to grow in it ourselves?

Christ rideth upon an ass into Jerusalem.

12 ¹ On the next day much people that were come to the feast, when they heard that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem,

13 Took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet him, and cried, Hosanna: Blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.

14 And Jesus when he had found a young ass, sat thereon; as it is written,

15 ² Fear not, daughter of Sion: behold, thy King cometh, sitting on an ass's colt.

16 These things understood not his disciples at the first: but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him, and that they had done these things unto him.

17 The people therefore that was with him when he called Lazarus out of the grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record.

¹ Matt. 21. 8.

18 For this cause the people also met him, for that they heard that he had done this miracle.

19 The Pharisees therefore said among themselves, Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? Behold, the world is gone after him.

20 And there were certain Greeks among them that came up to worship at the feast:

21 The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus.

22 Philip cometh and telleth Andrew: and again Andrew and Philip tell Jesus.

² Zech. 9. 9.

§ 325. That God loveth all men.

The entry of Christ into Jerusalem after the manner of a triumphant king, may shew us how He should be in our apprehension a divine Sovereign, One whom we reverence, obey, and love. This was not at first so understood by his disciples; and at first it may be hard also to us. "But when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him;" namely, in the book of the prophet Zechariah, 9. 9. And the passage of prophecy, compared with what they knew of the event, would convince them that it was in reference to his spiritual kingdom, that these things were both written and done. And this should therefore be one great use we make of what we see or read of earthly state. Vain it is in itself. Yet it is useful as betokening that which is not vain but most important, the authority of lawful sovereigns, and of all who bear rule under them. But further it has been taken by prophets and apostles, or rather by the Holy Spirit of God speaking by their mouths, to describe to us the greatness and the glory of Christ. Thus kings have this additional title to our respect, that their state is a faint sign of that which Jesus holds over his faithful people. And earthly pageants are thus not without their use, if they remind us that there is no sight so grand, no sound so glorious, as can sufficiently enable us to conceive the majesty of our Lord which is in heaven: "Ride on," we may therefore say in the words of David to our Lord, "ride on, because of the word of truth, of meekness, and righteousness, and thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things. Thy arrows are very sharp;" namely, those with which Christ vanquished the evil spirits, and also pierced to conviction the hearts of sinners, "and the people shall be subdued unto thee: even in the midst among the King's enemies." Psal. 45. 5, 6.

Most wonderfully is this prophecy fulfilled in the devotion which our Lord receives from his faithful people, in the midst of a world which is at enmity with Him. Most literally was it fulfilled by the homage which was offered Him by the multitude at Jerusalem, under the very eyes of the hostile rulers. "The people therefore that was with him, when he called Lazarus out of his grave, and raised him from the dead, bare record." See how fearlessly they gave proof of their being convinced! See how little we should be hindered by either fear or shame in testifying what we have ourselves experienced of our Lord's great power and love! See how largely we might help, every one of us, by our zeal, to draw from his enemies the honourable testimony, "Behold, the world is gone after him!"

Amongst the number, who were stirred up on this occasion were "certain Greeks," that is to say, Gentiles. "The same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus." The caution of Philip, in first mentioning this circumstance to Andrew, shews how strange it seemed to them being Jews, that any Gentile should wish to see their Lord. This may serve to remind us how far off we were by nature from God's grace, how as Gentiles we seemed debarred by our lost condition from all interest in the covenant of God's mercy through Christ. But the promise was to Abraham and to his seed; and it was this, that in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed. See Gen. 22. 18. This promise therefore rightly understood, should have prepared the Jews to receive with open arms as many of the Gentiles as would see Jesus. And this promise, thus interpreted, should convince us, that God's love from the beginning has comprehended all mankind, though for a time, and for a purpose profitable to all, He set a barrier between Jews and Gentiles. If that wall of partition be now thrown down, if the gate be now thrown open, if we are permitted, nay invited, by faith to behold our Lord, let us take pains that we may see Him to the everlasting comfort of our souls. Let us see Him, as He is, the Saviour of all, whether Jews or Gentiles, of all who believe in his name.

Righteous art Thou, O Lord, and right are thy judgments! Great is thy love for sinful men; yea for all men, of all nations under heaven! "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints." Rev. 15. 3.

Christ is troubled in soul.

23 And Jesus answered them, saying, The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified.

24 Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

25 ' He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.

26 If any man serve me, let him follow me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve me, him will my Father honour.

27 Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour: but for this cause came I unto this hour.

28 Father, glorify thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it, and will glorify it again.

29 The people therefore, that stood by, and heard it, said that it thundered: others said, An angel spake to him.

30 Jesus answered and said, This voice came not because of me, but for your sakes.

31 Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out.

32 And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.

33 This he said, signifying what death he should die.

34 The people answered him, ' We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever: and how sayest thou, The Son of man must be lifted up? who is this Son of man?

35 ' Then Jesus said unto them, Yet a little while is the light with you. Walk while ye have the light, lest darkness come upon you: for he that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth.

36 While ye have light, believe in the light, that ye may be the children of light. These things spake Jesus, and departed, and did hide himself from them.

¹ Matt. 10. 39.

² Ps. 110. 4.

§ 326. The uses of trial.

It was when certain Greeks had desired to see Him, that our Lord declared the hour to be now come that the Son of man should be glorified. And in this He seems to have referred to his approaching death. For He adds immediately afterwards, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." And his meaning seems to be this, that by his death He should save the souls of many Gentiles as well as Jews. His death was needful to our salvation. Only by his blood could we be saved. Only by his dying for us are our sins washed out, or our souls justified in the sight of God. And this is his glory. This is the fruit He rejoices to bear in abundance, and for the sake of which He yielded up to death that most precious of all seeds, his body. From the same image of a seed, first dying before the plant appears, our Lord here takes occasion to remind his disciples that they too must die, must be willing to die, must disregard their present life, nay, must hate it in comparison of life eternal; this they must do if they would keep it, if they would keep it for that blessed immortality. So that our way to glory is in some sort like to that which our Lord has gone before. We must be indifferent to what here is most valued. We must be ready, if duty were to require it, to sacrifice even life itself. We must herein follow Christ closely, if we would be counted to serve Him faithfully. We must follow Him even unto death, if after death we would be with Him where He is; if either before or after death we would have the Father honour us.

See then here what our Lord for us graciously endured! Hear what in the apprehension of his sufferings He cried out! "Now is my soul troubled; and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour." If this too be our feeling in any trial which we are called upon to endure, let us remember that it is no more than what our Lord first has felt: even He who "was in all things tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Heb. 4. 15. And let us note for our consolation the reflection following: "but for this cause came I unto this hour." Let us thus apply this consideration to ourselves. We live that we may bear fruit. We are tried, in order that the trial of our faith may work patience, and hope, and love. And for our encouragement to persevere, we have both our Lord's example of patience in tribulation, and the gracious voice which was heard from heaven, that God in Him would glorify his name. 'This voice came, as our Lord tells us, for our sakes. It was meant no doubt to convince all disciples to the end of time, that there is power from on high ever close at hand, to support us in our trials, and to convert our cross into a crown of victory.

By the lifting of Christ on the cross, all men that ever have believed have been drawn unto Him. By our sufferings, if we bear them patiently, we shall both help to draw others unto Christ, and ourselves be drawn more near unto his love. Let us walk whilst we have this light. Let us walk as children of the light. In nothing may we better prove our kindred to our Lord, than in thus walking, that is to say, living according to the light He gives us. "He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." His sight is of no use to him. He has eyes, and yet he sees not. Without Gospel light, without faith in Christ, we have minds but cannot understand, we have hearts but we cannot rightly feel. We know not whither we go. We are advancing towards the pit of destruction; and are not aware that our life is in jeopardy. We do evil; and we know not that it is evil. We know not to do good; and we do it not. We injure our brethren; when we mean perhaps to do them a kindness. When perhaps we think to do God honour; we are doing despite unto his blessed Son.

Christ is not believed on by the Jews.

37 But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him:

38 That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he spake, ¹ Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

39 Therefore they could not believe, because that Esaias said again,

40 ² He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them.

41 These things said Esaias, when he saw his glory, and spake of him.

42 Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue:

43 ³ For they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God.

44 Jesus cried and said, He that believeth on me, believeth not on me, but on him that sent me.

45 And he that seeth me seeth him that sent me.

46 ⁴ I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness.

47 ⁵ And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world.

48 He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: ⁶ the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.

49 For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

50 And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.

¹ Is. 53. 1. Rom. 10. 16.

² Matt. 13. 14.

³ ch. 5. 44.

⁴ ch. 3. 19.

⁵ ch. 3. 17.

⁶ Mark 16. 16.

§ 327. The guilt of unbelief.

That the Jews believed not, is here shewn to be a blindness which they brought upon themselves. They could not believe, and why? Because of what Esaias the prophet had said would happen. Now what he had spoken of, amounts to this, that this people for their own obstinacy, should be hindered from hearing with their ears, and seeing with their eyes. So that the more they themselves refused to believe, they were the less moved, the less helped to believe by God. For this which Isaiah had said, was spoken by him when he saw the glory of Christ, and spake of Him. The words refer to this very time, to the wilful rejection of Christ by the Jews, and to the judicial blindness they thus brought upon themselves. See Isai. 6. 9, 10. and 53. 1.

But this judgment was not such as to make their believing impossible. For St. John here adds: "Nevertheless among the chief rulers also many believed on him." They were convinced in their hearts that He was the Christ. And yet they durst not profess Him with their lips. They were afraid of being put out of the synagogue. "They loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." Thus we see the true cause of their unbelief. Thus we see that to believe is not enough, unless the belief be such as leads us to love God rather than men, and to seek his approbation rather than theirs. To believe is not enough, unless we also attain to the proper fruit of believing, that we should not abide in darkness. It was for this that Christ came as a light into the world; not that we should believe on Him without owning or proving our belief; but that we should shew forth our faith in our lives. And it was this which the Jews could not do, because they would not. And the account written by Esaias beforehand no more hindered them from believing, than does our now knowing that they then believed not.

Else how could we understand our Lord's words following, how could we understand the whole tenour of Scripture, which appeals to us as having ability to choose in some sort for ourselves, which condemns us if we choose amiss, and if we choose aright pronounces praise? Hearken, ye that trust to be excused in sin, by reason of inability to choose better, hearken to the Son of God declaring, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." It lies with us then to reject or not; though it is at the same time true that our faith is of God's giving. But He gives to our prayers. And yet He also first moves us to pray. Only He moves those, who when He moves obey. In the beginning of our conversion unto Himself, and in each step we take towards holiness of life, God helps chiefly, and yet we also must help greatly. He chooses for us; and yet we must choose also for ourselves. He judges at the last day righteous judgment. And whom does He judge if not us his creatures? And how could He judge us if we had done nothing, and had nothing that we could do, in choosing or rejecting the Gospel of his Son? "His commandment is life everlasting." But it is so only to them which obey it. "Even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." This is the example set us by our blessed Lord. Even as He has spoken to us so let us do. This should be the practice of us his people.

Lord, reveal to us thine arm! Lord, help us to believe in the report of Thee! Blind not our eyes for our iniquity! Harden not our hearts for our sins! Make us to love the praise of God more than the praise of men! Make us to believe on Thee, and to believe on Him that sent Thee!

Christ washeth the feet of his disciples.

1 Now ¹ before the feast of the passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

2 And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him ;

3 Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God ;

4 He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments ; and took a towel, and girded himself.

5 After that he poureth water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

¹ Matt. 26. 2.

§ 328. The duty of being humble minded.

These things are said to have happened "before the feast of the passover." See ver. 29. That is to say, it was before the eating of the paschal lamb. For before the day on which the lamb was eaten, the Jews used to feast together with certain appropriate ceremonies, as did our Lord and his disciples, on this occasion. And these preparatory meals were sometimes called eating the passover, see Matth. 26. 17. Mark 14. 14. This then happened on the very day before Christ died on the cross, at the last supper which He ate with his disciples, and as the supper drew towards the end. It was when He "knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father," then it was, that "having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end." Men are apt when they are about to do any great service to each other, to expect somewhat of homage in proportion. But here we may learn, the nearer we are to doing any great good, so much the more to exercise humility. And this rule we should apply to those smaller services, which every hour enables us to render to each other, as members of one household. When therefore we can do a brother a good turn, let us watch that we never do it as if we were doing a great favour. Let us be careful that we assume not any credit or importance for the good which we have opportunity to confer. And lest we should be tempted thus vainly to presume, let us take the very same time, as a fit occasion for some act of signal humiliation, such as this washing the feet of the disciples.

Another circumstance of importance to be here noted, as illustrating the disposition of our Lord, is "the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him." This guilty purpose must have been well known to Christ ; yet it neither checked the ardour of his love, nor stayed the act of his humility. Judas must have been one of those whose feet He washed. For it is not till afterwards that we read of his going out. Ver. 30. And from comparison of the other Gospels there is reason to suppose that he stayed long enough to receive the bread, though not the wine, in that ordinance of universal obligation, which at the very end of this supper our Lord administered. Judas probably received the bread of the Lord's supper. Judas certainly was amongst those whose feet were washed by the Lord's hands. Let not us then be discouraged in doing good, by any conviction we may have upon our minds, that amongst those whom we would assist are some evil and unthankful. Though they be even traitors unto Christ, and though even we know them so to be, we must be ready, if we would follow his example, both to do them good, and to do it in such a manner as helps to humble ourselves. And to this latter point we should take the more earnest heed, in proportion as we have reason to think ill of those whom we are called upon to help. Lest otherwise the alms which we administer, be converted by the enemy of our souls, into a snare of arrogance and pride ; and whilst they serve to assist our brethren, help only to condemn ourselves.

Thirdly, we should here observe, how at the very time when Jesus did this thing, He did it "knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God." His great glory is here set down in the same view with his humility, that the higher the one is proved to be, the other may be seen to be the more lowly. And what a reproof is here for any pride that man dare cherish ! What a pattern for any humiliation we may have occasion to undergo ! What so great height as this have we that we can leave ? What so lowly office have we opportunity to perform ? What so great height have we to glory in ? Yet which of us would not think it an act of condescension to wash the feet of any other ? Which of us would rise from the midst of supper, in order to do services the most menial to those, whose place it would rather be to do them unto us ? Let us learn hence how far we are both in practice and in spirit from the example of our blessed Lord. Let us at least be convinced of sin. Nay, more, let us be stirred up to repent and to amend. Let us be persuaded that there is no duty that we can discharge, no post that we can occupy, no lot that we can receive, which is beneath our dignity, or so low as our deserts.

Lord, grant that we may love them that are in the world, as Thou hast loved us ! Grant that we may do to them, as Thou hast done to us ! Grant that we may love them unto the end, doing for them the utmost in our power ! And do Thou also love us unto the end, in death, and in the day of judgment !

Christ cometh to wash Peter.

6 Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter said unto him, Lord, dost thou wash my feet?

7 Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.

8 Peter saith unto him, 'Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me.

9 Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head.

10 Jesus saith to him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all.

11 For he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, Ye are not all clean.

12 ~~That he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Now ye what I have done to you?~~

13 Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am.

14 If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

15 For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.

16 Verily, verily, I say unto you, The servant is not greater than his lord; neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him.

17 If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

¹ Matt. 10. 24. ch. 15. 20.

§ 329. That we must be washed by the blood of Christ.

"Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" this was no more than might seem fitting for every one of the disciples in humility to have said; when Jesus undertook for them a work so menial. "Lord, dost thou wash my feet?" Shall those hands, at whose touch the blind are made to see, the lepers are cleansed, and the dead raised up, shall those blessed hands of thine do work so unfitting for thy majesty, to one so unworthy as thy servant? Thus far Peter answered in what seems to be humility. And Jesus graciously replied, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." These words should at once have satisfied his mind; should have made him at once submit. But here the ardour of his temper was exhibited, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." Nor would he consent till he was told that this was absolutely necessary for his having part with Christ. It would have been better for him to have been washed at the first. It would have been better to conclude at once that what Christ did must be right. But when Christ had told him that it was right, it was then far more sinful to resist. When Christ has told us what to do, or to believe, let us not wait till we understand what we ourselves shall gain; let us believe or do without delay, in the full assurance, that though we know not now what He doeth, we shall know sufficiently hereafter.

The washing which our Lord here signified to be necessary for Peter, meant the cleansing of his soul from sin by the blood of Christ. And of this, the washing of the feet with water was a sign. And as a sign it was sufficient that the feet only should be washed; just as in our baptism, the sprinkling of a few drops signifies, as well as the dipping of the whole body, that cleansing from sin which takes place. Let us lay to heart therefore, in this sign, the thing signified; the necessity of our being washed by the blood of Christ. Not only must He have died for us; that He would have done for Peter, whether He had washed his feet or no. Not only must his blood have been shed for us; this also has been done for all. Besides all this, our souls must be washed in his blood; and this must be done by means of our faith; for the washing here spoken of is not of the flesh but of the spirit. It is the being washed clean from sin, the being accounted just before God. And it is by faith, by a lively, fruitful faith, that we are justified in the sight of God. Oh, may it in this sense be truly said of us, "Ye are clean!" Oh, may there be no room, amongst so few as one family, to add, "but not all!" Yet if this needed to be added even of the apostles, must we not fear lest it be added of us also? Must we not tremble to think it possible, nay probable, that some in our own household are not yet right with God, not duly cleansed by the blood of Christ?

But besides a sign of his cleansing us from sin by his blood, this action of our Lord was also a professed example for our guidance in humility. "Ye ought also to wash one another's feet:" this is the conclusion He draws for our practice. "I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you:" this is his own account of his object in this action. "The servant is not greater than his lord:" this is the proof that the rule applies to every one amongst ourselves. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them:" this is the promise annexed to every duty; and the warning here connected with every instruction this, that knowledge without practice is vain. What need we then herein any further information? Only let us do what thus we know. Only let us practise what here we learn, and behold the consequence, "Happy are ye!" Happy we are in the life which we have to live on earth; happy, because here the less we have of pride, we shall have the less occasion to be hurt or mortified; happy, because there is no pleasure on earth so great as the ministering to the necessities of others, and no way so pleasantly to do it, as to do it with humility and love. And happy we are sure to be in the life which is to come, if here we do what Christ has bidden us; for of that life He has certainly revealed, that whatsoever we here do for his sake, unto one of the least of these his brethren, He will then count it as done unto Himself. See Matt. 25. 40.

Christ giveth the sop to Judas.

18 I speak not of you all: I know whom I have chosen: but that the scripture may be fulfilled, ¹ He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me.

19 || Now I tell you before it come, that, when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he.

20 ² Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me.

21 ³ When Jesus had thus said, he was troubled in spirit, and testified, and said, Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me.

22 Then the disciples looked one on another, doubting of whom he spake.

23 Now there was leaning on Jesus' bosom one of his disciples, whom Jesus loved.

24 Simon Peter therefore beckoned to him, that he should ask who it should be of whom he spake.

25 He then lying on Jesus' breast saith unto him, Lord, who is it?

26 Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a [†]sop, when I have dipped it. And when he had dipped the sop, he gave it to Judas Iscariot, the son of Simon.

27 And after the sop Satan entered into him. Then said Jesus unto him, That thou doest, do quickly.

28 Now no man at the table knew for what intent he spake this unto him.

29 For some of them thought, because Judas had the bag, that Jesus had said unto him, Buy those things that we have need of against the feast; or, that he should give something to the poor.

30 He then having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night.

¹ Psal. 41. 9.

|| Or, From henceforth.

² Matt. 10. 40.

³ Matt. 26. 21.

† Or, morael.

§ 330. What it is to betray Christ.

Our Lord, almost in the same breath, magnifies the office of his apostles, and tells them that one of them should betray Him. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that receiveth whomsoever I send receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." Such was the divine appointment of the apostles. It was the being sent by Christ. Such is the divine appointment of the Christian ministry. It is the being sent by those whom Christ has sent. And such is the duty of receiving those whom we may know to be thus sent by Christ. It is the receiving Him. It is the receiving Him that sent Him. The Father and the Son are both honoured by the attention which is paid to Christian ministers; by the respect which is paid to their teaching. But how grievous is the scandal that ensues on their sins! How greatly is our Lord troubled in spirit when He declares, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me!"

This was said to the twelve apostles. This might be said very probably, with truth, to any twelve of their successors whom man could now select. It is well if it may not be said also truly to each smallest family. It is well if it may not be said truly to ourselves. "One of you shall betray me." To fall from grace once attained, this is to betray our Lord. To be in any thing more sinful than we once have been, this is to betray our Lord. To be more dishonest, more covetous, more quarrelsome, more proud, more eager for pleasure, more fond of the world, this is to betray our Lord. It was in mercy that Christ thus warned Judas. It is in mercy that He would in these words warn us. Let us look not one on another, but each to our own selves; let us not doubt, but be assured, that for our sake, and for our improvement, if not also of us ourselves, these words were written.

Peter it seems was forward to learn of whom in particular our Lord spake on this occasion. And to this effect he made signs to John; who, according to the posture in which they then used to take their meals, lay with his head close unto our Lord. But when John asked Him, "Lord, who is it? Jesus answered, He it is, to whom I shall give a sop, when I have dipped it." He does not tell plainly to John himself. And He seems to have answered in so low a tone of voice, that none of the rest could hear at all. For only thus can we explain what is said afterwards, that "no man at the table knew for what intent" Christ spake to Judas. Curiosity about the sins of others was what our Lord would by no means encourage. We ought to be anxious to examine into our own. We ought to be watching against ourselves, lest of the many mercies heaped on us by our Lord, there be any, which through our negligence and unthankfulness, turn only to our greater condemnation.

This last act of our Lord to Judas, the giving him the sop, was undoubtedly an act of kindness. It was calculated to turn, if possible, the heart, which was about to resolve on the worst of sin. But "after the sop Satan entered into Judas." Christ knew of this beforehand, ere Judas had yet thought of it. Christ knew of it, and yet treated him with his wonted kindness. Mercy however, when received without thanks, does but harden the sinner's heart. And it was immediately after this last favour conferred, that the traitor, given up to Satan, resolved on his deed of darkness. "That thou doest, do quickly." Thy day of grace is now over. No more of warning will be given to alarm, no more of love exerted to move thy stubborn will. Fill up the measure of thine iniquity. Do without delay, in act, the sin thou hast done already in thy soul. "He then having received the sop went immediately out: and it was night." Darkness is no hinderance to deeds of evil. No time seems inconvenient for sin. But when we have good to do, how often are we found waiting for opportunity! If then Judas waited not for light to betray Christ, let us learn to reckon no night too dark, no season too inclement, no hour too inconvenient, to go out, and to do good, in the service of our Lord.

Christ commandeth us to love one another.

31 Therefore, when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him.

32 If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

33 Little children, yet a little while I am with you. Ye shall seek me: ¹ and as I said unto the Jews, Whither I go, ye cannot come; so now I say to you.

34 ² A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.

35 By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.

36 Simon Peter said unto him, Lord, whither goest thou? Jesus answered him, Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards.

37 Peter said unto him, Lord, why cannot I follow thee now? I will ³ lay down my life for thy sake.

38 Jesus answered him, Wilt thou lay down thy life for my sake? Verily, verily, I say unto thee, the cock shall not crow, till thou hast denied me thrice.

¹ ch. 7. 34.

² ch. 15. 17. Lev. 19. 18. 1 John 4. 21.

³ Matt. 26. 33.

§ 331. How love in Christians might influence unbelievers.

Whilst Judas was present, our Lord “was troubled in spirit.” Ver. 21. But “when he was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in him.” So painful should the company of the wicked be to us also: so great our grief to think of their fearful condition; so agreeable our relief when they are gone out from amongst us, though it be to our own harm that they are gone! No plot they can form, no malice they can execute, will fail to minister to the glorifying of God, if only we be patient and resigned. It was his death that Christ here meant, when He said that God would straightway glorify the Son of man. And his death He signified by the expression, “Whither I go, ye cannot come.” And when Peter desired to know where that could be, He replied, “Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards.” Death is not an end which we may attain to when we will. A death endured, in persecution for Christ’s sake, however glorious a way of following our blessed Lord, is what few are privileged as was Peter to attain, even after long waiting for their end. To be ready to lay down our life is not enough. We must be content to have it lengthened out in weariness, and want, and woe; if so it shall seem good to God.

But though we may not thus follow Christ, just when we ourselves like, and though we can in few cases, or none, now encounter for his sake a violent death like his, yet we may be sure that, unless first He come to judgment, we shall follow Him at length by some means to the grave; we shall all reach at length that gate, which, if we reach it in obedience and faith, is our door to enter into eternal life. Let us then be prepared, that we may not shrink from it when near, with a servile and unworthy fear, nor yet presumptuously profess, as did Peter on this occasion, that we are ready at any moment to encounter it. At the very time when we perhaps would boldly ask, “Lord, why cannot I follow thee now?” it may be true of us, as it here was of Peter, that we shall first thrice deny our Lord. When we consider how many sins we have to repent of, how many more we may yet have to confess with shame, how many graces we fall short in, how utterly unlike our life is to our profession, we may well pray to be delivered from sudden death; we may well implore when death approaches either suddenly or slow, “O spare me a little, that I may recover my strength, before I go hence, and be no more seen.” Psal. 39. 15.

Ere, the time of his own departure, and at the very moment of announcing it, Jesus left as his solemn bequest to his disciples, what He called a new commandment; “that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.” And by way of binding this more effectually on our consciences He added, “By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.” Would we then obey our Lord’s last new commandment, let us look to it that we love one another; that we do what good we can, out of Christian love; that whatever evil we abstain from doing to each other, we abstain out of Christian love. Let us see to it that we love after this sort, as Christ has loved us. Not in any vain profession, not for any ends of mere selfish pleasure, but for our own eternal interest, for God’s greater glory, and for the honour of our Lord and Saviour, let us love, and do what love requires; let us do as we would be done by; let us love as we would be beloved. Or further, would we be taken for true Christians? would we have men know that we are Christ’s disciples? would we have them know this with a view to their becoming so themselves? Again observe, the way thereto is that we love one another. When men in whose hearts there is no thought of Christ, see Christians who profess to serve Him yet failing in this duty of Christian love, what can they think, except that either our profession is hollow, or our faith, if we indeed hold it, fruitless? Do we seek revenge? Then how, they reasonably ask, how can we believe that this is of God’s writing, “Avenge not yourselves.” Rom. 12. 19. Do we grudge to give? Then how must they suppose that we interpret the saying of the Lord Jesus, that “it is more blessed to give than to receive?” Acts 20. 35. Are we distinguished in far distant lands chiefly for our eagerness after gain, or for our skilful inventions in the arts of war? Why then need we wonder that the heathen are still heathen? How can we expect that it will ever again be said as it once was of the primitive disciples, “See how these Christians love one another?”

Christ comforteth his disciples.

1 Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.

2 In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

3 And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

4 And whither I go ye know, and the way ye know.

5 Thomas saith unto him, Lord, we know not whither thou goest; and how can we know the way?

6 Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

7 If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him.

8 Philip said unto him, Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us.

9 Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Shew us the Father?

10 Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works.

11 Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake.

§ 332. Jesus the way of life.

We now enter on a discourse of considerable length, addressed by our Lord to his disciples, at the conclusion of his last supper, after Judas had gone out, and when He was about to be immediately betrayed. These circumstances seem to require of us more than usual attention to the truths which are here revealed, to the duties which are here insisted on. For would not this be the case, would not these be our feelings, if we were expecting to lose any near relation, any friend whom we dearly love, and who has dearly loved us? Would not his last words be listened to with tenfold interest? Should we not be sure to cherish them in our memories with tenfold affection? Should we not reasonably expect that he would choose for our instruction at such a time, that which it is most important for us to know? In proportion as he loved us, should we not feel certain that he would desire now to tell us what is most for our good? And in proportion as we have loved him, should we not ever after delight to do whatsoever at such a moment he desired? Here then we have the last injunctions of the best of friends, of a Friend just about to die, just about to die for us. Let us attend. Let us endeavour to understand. Let us strive, and pray for help in our exertions. Let us strive both to understand and to believe; both to believe and to obey.

"Let not your heart be troubled." It was likely this would now be the case with the disciples, when they had been warned that some great harm would soon befall their Master. "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me." This is the best remedy for all trouble of the heart. To have the same trust in Jesus Christ which is due to the Creator and Preserver of the world. This it is that will give us courage in time of adversity, and in temptation an assurance of being safe. And of the many things which we have to believe concerning Christ, there is no one more fit to give us a cheerful hope than this, that He is gone to prepare a place for us. In that place He assures us, there are many mansions. That is to say, there is therein ample room. Heaven is not a straitened realm. Though the way be narrow, the place is large; if only we once can enter. There is room therein for many, there is room for many to abide for ever. And that room is not prepared in vain. Heaven is no narrow kingdom; and it is the pleasure of the King there reigning, that his house shall be full. See Luke 14. 23. There is room therein for all. Who then need despair? Though Judas betrayed his Master, there is room in heaven for the rest of the disciples. Though Peter thrice deny his Lord, there is room in heaven for him. And Christ is gone before, to prepare for us this place. That He was about to leave, might else have grieved the disciples. That He is no longer on earth, might else fill us with concern. But now this is one chief thing, which should remind us for our joy, that a place is being prepared for us in heaven.

And the way to go thither is also here set forth for our direction. "I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." This is our Lord's answer to Thomas, inquiring of Him the way. And when Philip further asked, "Lord, shew us the Father;" He assured them that whosoever had seen Him had seen the Father also. Do we then desire to see God? Do we desire when we wake up from death to behold his presence in glory? Let us examine ourselves now, have we sought Him by this only way? When we draw near in faith, is it in Christ that we believe? When we draw near in prayer, is it through Christ that we pray, is it through his merits and mediation that we really trust that we shall be heard? When we draw near in love, is it Christ that we try to love, is it his love in dying for us, that we set before our minds, as the rule and pattern of our own? It is well to think of the Father having made us, it is well to think of his having given for us his Son. It is well to thank Him continually for all his goodness, and for all his gifts. But all this is of no avail to us, unless we think also of his Son. Our very thanks unto the Father we must offer through the Son. For so has the Father told us by the Son, that He, even Jesus, is the way, and that "no man cometh unto the Father" but by Him.

Christ promiseth the Comforter.

12 Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father.

13 'And whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son.

14 If ye shall ask any thing in my name, I will do it.

15 If ye love me, keep my commandments.

16 And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever;

17 Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him:

but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.

18 I will not leave you || comfortless: I will come to you.

19 Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also.

20 At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you.

21 He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.

¹ Matt. 7. 7.

|| Or, orphans.

§ 333. The love of Christ made manifest.

What a marvellous assurance is this given by Christ to his disciples, that if they would believe on Him they should do works greater than He did Himself. To them, employed as they were afterwards in spreading abroad his Gospel through the world, this might mean that they should be enabled by our Lord to work more strange miracles, and to make more numerous converts. To ourselves, if we may in any sense apply, with all humility, this assurance for our spiritual comfort, we might conceive it to signify, that the degrees of holiness to which through grace we may attain, are more marvellous in beings so frail as we are, than were in Christ all the wonders which He wrought. And the reason here added thus applies also to us. It is because Christ has gone unto the Father. It is because He there hears our prayers, and presents them to the Father to be heard; it is because He does for us whatsoever we ask in his name; it is because He has thence sent us the gift of the Holy Ghost; therefore it is that we are able to deny the flesh, to resist the devil, and to renounce the world: things else in us incredible, nay, impossible.

Through Christ, now in heaven, our prayers are heard. By prayer we obtain the gifts of grace. By means of grace we attain unto loving God. By means of grace we come to keep his commandments. He has not left us comfortless. He has given us according to his promise "the Spirit of truth," to dwell with us, and to be in us, for ever. Through the Spirit, and only through the Spirit, we are able to keep his commandments. And this also we do through love, and through love only. He is the Spirit of love, as well as the Spirit of truth. It is his office, above all other things, to fill our hearts with love. And here we have two chief points in love set forth. It comes of a conviction that we are closely related to Christ, and through Him to the Father. "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you." Naturally we feel affection for our near relations. We love them, being brother or sister, parent or child, whether they are such as we are else disposed to love or no. We love them, because we know they are our kindred. Is it nothing then to know that we are of one family with Christ, nay, members of the same body with Himself? Can we help loving Him, if we are convinced that we are in Him, and He in us, even as He also is in his Father? And if we love Him, can we help keeping his commandments? Not if we love Him truly. For thus it is that He has said, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." Are we doing his will? If not, we cannot be loving Him. If we do it, we must be influenced by love; for by no other means can we do his will. Without it we may be just and true. But this alone is not the will of Christ. It is that we be just and true for love of Him. Without love we may be beautiful and tender hearted. But this is not to keep his commandments, unless we give and forgive, for this very reason, in this very manner, and in love like to this, that God has for Christ's sake forgiven us.

And now let us see how great is our advantage, if thus we love our Saviour. "He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." God loves indeed all mankind. And when all were sinners, Christ died for all. But here He speaks of some other kind of love, or at least of love otherwise made manifest. For many whom God thus loves know not of it. Many for whom Christ died are not aware of it; and therefore they now enjoy less profit from his love, and for the future have less prospect of advantage. But to them that love Christ, his promise is express, that they shall not only be beloved, but shall know that they are beloved. He will manifest Himself to us. This is the consummation of our joy; to be convinced that our affection is returned, to have assurance that He who is all powerful and all good, does really love us his unworthy servants. This is made known to us in part on earth; in heaven it will be fully made manifest. Here all things work together for our good. In heaven we shall see clearly how they do so; and seeing, we shall rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Christ leaveth peace to his disciples.

22 Judas saith unto him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?

23 Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him.

24 He that loveth me not keepeth not my sayings: and the word which ye hear is not mine, but the Father's which sent me.

25 These things have I spoken unto you, being yet present with you.

26 But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.

27 Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

28 Ye have heard how I said unto you, I go away, and come again unto you. If ye loved me, ye would rejoice, because I said, I go unto the Father: for my Father is greater than I.

29 And now I have told you before it come to pass, that, when it is come to pass, ye might believe.

30 Hereafter I will not talk much with you: for the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me.

31 But that the world may know that I love the Father; and as the Father gave me commandment, even so I do. Arise, let us go hence.

§ 334. The fruit of Christian love.

The question of Judas, not of Iscariot, but of Jude, the writer of the Epistle, has obtained for us further information, as to how it is that Christ makes Himself manifest to his disciples, though not unto the world. It is because they love Him, and keep his sayings. "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." And this cannot be the case with us without our being aware of it. The Father and the Son cannot dwell by the Spirit in the inner man, without its being manifest to us that they are in us. And when this is manifest, then we have the sense of being beloved, then we have the fulfilment of this promise of our Lord. And this happens when we first love Christ. And here we are reminded what is the sign of loving Him; to keep his sayings. Only let us remember that the sign is not the same with the things signified. We may do some things which our Lord bids us, without loving Him, out of fear, or even out of worldly interest. To keep his commandments, is not loving Him, though it is the best of proof that we do so. We must keep them, out of an affectionate desire to please Him who first loved us. We must feel the warmth of love, as well as do the works of love; or we may obey without having his love manifest to our souls.

How much more sure, how much more valuable is that service which springs from love, than that which comes of interest or fear! This we see daily in our own affairs on earth; wherein nothing is so well done, or so sure to be done at all, as what is done out of affectionate regard. How different too is the effect on our own hearts, according as we act from any other motive, or from love! In the one case we are full of trouble or of terror; in the other, we have that peace, which our Lord has here described as his bequest to his disciples. "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." And this assurance is closely connected with the promise, in the verse before, of the Comforter, that He should teach us, and bring all things to our remembrance, whatsoever our Lord hath said.

However properly these assurances of help and comfort might belong first to the apostles, to whom they were addressed, and might signify the guidance and comfort they received in revealing the Gospel to the world; we cannot doubt that they belong also unto us, if only like them we love our Lord. Thus then we would apply what here is said. Fear need have no place in a Christian heart, in a soul which is animated by Christian love. There need be no alarm for the future, no painful apprehension by reason of the past. The sins of yesterday are blotted out. Today we have grace not to sin. For tomorrow, we know not whether it will come; or if it come, we trust that it will come for good. For worldly troubles, we live out of their reach; our treasure is in heaven. For spiritual cares, what cares can we conceive, if we reckon that in all things Christ cares for us; if we love and believe ourselves to be beloved of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord? How different is this manner of living, from that which "the prince of this world" imposes on his subjects! How different is this peace, which comes of loving Christ, from that fatal security in sin, which often comes of doing Satan's work: from that fearful looking for of judgment, which is the consequence of being Satan's servant! How different in life is our condition! How much more different in death! then it is that our peace will be most signal. Then will those, who truly love us, have occasion to rejoice, in proportion as they are persuaded that we depart in Christ; that with Christ we go unto the Father. If the Father be in any sense greater than the Son, us not having, like the Son, humbled Himself unto death, how much greater is the Father than we his creatures! How much greater than all that we can desire, must be the glory of dwelling in his presence! How much sweeter than all that we can conceive, must be the bliss of being made perfect in his love!

Christ the true vine.

1 I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman.

2 Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away : and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit.

3 Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.

4 Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me.

5 I am the vine, ye are the branches : He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit : for without me ye can do nothing.

6 If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.

7 If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you.

8 Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples.

¹ Matt. 15. 13.

² chap. 13. 10.

|| Or, severed from me.

§ 335. That by our good works God is glorified.

In this chapter and the next, we have that affecting discourse continued which our Lord addressed to his disciples, and which it is our privilege, as well as duty, to apply to ourselves. He is to us "the true vine." We are branches in Him, growing through his mercy from Himself, or as we are elsewhere spoken of, grafted in Him. See Rom. 11. 17. That is to say, as the vine supplies nourishment to the branches, so does Christ supply strength to our souls. And as the branches derive their very life from the vine, so do we derive from Christ our new life in the Spirit, "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman." Now it is the business of the husbandman, in the countries where vines are commonly cultivated, to prune the plants, that they may be more productive. Thus it is, according to our Lord's description, with the heavenly Husbandman. "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away : and every branch that beareth fruit, he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit."

Are we then, or are we not, bearing fruit? If none : we see here our sentence. We must expect to be taken away ; severed from Christ ; cut off from his blessed fellowship for ever. Or is it that we bear fruit, and yet notwithstanding are afflicted? We see here the reason ; we are chastened in order that we may bring forth more fruit. We see too by what means alone the heavenly husbandman will count us clean, even through the word that Christ hath spoken, and that is by the death He died. For his death was the thing of which He lately had discoursed. And it was as his last address, previous to his death, that this whole exhortation was delivered. We see further that our only way to bear fruit at all, is to abide in Him. And this we must do by means of faith ; "Without me ye can do nothing." This is a truth we need daily to remember. For there is none which we are more frequently tempted to forget. Without Christ we can do nothing. Nay, if we were to do much, without Him, it would be nothing. For the works, which when done through grace, and in the faith of Him, are good, the same, if done without Him, partake rather of the nature of sin. With Him we can do much ; we can do every thing ; every thing that is needful to prove our love of Him, every thing that is required to glorify God.

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit ; so shall ye be my disciples." What? can God be glorified by the works of man? He can, if we work by faith in Christ. He can, if we work in the love of God, and in devotion to his Son our Lord. God is glorified. Angels rejoice. Saints give thanks. God is glorified, if we bear much fruit ; if we through faith are justified ; if being justified, we have grace to love ; if, out of love, we obey with all our might, and bear all the fruit we can. God is glorified, and we are Christ's disciples. We are his disciples indeed ; not by name only, but in reality. Not only in our own profession, but in his esteem. We are his disciples, if we bear much fruit. We shew, as branches, that we grow out of the true vine, that we partake of nourishment from the only root of life and health and fruitfulness. Let us then never be content with bearing little fruit. Let us not be satisfied unless we daily bear more and more. Let us study to improve in every good word and work. Let us purpose ; let us endeavour ; let us pray. For prayer is the means by which we may hope to have conveyed to us the grace we need. Prayer is the method by which all life is communicated from the vine to the branches. And it is especially thus promised us of our prayers : "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

May we be ever eager to ask, what God is always ready to hear ! May that which is his glory, be also our chief delight ! May it be our pleasure to bear much fruit ! May we always seek occasion to do more and more service unto God ! counting it all joy when we fall into divers temptations, in the trust that we shall have grace to triumph against sin, the world, and the devil ! See James 1. 2.

Christ calleth his disciples friends.

9 As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love.

10 If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love.

11 These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

12 'This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you.

13 Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends.

14 Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.

15 Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you.

16 Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and 'ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name he may give it you.

17 These things I command you, that ye love one another.

¹ ch. 13. 34. 1 Thess. 4. 9. 1 John 3. 11.

² Matt. 28. 19.

§ 336. That we should love as friends.

Here we see how Christ has loved us; even as the Father loved Him. Here we see how He would have us love each other; even as He has loved us. And here we have it repeated, that this is his commandment, as if it were above all others his, that we should thus love one another; and that thus we shall abide in the love of Him if we keep his commandments. All this had been already stated nearly in the same terms; and yet it seemed good to Christ so soon to repeat it, within the compass of this last discourse. Must it not then be good for us again to fix our thoughts on this important subject; again to apply to our consciences the commandment of love, and the pattern of the love of Christ? For have we not already in this short interval forgotten, or neglected to put in practice, some of the holy purposes we so lately formed? Have we not in some one, or many instances, since we heard so lately that "new commandment," ch. 13. 34, been guilty of unkindness to each other, either in thought, or word, or deed?

Let us note, therefore, how our Lord here sets forth, with yet one other argument, this the last and most urgent of his commands. He appeals to us by the name of friends. He shews how He would treat us as friends in laying down his life for us. And He calls on us as friends of his to do this thing that He requires of us. "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you." These words do, indeed, especially belong to the apostles, for unto them was the will of God more particularly revealed, as to friends, by Christ. But through them it has been revealed also to us; and to us also, as being disciples of Christ, do these words belong. Us has He called friends, not servants. To us has He made known whatsoever it was determined in the counsels of God that man should know. For unto this it is that we have been chosen of God in Christ, that we should know his will; and that knowing it, we should do it. To this it is that Christ has ordained us, that we should go and bring forth fruit. We have not chosen Him. Lost in sin as we were by nature, we should have preferred always darkness rather than light. We should neither have desired to do right, nor have come to Christ for help unto salvation. But He has chosen us. He has favoured us Christians above all mankind, in giving us the knowledge of his Gospel; and some of us He has favoured above the rest, with means and opportunities both of faith and practice. The more we are thus favoured, the more fruit we must continue to produce; for to these ends He has so favoured us, that we should bring forth fruit, and that our fruit should remain. Which is the same that is elsewhere said of them that die in the Lord, that "their works do follow them." Rev. 14. 13. Thus it is that our fruit will remain; it will continue to increase as long as life shall last: and in the life to come it will be treasured up for our advantage.

And what our fruit is to be is here again in the end repeated, as well as that prayer must be our great help towards the growth of it. Do we then, let us examine ourselves over and over again, do we ask the Father in the name of Christ? Do we ask so as to obtain his grace? Are we renewed in heart so as to love one another? Do we discharge all our duties to each other out of love? out of the regard which we feel to our brethren, as children of the same Father, friends of the same Christ? If we were thus to feel, how much less irksome would be the most difficult of our labour! how much less powerful the temptations to offence! Would a brother wilfully wrong a brother? Would he grudge to wait on one whom he loves as a friend? Would he purloin from his own kindred? Would he oppress, revile, or slander those whom he regards as his own flesh and blood? Only then let us have love glowing in our hearts, only let us obey this commandment of Christ; and behold, all things that we have to do, even for strangers, much more for friends, will be easy to us, and pleasant, and profitable, even as things done for our own dearest brethren.

Christ is hated without a cause.

18 If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you.

19 If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

20 Remember the word that I said unto you, ¹The servant is not greater than his lord. If they have persecuted me, they will also persecute you; if they have kept my saying, they will keep your's also.

21 But all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not him that sent me.

22 If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no \parallel cloke for their sin.

23 He that hateth me hateth my Father also.

24 If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father.

25 But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their law, ²They hated me without a cause.

26 ³But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me:

27 And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.

¹ ch. 13. 16. Matt. 10. 24.

\parallel Or, excuse.

² Ps. 35. 19.

³ ch. 14. 26. Luke 24. 49.

§ 337. Consolations under enmity.

It seems scarcely to be believed that One so gracious and good as our blessed Lord should have been hated by those amongst whom He lived. But hear what He said Himself: "If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both me and my Father." The works of Christ gave proof to the beholders of who He was, and who was his Father. So that in hating Him they must have known, or might have known, whom they hated; they knew sufficiently to know that they were sinning, to be conscious that they were sinning against God. And how could it be that any one hated Christ? The reason is, that they who love sin are at enmity with every thing, and with every one, that is good. Especially are they at enmity with those whose words or actions are a reproof unto themselves. Thus the miracles and preaching of Jesus convicted the unbelieving Jews of sin. Thus the zeal and piety which it is our duty to make manifest, will be sure, if we are zealous and pious as we ought to be, sure to bring on us the hatred of the world. For though all with whom we dwell are now Christians in profession, and all, or nearly all, are baptized into the faith and service of Christ, yet are there many of these Christians who love to sin, many who are at enmity with God, many who are, therefore, still "of the world," many who still hate them that are of Christ.

We, therefore, if we are like minded with our Saviour, if it be the purpose of our will to fulfil his pleasure, if it be the study of our hearts to be what we profess, and to save our souls alive, we must not wonder, any more than the apostles, if the world hate us. We must call to mind, if we are thus hated, that the world hated first our Saviour Christ. We must console ourselves with thinking, that this very hatred, if we are not worldly minded, is a proof that we are not of the world, but have been chosen in Christ out of the world. And why should we be disheartened at persecution, when we consider what Christ Himself endured? when we remember that "the servant is not greater than his Lord?" Why should we despair at the indifference of the world to all that we can say or do for good, when we call to mind how little they have kept his words? All these things they do unto us for his name's sake, if only we be really believing in his name, and truly walking in the ways of his commandments. All these things they do in ignorance of God; which ignorance, though wilful, and therefore no cloak for their sin, is yet a strong motive for us to forgive their hatred, and to be contented under it. All these things are but a fulfilment of what is written in the Scripture. We should neither be surprised nor dejected at having that happen to us, which we are assured of beforehand, which we know that God knows of long before, and which we may be sure He permits for greater good. For so also it was said of our Lord Himself; "They that are mine enemies, and would destroy me guiltless, are mighty." Ps. 69. 4.

Only let us take heed that we give no cause for the hatred of the world. Let us be watchful that we never provoke persecution, that we take no pride in being persecuted, that we seek rather to be beloved than hated, that we give no one needlessly any manner of offence. Let the servant herein follow the example of his Master, who took pains not to provoke but to conciliate his enemies; not to encounter, but to avoid their malice. For what can be more opposite to a Christian spirit than to provoke our brother to do wrong, with a view to our own supposed profit by his ill doing? We ought rather to be concerned that he should sin, than glad that we ourselves are sinned against. We ought to be content to suffer when we must, but anxious to escape when conscientiously we may. We ought to administer unwelcome but wholesome counsel, in such a spirit of meekness, gentleness, and love, as shall win the souls of others, besides delivering our own. We ought to make our light shine before men, not with that vain glory, at which they close their eyes, but with that pleasant and profitable radiance, which will at once shew them our good works, and lead them to glorify our Father which is in heaven. See Matt. 5. 16.

Christ promiseth to send the Comforter.

1 These things have I spoken^a unto you, that ye should not be offended.

2 They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service.

3 And these things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father, nor me.

4 But these things have I told you, that when the time shall come, ye may remember that I told you of them. And these things I said not unto you at the beginning, because I was with you.

5 But now I go my way to him that sent me; and none of you asketh me, Whither goest thou?

6 But because I have said these things unto you, sorrow hath filled your heart.

7 Nevertheless I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you.

8 And when he is come, he will \parallel reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment:

9 Of sin, because they believe not on me;

10 Of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more;

11 Of Judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.

^a Or, convince.

§ 338. The offices of the Holy Ghost.

Our Lord here tells his disciples both what they would have to suffer, and his reasons for warning them beforehand. These were, first, that they should not be offended; secondly, that when the time should come, they might remember that He had warned them. It is profitable then for us also to know, that what here we suffer is no more than what our Lord has foretold. It may prevent our being made to stumble, if we are aware of what offences are in our path. It may help us in bearing the cross of Christ, if we are aware that He warned us we must bear it. To be disciples of Christ in the very heart is not the sure road to worldly wealth, or ease, or peace. It will indeed give within a heavenly composure; but without, it often exposes us to tribulation and anxiety, to hatred and scorn and persecution. Do we wonder that our Saviour, Lord as He is of heaven and earth, has secured no better lot for his disciples? It may be strange, but it is no more than He has forewarned us. He was Himself aware that such would be the case. He has told us, in order that we might be aware of it. He held out no delusive hopes of unmingled happiness on earth. And the very certainty which we hence have of his knowing all the future, should convince us that He does in all things what is best.

The suffering here spoken of by Christ was to be fulfilled on the disciples as soon as He should go away from them. And at these tidings their hearts were so filled with sorrow that they could not so much as ask Him, "Whither goest thou?" Yet it was expedient, it was profitable, that He thus should go away. For on his departure He engaged to send both to them and to us the Holy Ghost, here called the Comforter. And so excellent a gift is here intended, that our Lord tells us, that for the sake of the coming of the Comforter, it was good for us that He Himself should go. Could any thing more clearly shew that the Holy Ghost and the Son are distinct persons, than that one would not come till the other had departed? Could any thing more clearly prove that the Son and the Holy Ghost are equal, than that it is good for us that one should go, in order that we may have the gift of the other? Be with us then, blessed Comforter, in all our troubles and adversities; be with us, thou Holy Spirit, in all our trials and temptations! Be to us all that Christ was when on earth, all that we can need now that He is gone up to heaven!

And let us next see what the Comforter was to do, what it is that He has done, for the world and for the church. "When he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment." This must be a great blessing both for the world and for the disciples of Christ. For if the world be convinced of sin, by reason of its unbelief, if it be convinced that unbelief is sin, nay if it be only convicted though not convinced, the Comforter makes it manifest at the same time, that for as many as believe there is justification, and that they are justified before God by faith through Christ. And thus does the Comforter reprove the world of righteousness: proving, whether we will hear, or whether we will forbear; proving, by the ascension of Jesus Christ, by his going to the Father, that He whom they slew was the Holy One and the Just, a man too good for earth, a God, the Lord of heaven. And of judgment also does the Comforter put the world in mind, in reproof of all love of earthly things; "because the prince of this world is judged," because Satan is fallen like lightning from heaven; see Luke 10. 18; because the many cases in which good now prevails against evil, prove that in the last day it will be triumphant. These things did the Comforter when first He came to the apostles. These things He has ever since continued to do. These things He has done by the inspired volume, written by holy men of old, "as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." 2 Pet. 1. 21. These things He has done by the growth of Christianity in the world, and by the growth of piety in the church. These things may He do by his influence in our hearts; by turning our thoughts from sin to righteousness, from the praise of men to the judgment seat of Christ!

Christ has yet many things to say to the disciples.

12 I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now.

13 Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.

14 He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you.

15 All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shew it unto you.

16 A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father.

17 Then said some of his disciples among themselves, What is this that he saith unto us, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me: and, because I go to the Father?

18 They said therefore, What is this that he saith, a little while? we cannot tell what he saith.

19 Now Jesus knew that they were desirous to ask him, and said unto them, Do ye enquire among yourselves of that I said, A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me?

20 Verily, verily, I say unto you, That ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.

21 A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

22 And ye now therefore have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you.

§ 339. Of the death, resurrection, and ascension of Christ.

There are several proofs that the apostles were men deeply prejudiced with the mistakes prevailing amongst the Jews. And this was the reason that they could not at this time bear the many things which Jesus had yet to say to them. Such for instance were the abolishing of the ceremonial law, the calling of the Gentiles, the atonement to be made by his death, and justification through faith in his blood. On these things, and others like to these, Christ could not with so much profit discourse to them at any length, till they had been prepared by the gifts of the Holy Ghost. And this doubtless is the reason that these things are only hinted at in the Gospels, but argued and explained at great length in the Epistles. They are things which Jesus had to say to the apostles, which they could not bear, were not fitted to hear, before his death, and which afterwards the Holy Ghost revealed to them, and by them to the Christian church.

For this was done by the Holy Spirit of God, here called "the Spirit of truth." He it was who guided the first preachers of the Gospel, and the writers of the Christian oracles, "into all truth." He it was who spake not of Himself, but received of the things that are Christ's, which mean the same as the "things that the Father hath." What a mystery is this which is here revealed! What distinctness of person, what unity of purpose, is here ascribed to the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost! What a pattern is here for Christian teachers, nay to all who give Christian counsel, that they should not speak of themselves, but whatsoever they hear, knowing it to come from God; whatsoever they receive, knowing it to be Christ's, that should they speak! And they should shew also to all men things to come. They should point from the present to the future; and inculcate the great lesson of heavenly forecast, the sacrificing of what we now wish to do, for the sake of what we hope for in eternity. These are instances of Christian conversation which well befit all those who trust within themselves that they have the Holy Spirit of God. These are duties which no one but that Spirit can incline us to undertake, or enable us effectually to discharge.

Our Lord having thus set forth to the disciples this one other office of the Comforter, to tell them things in which He Himself had not instructed them, now turns their attention once more, ere He concludes, to his death, and resurrection, and ascension. "A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father." For a time He was removed from their sight by death. But after his resurrection He was seen by them again, that they might be the better certified of his ascending into heaven. And at his departure He tells them they would weep and lament. His death, as we know, filled them with dismay. And even at his ascension it is probable that they were greatly perplexed, expecting, as they did, that He would at that time have restored the kingdom to Israel. See Acts 1. 6. But how soon was their sorrow turned into joy! How soon was the Comforter sent to give them peace and joy in believing! And how great cause had the world also to rejoice, the world for which Christ died, the world for which He ascended to plead before the Father the merits of his death for ever! Let this joy be ours. Let us rejoice to think that for us He died, for us He rose again from the dead, and in order to prepare a place for us He ascended into Heaven. See ch. 14. 2. Let us be convinced, and rejoice in our convictions. And if at times, under the recollection of our past sins, and under the sense of our remaining infirmities, we are inclined to weep and lament, if we feel as if Christ were absent from us, as if no one cared for our soul, let us call to mind these his gracious words, "I will see you again;" let us trust that again our heart shall rejoice; let us be persuaded that the joy which God will give us is such as no man taketh from us.

May God make us both to mourn for sin and rejoice in our deliverance! And if now for a time we see not Christ, may God grant that when He visits us again, we may behold his countenance for ever.

Christ speaketh no more in proverbs.

23 And in that day ye shall ask me nothing. ¹ Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you.

24 Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full.

25 These things have I spoken unto you in || proverbs: but the time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in † proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly of the Father.

26 At that day ye shall ask in my name: and I say not unto you, that I will pray the Father for you:

27 For the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God.

28 I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father.

29 His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no ‡ proverb.

30 Now are we sure that thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee: by this we believe that thou camest forth from God.

31 Jesus answered them, Do ye now believe?

32 ² Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to § his own, and shall leave me alone: and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with me.

33 These things I have spoken unto you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation: but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

¹ Matt. 7. 7.

|| Or, parables.

† Or, parables.

‡ Or, parable.

² Matt. 26. 31.

§ Or, his own home.

§ 340. Cheerfulness in tribulation.

How reluctant is the heart of man to pray! Why else should our Lord so often inculcate the duty of praying? Why else should He repeat thrice, in this his last discourse, almost the very same exhortation? See ch. 14. 13. and 15. 16. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." Can any thing in itself be more easy than to ask? Why then is it so hard to pray? Why, if it be not that to pray we must desire, and in order to desire such things as we ought, our hearts must be changed from sin to holiness? But this change itself comes by prayer. And we must begin to pray with the first grace that we receive. The first use we must make of the least grace we have, is to pray that we may have more. These prayers then let us offer in the name of Christ, in the assurance that through Him we shall receive, and that through his gift our joy shall be full.

At the same time when Christ promised so expressly that what we ask in prayer shall be granted, He told the disciples that the time was coming when they should ask Him nothing; that is to say, make no enquiries. Hitherto He had spoken many things to them in proverbs; but He was now about to teach them plainly, both by the events which would actually take place, and by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost enlightening their minds. And for these privileges, He told them, that there would be less need for Him to pray the Father in their behalf. "For," saith He, "the Father himself loveth you, because ye have loved me, and have believed that I came out from God." This was a most gracious testimony to the sincerity of that affection, which the disciples felt in their hearts for Christ. And upon hearing it they expressed their conviction that Christ knew all things, because He knew, as he shewed now, and as He had shewn on other occasions, the secrets of their souls. By this they believed that He came forth from God. By this we believe more, even that He was God Himself. Never may we, like them, for a time fall away from our convictions! Never may we be scattered or divided from each other! Never may we be severed from our devotion to our Lord, in the hour when his service would lead us to affliction.

Like the disciples we must expect tribulation in the world. And often as this warning is repeated, we may be sure that it is not more often than Christ knew to be needful. For notwithstanding the frequent repetition of it, how unwelcome is this notion of suffering to our thoughts! We are too apt to view religious conduct merely as a source of worldly comfort, or of worldly credit. And it is good for us to be frequently reminded that the end of our faith is not our present ease, but the salvation of our souls. See 1 Pet. 1. 9. Many things must here be otherwise than we could wish. The perverse contradict, the dishonest wrong, the cruel persecute, and the false deceive. But nevertheless we must be of good cheer. And why? Because our Lord has assured us of Himself, "I have overcome the world." Let us try to think of this his saying, in the very next affliction which overtakes us. Let us consider what his having overcome the world amounts to. It proves that we need not mind the world's frowns; for who would fear an enemy that has been thoroughly defeated. It proves that greater is He that is with us, than they that are against us: for how else could He have gained the victory? It should convince us, whatever troubles we meet with, either from this world, or from the prince of it, that they are under the guidance and controul of Him who has vanquished sin and death, and who will suffer no evil to befall us, beyond what He knows to be for our good. Let us then in any case be of good cheer. If God be with us, who can be against us? If Christ be on our side, who can hinder our gaining the victory? Did He not conquer, though left alone? And yet He was not alone, but with Him was the Father. And shall not we, who have the Son also with us, shall not we prevail against sin and Satan? Shall not we rejoice in our success? "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory," over sickness and pain of body, over anguish and care of mind, over want and weakness, over sin and death! "Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ!" 1 Cor. 15. 57.

Christ prayeth to the Father.

1 These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven, and said, Father, the hour is come; glorify thy Son, that thy Son also may glorify thee:

2 ¹ As thou hast given him power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him.

3 And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.

4 I have glorified thee on the earth: I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.

5 And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

6 I have manifested thy name unto the men which thou gavest me out of the world: thine they were, and thou gavest them me; and they have kept thy word.

7 Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me are of thee.

8 For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, ² and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

9 I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine.

10 And all mine are thine, and thine are mine; and I am glorified in them.

¹ Matt. 28, 18.

² Ch. 16, 27.

§ 341. The necessity of true faith.

At the end of his discourse to the disciples Christ addressed a solemn prayer to the Father, that, now the hour was come, He would glorify the Son, that the Son might also glorify Him. And this glorifying means the honour which would redound both to the Father and the Son from the death of Christ, and from the salvation of those who should believe in Him. Salvation is the being saved from sin, and from death eternal. It is the being brought unto the inheritance of everlasting life. And for this Christ prayed. He being man as well as God, the Son of man as well as the Son of God prayed to the Father; as it is written of Him in the Psalms; "Desire of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession." Psal. 2. 8. Thus did Christ ask of his Father both for us and for Himself; for Himself that He might be enabled, now the hour was come, to glorify the Father as He designed; for us, that we might have grace thus to know and to believe, and thus to help also in promoting the divine glory.

For observe here that it is not enough to know God as the Creator and Governor of the world; we must know both the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent. Neither is it enough to be sincere in any faith which we happen to profess; we must take pains that our knowledge be correct, that our faith be right faith. For "this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Our happiness, our eternal salvation, depends more than is commonly supposed, not only on our sincerity, but on the truth of what we hold. It is necessary, speaking generally of those who might know aright, it is necessary unto our everlasting salvation, that we should know of Jesus Christ, that He is the Son of the true God, and that as God He is the sacrifice for the sin of man. We must know that by his death as the Son of man, He has reconciled unto us the Father, and was therein glorified by the Father, and the Father by Him. We must know that all things which had been revealed unto us by Christ, are revealed from the Father, are the will of the true God, of that eternal Spirit in whom we live, and move, and have our being. See Acts 17. 28. We must receive the words of Christ as the words of God, we must believe that Christ was sent from God. We must be persuaded that it was the intent of our Saviour's coming to save in the lost and condemned world, as many as by any means repent and believe, as many as receive what He reveals, as many as are thus given Him by the Father. All this we must know, and knowing must believe. All this as far as it is the purport of God's word, and all else that in that word we can be sure of; all we must believe, all we must hold for the most certain of all truths that man can know, if we would not perish everlastingly.

But besides the revelation of most important doctrine, we have here a pattern of most affecting prayer; not in meekness only, and lowliness of heart, but in every point of Christian perfection, our Lord might most forcibly have said, "Learn of me." Matt. 11. 29. And as He had so lately pressed on his disciples the duty of praying, He straightway followed it by the exercise of prayer. "These words spake Jesus, and lifted up his eyes to heaven." Here we have a sign of holy confidence, worthy of the well beloved Son; an attitude of prayer well suited to express the faith and hope and joy of all adopted sons of God. The eyes indicate the direction of the thoughts. And as of the publican praying in the temple, it is recorded as a token of humility, that he "would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven," Luke 18. 13; so here that Christ lifted up his eyes to heaven, we take for a sign of faithfulness and love. And note how little of his prayer was for Himself; how much for his disciples, for his people, and for us! Let us learn the duty of praying largely for each other! Let the ministers of the Gospel learn to pray for the flock. Let the flock learn to intercede in prayer for those that are over them in the Lord.

Father, soon may that hour come when we shall have finished the work which Thou hast given us to do! Prosper the labours of thy ministers, prosper the prayers of thy faithful people! Manifest thy name unto them that shall be thine! Glorify thy Son in us; and make us in Him to glorify Thee!

Christ prayeth in behalf of his apostles.

11 And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are.

12 While I was with them in the world, I kept them in thy name: those that thou gavest me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled.

13 And now come I to thee; and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves.

14 I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

15 I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil.

16 They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.

17 Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth.

18 As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world.

19 And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be || sanctified through the truth.

† Psalm 104. 8.

|| Or, truly sanctified.

§ 342. That we must be sanctified in the world.

It is evident that this portion of our Lord's prayer, as well as a part of what goes before and follows it, refers especially to his chosen apostles. These are they who properly speaking were the men given unto Christ, out of the world, by the Father. See ver. 6. These are they through whose word others would afterwards believe. See ver. 20. These are they whom Christ, whilst He abode on earth, kept in the Father's name, and of whom no one was lost except "the son of perdition." But what a happy company was this! What a singular felicity to be thus chosen as apostles of Jesus Christ, eye witnesses of his works, hearers as well as preachers of his blessed words, and so large partakers of his grace that no one of them was lost but Judas! Oh, that to us also our Lord may grant that we may profit by our excellent opportunities! Oh, that for us also our Lord may intercede, that now whilst we are in the world, and He is here no more, the Father through faith in his name may keep us to be Christ's.

For thus it is He prays for his apostles, first that the Father would keep them in his name, that is to say, give them grace to continue in right faith, to persevere in holy practice; secondly, that they might be one, even as the Father and Son are one. And to this prayer He gives open utterance, on purpose that they might hear it, and hearing might rejoice. For what could be more matter of rejoicing to the apostles, than to hear their Lord thus pray in their behalf? And ought not this to fill us also with joy, if we believe that the Son thus intercedes for us, and that the Father has thus given us also to the Son. Let us believe that we are his, and we shall rejoice to think so. Let us believe that for us these prayers were offered up by Christ, and we shall endeavour, as He desires us, to be all of one mind. And this can only come to pass by our being all of a right mind. For whilst the ways of error are numberless, truth and truth alone is one. It is through the truth that we must be sanctified. It is through the truth that we must be united. For what one point in our being holy is more important, than for us to be of one heart in Christian faith? And how can we be thoroughly of one heart, as long as we are far from being of one mind? Let us remember that either of the two graces will help us to the attainment of the other. Let us out of love seek to make our own faith right, and to make others of the same faith with ourselves. And whilst we labour after unity in the truth, let us labour also to be one in love.

What can be more close than the union here set forth as the pattern for our agreement, "that they may be one, as we are?" What can be more affecting to such of us as strive to walk by faith in Christ, than the thought that we are all in common not of the world, all in common subject to the world's hatred? This surely should incline us the more entirely to exercise love towards each other. Our Lord prays not for his disciples that they should be taken out of the world, but that they should be kept from the evil that is in the world. And ought not this to keep us from all wrangling and strife with each other, as to the things which we should believe in common? But further, this prayer of his may be a guide to us, in our intercourse with those who are to us something like what the heathen world was to the early converts. We cannot help having many near us who care little for the Gospel of our Saviour Christ, who are indifferent to the saving of their souls through his most precious blood, who neglect therefore his commandments, and do despite unto his grace. Is it our duty to abstain from all manner of connexion with neighbours such as these? This would not be the case, if they were altogether aliens from the Christian name. Neither must we so separate from such Christians as have the name and only little of the reality. We must abstain from taking part in their evil doings. We must strive to pray and to be sanctified in the midst of iniquity. Oh, let us then remember that we must be sanctified through the truth, and that God's word is truth. Oh, let us endeavour to understand more and more this precious word of God, revealed to us through Jesus Christ. Oh, let us understand it, if we may, so as to believe and do it; so as to be sanctified, made holy in heart and life, even as He is holy.

Christ prayeth for all believers.

20 Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word;

21 That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me.

22 And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one:

23 I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

24 'Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world.

25 O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee; but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me.

26 And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them.

¹ Ch. 12. 26.

§ 343. How we should pray to be one.

In this passage we see the whole of our Lord's prayer for his apostles extended unto all who should believe on Him through their word; extended therefore unto us. For through their preaching at the first, and through the teaching of those whom they sent, as well as by the word which they set down in writing, through these means it is that we have Christian faith. For us then our Lord put up this prayer; and especially in this part of it, for us He prayed that we all should be one. Oh, let us then hath pray and strive that we may be all of one mind, all of one faith, all of one baptism, all of one church!

The degree of unity here prayed for is as close as can be conceived: "as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." This is no mere agreement in a few general and obvious truths. This is no cold assent in common to things far which we have no great concern. It is a close concord of heart and mind. It is to agree in what we feel most deeply. It is for us to trust in the same merits of Christ for salvation, to hope in the same heaven for our home, to walk by the same rule of faith and practice. And that such unity is here meant, may be further shewn by the object for which our Lord desires it: "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." For what circumstance in the whole aspect of the Christian community gives more scandal to those who are here meant by the world, than our dissensions in religious matters? "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos," 1 Cor. 1. 12, this is the kind of disunion which makes the cause of the Gospel a jest to the scoffer amongst ourselves, a matter of doubt to the heathen abroad. This it is, this diversity of faith and discipline, these jealousies and hearthurnings which come of that diversity; these, and the still more sad diversity between our profession and our practice, this it is that keeps the world lying in ignorance and sin, this that hinders the fulfilment of the divine glory in the dispensation of Jesus Christ.

How can there be in us the love with which the Father loved the Son, if we are indifferent to this union which the Son so earnestly desires? If we take no pains for all to be one, even as far all to be sober, and pure, and just? All, indeed, as far as we can see, will never be so whilst the world lasts. So neither will all be honest, all true, all temperate. But this hinders not our trying to make them so in the one case, it hinders not our trying to be so ourselves; it hinders not, or at least it ought not to hinder, in the one case; neither then ought it to hinder in the other. Let us then labour after such unity as we may conceive to exist between the Father and the Son. Let us labour by subduing every thought and wish to the will of God our Saviour. Let us labour by helping thus to subdue, in others, the wilfulness of man to the truth of Christ. Let us labour for unity in faith; let us labour for unity in love. Let us love as one, even if we cannot believe as one. Let us, as nearly as we can, love as one; and believe more uniformly, that so we may be more united also in love. Let us labour by a more watchful attention to our conduct, in every thing that may help to forward these holy ends. Let us labour by a more earnest utterance of our prayers that we may keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

Grant, Lord, that all we who are called by thy name, all we who are baptized into thy faith, may daily be more and more of one mind, as to what we have to believe and do! Far be from us the heat of party, or the turbulence of sect! Far be from us either the spirit of persecution, or the pride of factious opposition! Far be from us the mad attempt to work, by the wrath of man, the righteousness of God! See James 1. 20. Make us to be one, make us to help others to be one, as Thou, and the Father, and the Holy Ghost, are One; as far from differing in thought, as far from variance in purpose, as far from envy, jealousy, and strife! Make us one in knowledge of the one only truth, one in the faith of the one only God, one in the entire reliance for our salvation on that one only name given unto men whereby they may be saved! See Acts 4. 12. Make us one in the doing what we know, in fulfilling what we believe; one in the loving of God and of our neighbours. Make us one in the holiness of a Christian life, one in the blessedness of a Christian death, and one in the beholding after death that glory, and sharing in that love, which was thine with the Father before the foundation of the world!

Christ is betrayed and taken.

1 When Jesus had spoken these words, ¹ he went forth with his disciples over the brook Cedron, where was a garden, into the which he entered, and his disciples.

2 And Judas also, which betrayed him, knew the place: for Jesus oftentimes resorted thither with his disciples.

3 ² Judas then, having received a band of men and officers from the chief priests and Pharisees, cometh thither with lanterns and torches and weapons.

4 Jesus therefore, knowing all things that should come upon him, went forth, and said unto them, Whom seek ye?

5 They answered him, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus saith unto them I am he. And Judas also, which betrayed him, stood with them.

6 As soon then as he had said unto them, I am he, they went backward, and fell to the ground.

7 Then asked he them again, Whom seek ye? And they said, Jesus of Nazareth.

8 Jesus answered, I have told you that I am he: if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way:

9 That the saying might be fulfilled, which he spake, ³ Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none.

10 Then Simon Peter having a sword drew it, and smote the high priest's servant, and cut off his right ear. The servant's name was Malchus.

11 Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?

12 Then the band and the captain and officers of the Jews took Jesus, and bound him,

13 And led him away to Annas first; for he was father in law to Caiaphas, which was the high priest that same year ||.

14 ⁴ Now Caiaphas was he, which gave counsel to the Jews, that it was expedient that one man should die for the people.

¹ Matt. 26. 36

² Matt. 26. 47.

³ Ch. 17. 12.

|| And Annas sent Christ bound unto Caiaphas the high priest, ver. 24.

⁴ Ch. 11. 50.

§ 344. Patience in adversity.

The place in which our Lord was betrayed was a garden, to which He had been used often to resort with his disciples. It was in a garden that the first Adam fell; by whose fall all became sinners. It was from a garden that the second Adam was led to death; by whose death all are made alive. What is there of all the things which we behold, that may not teach us some lesson of heavenly wisdom; when even an ordinary garden might remind us, both of how Adam fell, and of how Christ has raised us up? The recollection of his kindness experienced in this place, of the discourses which He had here delivered, of the good offices which He had here performed, these might have been enough to make Judas hesitate, ere here at least he would betray his Master. These might have induced the disciples also to remain with Him, instead of going their way and forsaking Him. But in every particular of this sad history, we find wrong aggravated by cruelty, and suffering embittered by neglect. Our Saviour endured for us not only death, but a death under most painful circumstances. Not only was He betrayed by one apostle, and deserted by the rest, but this took place in the very garden, whither He oftentimes resorted with them all.

And yet at this very moment of aggravation, next to yielding up Himself meekly to his enemies, He employed Himself in pleading for the escape of his friends. "Whom seek ye?" He first asks the band that came from the chief priests and Pharisees, as if anxious to prevent their taking any one of his disciples by mistake. And afterwards, when at the words of Him, who spake as never man spake, see ch. 7. 46, they went backward, and fell to the ground, He asked them again, "Whom seek ye?" He told them who He was, and added, "if therefore ye seek me, let these go their way." This St. John tells us was a fulfilment of the saying which He spake, "Of them which thou gavest me have I lost none." Ch. 17. 12. So that this text like many others has two applications, the one to safety in this present world, the other to everlasting salvation. And thus it may well signify to us, that Christ wills not that his disciples should undergo on earth any more of affliction than is good for them; and also that He takes great care for the final salvation of those, to whom it is given of the Father to be believers in Him. If then we believe, let us be assured that Christ would have us to be saved. Let us be aware that if we are hereafter lost, it will be for no lack of love on his part, but only for our fault and folly.

Whilst our Lord was setting this signal example of meekness, patience, and forbearance, Simon Peter gave way to the passion of the moment, and endeavoured to defend his Master with the sword. "The servant's name was Malchus." This seems to be mentioned by way of reference to the miracle which St. Luke tells us was wrought on this occasion; Luke 22. 51; that the reader of this Gospel at the time when it was written, might have better means to inquire into the fact. And this is one among many passages, which shew that St. John, besides other objects in his writing, designed especially to supply certain points of importance, which had been omitted by St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Luke. "Then said Jesus unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the sheath: the cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?" This was the firm purpose to which our Lord had attained by his prayer so earnestly expressed, that the will of his Father might be done. See Matt. 26. 37—46. This should be our resolution, whatever wrongs we meet with, whatever injuries or insults, whatever sorrows or sufferings are heaped upon our heads; not to meet them with revenge, but with forgiveness, not with the violence which would wield the sword, but with the patience which would keep it in the sheath, with the love which delights to drink of any cup that is given by a Father's hand.

Christ is denied of Peter.

15 ¹ And Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple: that disciple was known unto the high priest, and went in with Jesus into the palace of the high priest.

16 But Peter stood at the door without. Then went out that other disciple, which was known unto the high priest, and spake unto her that kept the door, and brought in Peter.

17 Then saith the damsel that kept the door unto Peter, Art not thou also one of this man's disciples? He saith, I am not.

18 And the servants and officers stood there, who had made a fire of coals: for it was cold: and they warmed themselves: and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself.

19 The high priest then asked Jesus of his disciples, and of his doctrine.

20 Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing.

21 Why askest thou me? ask them which heard me, what I have said unto them: behold, they know what I said.

22 And when he had thus spoken, one of the officers which stood by struck Jesus with the palm of his hand, saying, Answerest thou the high priest so?

23 Jesus answered him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil: but if well, why smitest thou me?

24 ² Now Annas had sent him bound unto Cniaphas the high priest.

25 And Simon Peter stood and warmed himself. ³ They said therefore unto him, Art not thou also one of his disciples? He denied it, and said, I am not.

26 One of the servants of the high priest, being his kinsman whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with him?

27 Peter then denied again: and immediately the cock crew.

¹ Matt. 26. 58.

|| Or, with a rod.

² Matt. 26. 57.

³ Matt. 26. 69.

§ 345. Worldly ease.

